THE AMADIS QUESTION

> Y el primero que Maese Nicolas le dio en las manos, fue los quatro de Amadis de Gaula, y dixo el cura : Parece cosa de misterio esta...

> DON QUIXOTE, I, VI.

I. THE HISTORY OF THE QUESTION.

In the Castilian translation of Egidio Colonna's De regimine Principum, made about 1350 by the monk Johan Garcia de Castroxeriz, are found these words : « Ca sus cauallerias cuentan [los malos caualleros] entre las mujeres delos quales dize el poeta Enico que estos cuentan marauillas de Amadis ꝛ de Tristan ꝛ del cauallero Cifar [1]. » Who this poet Enico was and when he lived remains a mystery, but in this citation from him we have the earliest known testimony to a knowledge of the hero Amadis and his prowess[2].

The Cancionero de Baena [3], compiled about the middle of the XX (1886) p. 654, occur these words : « There is a reference to Galaor, brother of Amadis. in the chronicle of Ramon Muntaner (1325-28). » The name Galaor does appear, it is true, in the French translation (by J. A. Buchon, Paris, 1827, t. I, p. 407) and also in the Italian translation (Firenze, 1844), but in the two Catalan editions (Valencia 1558 and the Stuttgart reprint 1844) we find « Galees ne Tristan ne Lancelot » (ed. 1558, fº CXVJ verso) ; Galees for Galaaz it would seem rather than for Gaulois (Perceval) as the German translator (ed. Leipzig, 1842, p. 293, note 2) held.

following century, contains nine references either to the hero Amadis or to other characters who surround him. While there is no way of absolutely determining which is the earliest, we may consider as such the two by Pero Ferrús [1], for in a dezir by Alfonso Alvarez de Villasandino, written in or about 1405 [2], are these lines :

E ya en su tiempo don Pero Feruz Fizo dezires mucho mas polidos [3];

which are significant as indicating not only that Ferrús no longer lived but that as a poet he somewhat antedated Villasandino, who himself was already writing verses in 1374 [4]. One of the poems by Ferrús in this collection was written in 1379 upon the death of Enrique II., and the one in which Amadis is cited [5] is evidently of the same period or later, since in speaking of Enrique II. there he employs the past tense :

Don Enrryque, Rrey de España, Que por esfuerço e seso
Todo el mundo tovo en peso.

In this dezir addressed to Pero Lopez de Ayala, among heroes worthy of emulation are cited :

Rey Artur é Don Galas
Don Lançarote é Tristan
.....
Amadys el muy fermoso las lluvias é las ventyscas que le Dyos dé santo poso.

Already, then, an Amadis romance in three books was known, and two other poets of the Cancionero definitely say that they have read of Amadis and Oriana. The one, Francisco Imperial, in these lines :

Del linage del rey Ban
ley é de muchos señores é otrossy de Tristan que fenesció por amores, de Amadis é Blancaflores [1].

And Ferrand Perez de Guzman, speaking of the impossibility of escaping death, says :

Gynebra é Oriana
é la noble Yseo rreyna, segund que yo estudio é leo en escrituras provadas, non podieron ser libradas d'este mal escuro é ffeo [2].

As to the content of the romance the lines of these early poets in some measure inform us. Pero Ferrús himself speaks not only of Amadis but of Lisuarte the king :

Nunca fué rrey Lysuarte de rriquesas tan bastado [3],

as do also Villasandino :

fasta quel grant Lissuarte me faga rrey [4],

4. Id., I, p. 168.

and Juan Alfonso de Baena :

> Pues juro syn arte > al rey Lysuarte > que luego lo encarte > en pocos renglones [1].

Of the three remaining references two are to Amadis and Oriana, placing them with other lovers famous in history and romance ; the one by Francisco Imperial :

> Todos los amores que ovieron Archiles,
> Paris é Troyolos de las sus señores, > Tristan, Lançarote de las muy gentiles > sus enamoradas, é muy de valores, > él é su muger ayan mayores > que los de Paris é los de Vyana, > é de Amadis é los de Oryana, > é que los de Blancaflor é Flores [2].

and the other by Villasandino :

> Oncas é Apolo, Amadis apres, > Tristan é Galas, Lançarote de Lago [3].

The last is found in one of the dezires of Villasandino, where the allusion is to the ancient page Macandon :

> E pues non tengo otra rrenta, > quise ser con grant rrazon
> el segundo Macandon, > que despues de los ssesenta > començó á correr tormenta, > é fue cavallero armado ;
> mi cuerpo viejo cansado,
> Dios sabe, sy sse contenta [4].

Pero Lopez de Ayala, Chancellor of Castile, in his Rimado de Palacio, composed between 1367 and 1403, confesses among past faults :

> Plogome otrosi oyr muchas vegadas
> Libros de devaneos é mentiras probadas, > Amadis, Lanzalote, é burlas asacadas
> En que perdí mi tiempo á muy malas jornadas [1].

A cantiga by Juan de Dueñas, who flourished in the time of Juan II. of Castile (1406-1454), gives evidence of a knowledge of the tests of the love of our hero :

> Pues pensar bien que dezis
> Mi senyora berdadera, > Que por cierto si yo fuera
> En el tiempo d'Amadis, > Segun bos amo y adoro
> Nuestra fuera la más parte
> De la inssola del Ploro
> .....
> Pues por cierto mis amores
> Non fuera suya tan plana
> De la gentil Oriana
> La capilla de las flores [2].

In Portugal, the Cronica do Conde dom Pedro de Menezes, written by Gomez Eannes de Zurara (or Azurara) between 1458 and 1463 [3], contains these words, which antedate all other known allusions in that country and in which for the first time there is question of the author :

« Estas cousas, diz o Commendador, que primeiramente esta Istoria ajuntou, e escrepveo, vaõ assy escriptas pela mais chaã maneira, que elle põde, ainda que muitas leixou, de que se outros feitos menores, que aquestes poderam fornecer : jaa seja, que muitos

The Cancioneiro Geral, compiled by Garci de Rezende and published in 1516 [2], contains two mentions of Oriana, both to be found in O cuydar & sospirar composed in 1483 by Nuno Pereyra and Jorge da Silueyra [3].

The lines run :

In the latter part of the 15th century Montalvo [1] gave new form to the already existing body of romance and this rifacimento alone has come down to us. The earliest edition in our possession is one of 1508; there has been mention however from time to time of an incunabulum of 1496 [2]. In the absence of this the approximate date of the writing of the prologue can be fixed as between 1492 and 1504, for we find therein evidence that the Conquest of Granada was already an accomplished fact [3] and both Ferdinand and Isabella were still living [4].

The prologue moreover while making no mention of the original author or of the nationality of the romance contains a statement by Montalvo as to his own work and one which conforms with the early mention by Ferrús of an Amadis in three books :

« E yo desseando que de mí alguna sombra de memoria quedasse, no me atreuiendo á poner el mi flaco ingenio en aquello que los mas cuerdos sábios se ocuparon, quísele juntar con estos postrimeros que las cosas mas liuianas y de menor substancia escriuieron, por ser á él, segun su flaqueza, mas conformes, corrigiendo estos tres libros de Amadis, que por falta delos malos escriptores ó componedores muy corruptos y viciosos se leyan, y trasladando y enmendando el libro quarto, con las sergas de Esplandian su hijo, que hasta aqui no es en memoria de ninguno ser visto... »

1. The name Montalvo alone can be given with absolute certainty ; in the edition of Amadis de Gaula, Saragossa, 1508, is found : Garcirodriguez de Montaluo ; in that of Venezia, 1533, and those which follow : Garciordoñez de Montaluo ; and in the edition of Las Sergas de Esplandian, Sevilla, 1542, Garcigutierrez de Montaluo. In all his name is followed by : Regidor de la noble villa de Medina del Campo.

2. See Appendix.

3. « aquella santa conquista, que el nuestro muy esforçado rey hizo del reyno de Granada. »

4. « los nuestros rey y reyna ... tanto mas lo merescen. »

The importance of Montalvo cannot be overemphasized. The conformity of his rifacimento with the earlier form can be judged only by comparison with the lines already cited — there it is absolute — but to what extent amplified must be considered elsewhere.

Nicolas de Herberay, seigneur des Essarts, who translated the Amadis of Montalvo into French [1] during the reign of Francis I. and at his command, claimed for his country the honor of original authorship in his dedication of the first Book to Charles Duc d'Orléans :

« Il est tout certain qu'il fut premier mis en notre langue Françoyse, estant Amadis Gaulois, & non Espagnol. Et qu'ainsi soit, i'en ay trouvé encore quelque reste d'un vieil livre escrit à la main en langage Picard, sur lequel i'estime que les Espagnols ont fait leur traduction, non pas du tout suyvant le vray original comme l'on pourra voir par cestuy : car ils en ont obmis en d'aucuns endroits, & augmenté aux autres. »

João de Barros, Escrevão, in his Antiguidades e cousas notaveis de Entre Douro & Minho e de outras muitas de España e Portugal, composed in 1549, but still unpublished, claims for Porto Vasco Lobeira, saying « e daqui foy natural Vasco Lobeira, q̄ fes os primeros 4 libros de Amadis, obra certo mui subtil & graciosa & aprovada de todos os gallantes, mas comos (sic) estas cousas (sic) se secão em nossas mãos, os Castelhanos lhe mudarão a linguoagem & atribuirão a obra assi (i. e. a si). »

Bernardo Tasso, having accompanied the Prince of Salerno to the court of Spain, built upon the Spanish version his Amadigi di Francia at the instance of noblemen of that court, and while not concerned with attribution of authorship says in a letter written the 4th of May 1558, to Girolamo Ruscelli : « Non è dubbio ... che lo scrittore di questa leggiadra e vaga invenzione l'ha in parte cavata da qualche istoria di Bertagne (sic) e

poi abbellitola e rendutala a quella vaghezza che il mondo cosí diletta [1]. »

In 1598 there was published for the first time the collection of poems of Antonio Ferreira [2], a Portuguese poet and savant, who died in 1569. That the collection had been prepared some years before his death is attested in the dedication to the king, D. Philippe, by his son Miguel Leitão Ferreira, who published it : « Esteue este liuro por espaço de quarẽta annos assi em vida de meu pay, como despois do seu falecimẽto, offerecido por vezes a se imprimer & sem se entẽder a causa, q̃ o impedisse, não ouue effeito. » Among these poems are two sonnets, preceded by the words « na antiga lingoa Portuguesa ». The one beginning « Bom Vasco de Lobeira » has its origin in an episode of the Amadis [3], where the hero's love having been put to the test, we are told that Infante Affonso de Portugal took pity upon the disappointed Briolanja and demanded that a change be made. The other is a purely allegorical one of Briolanja and love.

Under Errata is found this explanation by Miguel Leitão Ferreira : « Os dous Sonetos que vão as fol. 24. fez meu pay na linguagem que se costumaua neste Reyno em tempo del Rey D. Dinis, que he a mesma em que foi composta a historia de Amadis de Gaula por Vasco de Lobeira, natural da cidade do Porto, cujo original anda na casa de Aueiro. Diuulgaraõse em nome do Iffante D. Afonso filho primogenito del Rey D. Dinis, por quã mal este principe recebera (como se ve da mesma historia) ser a fermosa Briolanja, em seus amores tam maltratada. »

In his Dialogos de Medallas, published posthumously in 1587, Antonio Agustino, archbishop of Tarragona, evidences his knowledge of the attribution to Vasco Lobeira :

3. I. cap. XL.

From this time on the attributions of authorship are frequent and range from a Spanish-writing Moor to Santa Teresa [2]. These, since they have had no serious bearing on the history of the question, need be mentioned only in passing. Not so the words of two Spanish-writing Portuguese authors living in the first half of the seventeenth century, who speak of Vasco Lobeira in no uncertain terms. The one, Manuel de Faria e Sousa, says of him that he was « el primero que con gentil habilidad escribio libros de Caballerias » and further : « El Lobeira florescio en tiempo del Rey D. Juan I. que falleció año 1403, de cuya mano fué armado caballero, si ya no es que era otro del mismo nombre. Pero la Escritura de Amadis se tiene por del tiempo deste rey don Juan..... » and again : « El primer libro de cavallerias que se escrivió en Europa fué el Amadis ; i su autor Vasco de Lobeira que algunos dizen fue en tiempo del Rey D. Juan I. que es mucho despues. Pero pudieron ser dos deste nombre [3]. » The second, Antonio Sousa de Macedo, places Lobeira « en tiempo del Rey Don Fernando [4]. »

Jorge Cardoso, in his Agiologio Lusitano (1652), speaking of « o Infãte D. Pedro, filho segundo del Rei D. João o I. & da Rainha D. Felippa » says : « E por seu mandado trasladou de frances em a nossa lingua Pero Lobeira, Tabalião d'Elvas, o liuro de Amadis, que (a parecer de varoẽs doctos) he o melhor que saio á luz de fabulosas historias [1]. » It must be noted that among his authorities Cardoso mentions « Sousa y Macedo nas Flores de Hespanha e finalmente o Doutor João de Barros na Descripção d'entre Douro et Minho em trattado manuscritto » and more than once in the course of his work he mentions the latter.

The Spanish bibliographer Nicolas Antonio in the Bibliotheca Hispana vetus, 1680, says : « Sub Dionysio Portugalliæ Rege, qui exeunte hoc sæculo vivebat, floruisse dicitur Vascus Lobeira Lusitanus, Portuensis, primus auctor, ut fama est, prosaici poëmatis seu fabulosæ historiæ de Amadis de Gaula, à qua ceteræ huiusmodi tamquam surculi prodiere » and after quoting from Ferreira and Antonio Agustino, he adds : « Plura nos de his Amadisii fabulis altera Bibliotecæ parte inter Anonymos [2]. » Referring then to the Bibliotheca Hispana nova we find : « Anonymus, vulgoque ignotus etiam his, qui indagandis hujus & similium auctorum scriptis sedulam operam commodaverunt, (Lusitani tamen nescio quo nomine Vascum Lobeiram auctorem credunt), scripsit propitiis Musis : La Historia de Amadis de Gaula [3]... »

In 1726 the Count of Ericeira, making a report to the Academia Real de Historia Portuguesa on the library of the Count of Vimeiro, comparing it with a catalogue dated 1686, gives as among the books therein indicated but now missing from the library « Os livros que nelle achey mas raros..... Amadis de Gaula em Portugues [4]. » With this mention closes the evidence upon which all discussion of the question rested until 1880 [5].

Through the eighteenth century, when the popularization of the romances was frequent, the question is often mentioned. Gordon Percel in the Bibliothèque des Romans [1] declares Amadis to be the work of an unknown. Quadrio [2] gives a résumé of the different theories, as do later Clément [3], Du Verdier [4] and others. The Portuguese bibliographer, Barbosa Machado, in his Bibliotheca Lusitana (1741-1759), combines what had been given by the already cited Portuguese writers : « Vasco de Lobeira natural da Cidade do Porto, igualmente insigne pelo judicioso talento de que beneficamente o ornou a natureza, como pelos açoens militares com que adquerio fama ao seu nome, sendo armado Cavalleiro pelas reaes mãos de nosso invencivel Monarcha D. João I. ao tempo que estava para dar batalha aos Castelhanos no campo de Aljubarrota com que segurou a sua Corõa. A mayor parte de sua vida assistio na Cidade de Elvas, onde instituio hum morgado que depois veyo aos Abreos de Alcorapenha. Falleceo no anno de 1403. Foy o primeiro que escreveo com ingenhoso artificio livros de Historias fabulosas intituladas Cauallarias das quaes teve muitos seguazes. A principal que escreveo foy : Historia de Amadiz de Gaula dividida en 4 livros..... O original se conservava em Casa dos Excellentissimos Duques de Aveiro. Os Castelhanos a traducirão no seu idioma sem declarar o Author, como forão Garci Gutierres de Montalto (sic) e Garci Gordones de Montalto (sic)..... Celebrão a esta obra grandes Escritores..... » Then after citing João de Barros without marking the close of the citation at the words « os Castelhanos lhe mudaraõ a linguagem e atribuaraõ a obra a si », he continues « mas com tudo naõ falta entre elles quem a

He quotes Mayans y Siscar as saying that Amadis de Gaula was an anagram for « la vida de Gama », quotes Torquato Tasso — and finally says « O Licenciado Jorge Cardoso, ... se enganou dizendo que Vasco de Lobeira a quem intitula Pedro, para em tudo se enganar, traduzira a Historia de Amadiz na lingua Franceza por ordem de Infante D. Pedro filho del Rey D. João I. When in 1779 the comte de Tressan published his Traduction libre d'Amadis de Gaule, he prefaced it with a consideration of the question as to the authorship and origin of the romance. He does not believe in the Portuguese attribution to Vasco Lobeira, and while forced to admit on Herberay's own assertions that his work was a translation from the Spanish, he holds that Herberay's own statement as to the Picard Mss. must be considered and that the Spanish may have earlier translated and augmented these : « en les accomodant au goût de leur Nation ». The manuscript might easily have gone into Spain with the library of Marie de Bourgogne. He further urges the probability

1. Tome III, pp. 775-776. This, as will be evident, might easily lead to the attribution to João de Barros of the following statement as to Antonio Agostino. Through the courtesy of Senhor A. R. Gonçalves Vianna this point is made clear. After giving the title of the Mss. and the words following : « Composta no año de 1549 », he says : « A letra é do seculo XVII e não tem data. A quota é A-6-2, e a classificação moderna deu-lhe o numero 216. A folha 32 lê-se a um terço da lauda o seguinte (giving passage as above cited, ending « a si ») and adds : « E nada mais nos diz a respeito de Lobeira ou do Amadis. »

of French origin upon the ground of resemblance to the Lancelot, Tristan, etc., and of the lack of Spanish characteristics, deeming it moreover improbable that a Spaniard would have chosen his hero « parmi les Princes du sang de France » and finally suggests that he thinks he has seen the Picard Mss. in the Vatican library. With this the discussion as such may be said to have really begun, for the claims made were immediately challenged by Couchu, one of the collaborators in the Bibliothèque universelle des romans, and much interested in the peninsular literature. First expressing his surprise at Tressan's credence in the statement of des Essarts and at his treatment of Vasco Lobeira, « le véritable auteur d'Amadis », he continues : « Je suis dans la persuasion intime qu'il n'y a pas d'autre auteur du premier Amadis que le poète Vasco Lobeira. Ce qui est constant c'est qu'il est regardé par tous les bibliographes espagnols et portugais comme l'inventeur du poème en prose et qu'ils s'accordent à lui donner l'Amadis avec quelques poésies légères conservées dans différents recueils. » He believes Herberay des Essarts to have made his claims as to French authorship for purely patriotic reasons. If the Ms. did exist it was probably a simple translation of the Amadis composed two centuries before in Portugal, which might easily have found its way into the library of Marie de Bourgogne. Lobeira may have known the early story tellers « François et Bretons » and have imitated them, and he makes this categoric statement : « L'autographe de Lobeira subsiste : il est conservé dans la librairie des seigneurs d'Aveiro : les Mss. subsistent : il n'est pas impossible de percer plus à fond dans l'obscurité de ce procès qui peut être terminé en fixant tout simplement les dates des deux ouvrages ..... La réputation de Lobeira fleurissait sous le règne de Denis, sixième roi de Portugal, dont la vie est renfermée entre 1279 et 1328 ... » The choice of a hero of foreign birth he contends to be not only common but especially natural in this period [1].

1. Journal de Paris, mai 1779.

Tressan's reply may be summed up thus : He is not certain as to the Picard Ms. in the Vatican, accepts the statement of Couchu as to the Ms. in the library of the house of Aveiro, holds the analogy of Amadis to Round Table romances to be the main argument in favor of French origin, and maintains the superiority of the first three books which show the imitation [1].

In his Istoria critica e ragionata, published in 1794, Henrion occupies himself at length with the Amadis question and the attributions of authorship to enchanters, Mohammedans, Provençal writers et al. as well as with the theories in regard to Luther's and the devil's part in making the romance known, and himself believes that some early writer having some old historical chronicle at hand has combined fact and fiction.

In histories of literature, in prefaces to translations, in comments upon Don Quixote, and in literary reviews, the discussion continued. But while on inner grounds a reason was discovered for French, Spanish, and Portuguese origin in turn, little was added which influenced the later discussion. Sir Walter Scott in the Edinburgh Review of 1803, reviewing the translations of Amadis by Southey and Rose, combines their conflicting claims for Portugal and France (as set forth in prefaces), by making the author adapt from the French minstrels a tale of their country, considers Amadas as possibly the original of Amadis, which would prove the existence of an early French or Picard history of his exploits, thinks that the testimony of Cardoso as to Pedro Lobeira « proves that there existed even in Portugal some tradition that Amadis had originally been composed in French », and adds : « It is certain that the work was executed under the inspection of an Infant of Portugal [Amadis, I. xli] ..... It seems to us clear from this singular passage that the work upon which Lobeira was busied ..... must necessarily have been a translation more or less free from some ancient authority, since Lobeira would not have willingly violated the character of his hero..... The French or Picard original was probably acquired by Lobeira from some minstrel, attendant upon the numerous Breton or Gascon knights who followed the banners of the Earl of Cambridge or the Duke of Lancaster, for to Britanny or Aquitaine we conceive the original ought to be referred..... enough may safely be ascribed to Lobeira perhaps to entitle him to the name of an original author. »

Ferdinand Wolf in a criticism of the work of Ludwig Clarus, who in his Darstellung der spanischen Literatur had pointed out Spanish elements in Amadis, held that the origin of the Amadis was to be sought, not in Spain but in Portugal, arguing from the stage of development of the Galician-Portuguese Court poetry in the middle of the 14th century, that the Amadis with its lyrical elements might well have developed there [1].

In 1853, Eugène Baret opening his consideration De l'Amadis de Gaule, leaves us in no doubt as to his purpose : « J'espère démontrer que si, par la tradition primitive, l'Amadis de Gaule dérive de la source commune des romans de la Table ronde, si même il a existé une version portugaise, c'est néanmoins à l'Espagne que doit demeurer l'honneur d'avoir créé, sur un thème ancien, une composition originale, en introduisant dans un cadre emprunté la nuance des sentiments, et l'art nouveau qui donnent à notre roman son importance et sa valeur spéciales [2]. » Baret admits the existence of a Portuguese version on the ground of the testimony above mentioned (Azurara et al.), but calls attention to the lack of unanimity on the part of the Portuguese writers, and to lack of proof that a Spanish version may not have preceded this, citing some of the early references in Spanish literature as supporting the theory of the existence of such a version. For him the Infante of Portugal who had pity upon Briolanja is Affonso, natural son of João I., and the change demanded by him is to be dated as near 1390, since at that time (i. e. in his early youth) he would interest himself in such tales. Lobeira must therefore be only a redactor, since also he is the one knighted at Aljubarrota and cannot be the author of the romance known to Pero Lopez de Ayala (born in 1332) in his youth, for he considers that period indicated by the words « en muy malas jornadas ». With Scott he holds that as author Lobeira would not have willingly changed so materially his hero's conduct. The statement of Barbosa that the Portuguese Amadis contained four books while Pero Ferrús mentions three, is to Baret a proof that it was not the Portuguese version to which Ferrús referred, and confirms, moreover, the idea that Montalvo knew the Amadis only in Spanish.

Pascual de Gayangos, four years later, in his Discurso Preliminar to the Libros de Caballerias [1], simply emphasizes the points already made by Barros, giving more instances of the early familiarity with Amadis in Spain, and impugning the Ferreira statement. The Briolanja incident he holds to be a strong proof of a version anterior to that attributed to Lobeira, and his deductions are those of Scott and Baret.

With Theophilo Braga there is no mere acceptance of what the early Portuguese writers had claimed but, in his Formação do Amadis de Gaula, 1873, the working out of a theory as to the evolution of the romance in prose exemplified by the Amadis. He not only accepts but develops the idea of a primitive French or Breton origin; the prose romance, however, he deems to be unquestionably Portuguese not only upon the ground above cited, but upon that of the evidence of knowledge of the romance as shown by the frequency of the name Ourouana in the Portuguese nobiliario and by a « Chacone de Ourouana » to his mind corresponding with an incident in the Amadis. In a recapitulation of sixteen headings he gives his arguments :

1° The redaction anterior to Montalvo and given by him as already antiquated in style and words must have been Portuguese, since only in that language had there been such change.

2° The primitive redaction was Portuguese and written between 1297 and 1325, as is proved by the reference to the Infante D. Affonso de Portugal, who was the son of D. Diniz and in 1325 came to the throne as Affonso IV. This judgement is based upon the character of this prince, the cultivation of letters at the court of D. Diniz, upon the statement of Miguel Leitão Ferreira, and up to a certain point upon that of Azurara.

3° Until 1406 only three books of Amadis were known ; the allusions in the Cancionero de Baena and in the Rimado de Palacio are to be dated as after 1405, which fixes the epoch of the entrance of the romance into Castille.

4° The fourth book was only added in 1492 by Montalvo, but must be considered as having been written in Portugal, because it resembles the French poem Amadas et Ydoine, because Azurara in 1454 cites the Amadis as complete, « o livro », and finally because this fourth book must be the one which Pero Lobeira translated at the command of D. Pedro.

5° The name of Lobeira is found in Vasco Lobeira, armed knight at the battle of Aljubarrota in 1385. The Macandon episode seems an allusion to Lobeira.

6° We have the statement of Azurara, who may have known the romance in the library of D. Affonso V., which might explain its later existence in the house of Aveiro.

7° The citing of Oriana in O cuidar e suspirar, written in 1483, cannot be attributed to a knowledge of the Spanish version of Montalvo.

8° The dedication of a continuation of the Amadis to Dom Jorge, father of the Duque de Aveiro, indicates a knowledge of the existence of Amadis in his house, where it was an inheritance.

9° We have the evidence of João de Barros.

10° Also that of the sonnets by Antonio Ferreira, and his relation to the members of the house of Aveiro accounts for his knowledge of the Portuguese original.

11° The statement of Miguel Leitão Ferreira as to the original, since the writings of Azurara and Barros were not yet published, must indicate a knowledge of the tradition gained from other sources, which proves the extent of the tradition.

12° Nicolas Antonio's statement.

13° Cardoso's statement instead of complicating the matter simplifies it, since thus is explained the writing of the 4th book.

14° et 15° Ericeira reported an Amadis in Portuguese to have existed in 1686 and his note in his Henriqueida later to the effect that Vasco de Lobeira was the author shows that he may have seen this book in the meantime. The earthquake of 1753 put an end to any hope of finding the original.

16° « Portuguezismos » are to be found in the Montalvo Amadis such as « ricos homems » and « homems-bons, saudade », etc.

Ludwig Braunfels following close upon this with his Kritischer Versuch über den Roman Amadis von Gallien, 1876, considered the Portuguese assertions, from that occurring in Zurara's Chronica down, as influenced by a patriotic desire on the part of their originators to vindicate for Portugal the authorship. Zurara's statement he held to be a later incorporation of a note by a Portuguese hand after the question had arisen; as evidence he called attention to the grammatical incoherence of the paragraph in which it is found, to the use of the third person and also to the beginning of the paragraph itself : « Estas cousas, diz o Commendador que primeiramente esta Istoria ajuntou e escrepveo. » The portion relating to the Amadis, beginning « como quer que », indicates desire to lay special stress there and, moreover, at the time fixed by this passage (the reign of D. Fernando between 1367 and 1383), the Amadis was already known in Spain, therefore, even were the portions by Zurara, they would prove nothing. So with the allusion in the Cancioneiro Geral. The discrepancy in the statements by Faria e Sousa and Sousa de Macedo and the confusion in Machado's account renders them valueless, and their source is to be found in the Chronicle of Duarte Nunes do Leão. Further, a man who was dubbed knight in 1385 could not be the author of a romance already known in Spain in 1350. Nicolas Antonio based his remarks upon what the Ferreiras said. Miguel Leitão Ferreira's statements as to the original were undoubtedly mistaken, the existence of a Portuguese manuscript being in no way proved and improbable (no one saying he had seen it); the mention by the Tassos of no other than a Spanish version is, while negative evidence, yet against Portugal. He considers Montalvo's words in his prologue as not at all indicating a translation. The references to the four books, by Barros, Ferreira and Barbosa Machado are all posterior to Montalvo. The sentence found in Montalvo as to the change demanded by the Infante Affonso is not a note, but in the text, and not a proof of Portuguese authorship, but the first cause of the Portuguese pretentions. The Portuguese have no trace of any version; Ericeira does not say that the name of the author was given nor does Ferreira say that the Aveiro manuscript bore the name of the author, or whether it was in three or four books. Montalvo and the Spaniards early mentioning the romance had heard nothing of Lobeira. The name was probably that of some writer and, through a mistake, to him was attributed this work. In the time of the Ferreiras the connection had become fixed. Possibly a Lobeira had had to do with a Portuguese translation, and this, Cardoso's statement would bear out, as would also Antonio Ferreira's poem, but Miguel Ferreira takes him to be the author. The differences in opinion in Portugal show that the tradition was not universally accepted. There may have been an old French original or a translation from the Spanish, and Cardoso knowing of Herberay des Essarts' statements may have thus been confused; the one point of importance is that Cardoso speaks of Lobeira as a translator. Why did the Portuguese never make an attempt to find and produce the book before it was too late? The essential thing was to antedate the Spanish mention, which accounts for the attribution by Faria e Sousa of Ferreira's poem « Bom Vasco Lobeira » to Don Affonso himself. But all this is based upon Montalvo's mention. The Infante may have asked for the change, in a Spanish Amadis or a Portuguese translation, of a translator or some disinterested writer. The Portuguese hold that it must have been asked of the author and this a Portuguese, and their attempts to fit the two together; i.e.a D. Affonso and Vasco Lobeira, follow. In Montalvo's time there must have been copies with the changed text as well as the original; the latter, Montalvo prefers, his text indicates two or three forms of the Briolanja story. The names of places would seem to substantiate Tasso's theory as to the English origin of the story, which may have had its rise in Great Britain, developed in Northern France and through any of numerous channels might have reached Spain. In his criticism of other writers on the subject he takes up Wolf's idea as to the Amadis with its lyrical love element being a natural product of the Portuguese court ideas of the period (a theory which he holds invalidated by inaccuracy in date), and says it might as well hold for Tristan and Isolde.

In a review of Braunfel's Versuch in the Zeitschrift für romanische Philologie, 1877, Ludwig Lemcke deems the Zurara paragraph to be more probably a quotation from an earlier writer, calls attention to the fact that Braunfels had neither proved that the Portuguese had no version of their own nor that Montalvo had early Spanish versions, and asks how it came about that, if Zurara and Ferreira (the latter knowing nothing of the former) based their knowledge simply upon Montalvo, they both had the name Vasco Lobeira. He holds moreover that lack of unanimity in Portugal as to the author may indicate more than one Portuguese version of the Amadis and that the passage referring to the Infante of Portugal was not the basis but simply a support for their claims.

With the publication in 1880 of the Cancioneiro Colocci-Brancuti and the finding therein, attributed to João Lobeira, the song of « Leonoreta fin roseta » which is in Montalvo's Amadis (II, XI), the long struggle to find a Vasco Lobeira early enough and to reconcile this with an Infante Affonso seemed over. To retain the name while giving up the individual was at last possible and the Portuguese advocates felt their claims on a substantial basis.

Mme Carolina Michaëlis de Vasconcellos in the Zeitschrift (IV) of 1880 says of the importance of the song : « Auf einem kleinen aber sprechenden Document für den portugiesischen Ursprung desselben, und was noch mehr ist, für die Urheberschaft eines Lobeira, der unter Dom Diniz und seinem Nachfolger Affonso IV. geblüht hat, wollen wir mit diesen Zeilen hinweisen, » and further says « Eines dieser Lieder ist nämlich ein Bruchstück aus dem Amadis de Gaula ! »

Braga again took up the question, reinforced in all his theories by this unexpected and welcome evidence, and later he expressed himself definitely thus : « No texto da versão hespanhola de Montalvo e no Cancioneiro Colocci-Brancuti estão as provas irrefragaveis da primitiva redacção portuguesa : são a rubrica acerca da emenda do episodio de Briolanja, e a canção de João Lobeira Leonoreta que o traductor castelhano deturpou não conhecendo a forma estrophica [1]. »

Marcelino Menéndez y Pelayo in the Diccionario enciclopédico

1. Introducção á Historia da litt. port., 1899. Cf. pp. 218-247 ; 380-384.

1887, under Amadis de Gaula, argues a priori that the romance could not have originated in Castile in the Middle Ages, that it is the negation of everything distinctly Castilian and therefore evidently a work of foreign importation, its model the Round Table romances. He accepts then the theory of a Galician-Portuguese origin in these words : « En tesis general, parece muy verosimil la opinion que coloca la cuna del Amadis en la region galáico-portuguesa, cuyos poetas dieron carta de naturaleza por primera vez entre nosotros á los nombres de Tristan, de Iseo y de Lanzarote, y cuyos caballeros gustaban á fines del siglo decimocuarto de honrarse y distinguirse con sobrenombres tomados de los libros del ciclo bretón. » He finds untenable the hypothesis of a primitive Amadis having been composed by Vasco de Lobeira since not only the evidence of the early poets, but also that of the history of Amadis having been painted in « sargas » and of the name Amadis having been given to favorite dogs at the beginning of the 15th century in Spain, is against it. No one has ever said that he has seen the Portuguese book, no one has cited the most insignificant phrase, and neither in Portuguese nor in any other language, is known any fragment of the romance before Montalvo. On the other hand the relation of the Amadis to the Arthurian cycle, which must have been more popular in the Galician-Portuguese region than elsewhere in the peninsula; the acquaintance with this cycle in the time of D. Dinis and his troubadours as shown by the Cancioneiros Vaticano and Colocci-Brancuti ; the fact of the existence of the Leonoreta song, « texto gallego », in the Colocci-Brancuti ; the absence of all traditional and historic elements, which is inexplicable if the romance originated in Castile, but on the contrary most natural in Portugal, which was the last of nationalities to take form and coming into existence in historic times lacked the epic basis; and, finally, the very fact of persistence in Portugal of the tradition as to authorship, and the lack of such a tradition in Castile, causes him to suspect that « los portugueses tuvieron mucha mano en la creación de esta rarísima novela. » Vasco de Lobeira could not be its author, since before his time there was a version in three books : he was evidently then a « refundidor », whose work at the end of the fourteenth or beginning of the fifteenth century resembled that of Montalvo later; i. e., he suited to the taste of his time the story already very popular. There may have been an earlier text, either in Portuguese or some other language, in which the episode of Briolanja was changed. But this change did not satisfy Lobeira, who assures us that it is « superfluo y vano ». All elements in Amadis are foreign, neither names nor customs give evidence of Spanish or Portuguese nationality.

In the Geschichte der Portugiesisischen Litteratur (1893, Gröber's Grundriss der romanischen Philologie. II, 2.) by Mme C. Michaëlis de Vasconcellos and Theophilo Braga, there is a clear exposition of the whole Amadis question as seen from a Portuguese point of view, and in the opening paragraph this credo : « Die früheste verlorene Redaktion aber gehört noch dem 13 Jh. an, ist aller Wahrscheinlichkeit nach, das Werk eines portugiesischen Troubadours und ursprünglich in portugiesischer Sprache geschrieben. » It seems not useless to take up the points briefly even though it necessarily involves repetition.

1st. In Spain, according to Montalvo and others, was known an Amadis in three books, and the evidences are that this was known as early as 1359. No mention is made of the author.

2nd. In Portugal, on the contrary, from the time that there is any proof of an acquaintance with the Amadis, a Lobeira is mentioned.

3rd. That this Lobeira theory, has a real basis is certain since 1880, i. e. since the publication of the Colocci-Brancuti Ms.

4th. Unless there be counter-proof we must take it that the change desired by the Infante Affonso was demanded of the author himself, was attached to the existing text as a note and later combined with the text.

5th. The authenticated document showing us João Lobeira in relations with Affonso, son of Affonso III. and brother of Dom Diniz, indicates that it is this prince who should be taken as inspirer of the change (change probably demanded before 1304, as he then left Portugal for the Court of Castile).

6th. The question then as to the coming of the Portuguese romance into the Castilian Court is easily answered : this same Infante D. Affonso de Portugal, who was married to the sister of Don Juan Manuel, would have taken the book with him into Spain.

7th. Then how the Spanish could have already had imitations of Amadis in the 14th century is no longer a cause for astonishment. And there being no mention in Montalvo's text of the Portugese original is explained by the probability that long before it had been put into Spanish (the inner grounds, the sentiment, speak for Portuguese origin).

8th. Where is the original ? Ferreira said in the house of Aveiro, Ericeira found that an « Amadis en portugues » had been in the library of the Count of Vimeiro. That after Montalvo the Amadis should have been left in its newest form was but natural. « Die alte war für das immer weiter werdende Lesepublikum ungeniessbar geworden. Sie ging verloren — oder sie ruht noch irgendwo, unerkannt ».

9th. The lack of unity on the part of the Portuguese writers as to first name, condition, birth-place and period of Lobeira is of little moment. That the name of Lobeira should have come down to us from 1258 is not little. Whether the warrior Vasco Lobeira worked over the romance written by his forefather and extended it into four books, or whether the name of João was replaced by that of the known Vasco cannot be decided. And finally, in a period in which Breton lays were put into Portuguese, when the French prose romances of Joseph of Arimathia, Merlin, Arthur, Tristan, Lancelot, and the Grail were translated, would it be strange that one of the Troubadours should have had the idea of composing on these models a Romance itself corresponding to a certain lost English-French poetical-prose Amadis? João Lobeira may have translated some of these romances and thus exercised his pen.

Gottfried Baist, also in the Grundriss II. 2., urged that an especially early acquaintance in Portugal with the « matière de Bretagne » does not necessarily follow from the so called « lais » of the Cancioneiro Vaticano, but that they are simple translations of the lyric insertions in the French Tristan, and possibly made from those by a Castilian translator, since their content demanded the language of the court lyric. Since the Tristan known to the Archipreste de Hita is undoubtedly Castilian, the contemporary references in Portugal may be to this, and he adds « Die Kastilier pflegen Erzählung und Prosa, die Portugiesen die Lyrik, sie übersetzen Kastilische Prosa. Das Umgekehrte kann auch vorkommen, muss aber dann bewiesen werden ». As to the Leonoreta song and incident Baist holds it to be an insertion, since it looks back to an unrecounted preliminary knowledge or forward to where Leonoreta is used for the continuation. Further, that this idea is strengthened by the fact that the only other lyric in Amadis « sonst ganz gleichartig » cannot be Portuguese, having a form first familiar to the later court poetry and lacking in Portugal. And finally he holds that these pretentions stand in direct time contradiction to what is known of Portuguese poetry and would further necessitate a Portuguese Prose Lancelot and prose Tristan in 1250. « Der Amadis bleibt jener Litteraturentwicklung in der er zuerst bezeugt ist und in die er am besten hinein passt, der kastilischen. » Montalvo may have made use however of the Portuguese version for his fourth book, and to that version also may refer the mention of the change desired by the Infante Alfonso.

Returning to the charge in her article on the « Lais de Bretanha [1] », Mme C. M. de V. considers the opinions of Baist, 1. Revista Lusitana, 1900. Later incorporated in the Cancioneiro de Ayuda. Halle, 1904, with slight changes.

holds that « espiritos avançados influenciados pelo contacto directo com auctores franceses, ja quiseram preparar prematuramente, no fim dos reinados do Bolanhes e do Sabio, o advento da nova idade », believes it quite possible that there were early peninsular translations of Tristan and that the placing the Amadis of Lobeira, as she does, in the last quarter of the 13th century, forces the placing of a peninsular Tristan in the reigns of Affonso III and Alfonso X. The existence however of a Castilian Tristan before 1343 and of an Amadis in the time of Ayala does not prove the non-existence of an anterior Galician-Portuguese Tristan and Amadis, and she adds : « Quanto á intercalação de poesias portuguesas em prosa castelhana faltam por ora exemplos que attestem esse costume. A escolha da poesia de Lobeira implicaria de resto a creação total da figura de Leonoreta. » « Se as apparenças não mentem, a cantiga que graciosamente principia com o refram : Leonoreta, fin roseta (etc.) foi ideada como intermezzo lyrico da primeira e principal imitação peninsular das novellas de Tristan, Lancelot e Graal. Dirigendo-a ostensivamente a pequenina irman da amada segunda o systema tantas vezes recommendado pelos trovadores, Amadis falla no texto sub rosa con Oriana, a sempar, que amava a furto. Infelizmente o C. C.-B. carece de rubrica explicativa que pouco mas ou menos diria o seguinte : Este laiz fez Amadis á Infanta Leonoreta filha do rei Lisuarte da Gran Bretanha, quando por mandado de Oriana, ella lhe pediu que a servisse... O episodio é muito secondario (no Amadis de Montalvo). Mas por ventura teria maior desenvolvimiento na redacção primitiva cuja perda obriga a tantas conjecturas e discussões [1] ».

In 1905 Braga, having been furnished new documentary evidence of the existence of a João and a Vasco Lobeira,

1. Lais de Bretanha, p. 26. In the Cancioneiro de Ayuda, p. 512, this has been changed to read « nem se vê por que motivo teria tido major desenvolvimento ».

published in O Seculo of the 27th of March, an article entitled Vasco de Lobeira e o Amadis. After taking up the theories of Baist in the Grundriss, and of Madame Michaëlis in the Cancioneiro de Ayuda, he considers the attempts made by Madame Michaëlis to conciliate « as datas anachronicas do supposto João Lobeira com o Lai,... e de aproximar a data do Lai lyrico de João Lobeira da data da elaboração da Novella de Amadis », as well as the attempts of Baist to prove quite opposite theories, as receiving a new light in documents proving the existence of a João Lobeira, who is father of a Vasco de Lobeira (sic), and whose will, dating from 1386, indicates the writing of the lyrics in the very period of the prose romances. The documents of such importance were found in Elvas and communicated to Braga by Antonio Thomaz Pires. In one, mention is made of a merchant in the town of Elvas, by the name of João de Lobeira, who made a will in 1386, and in which, arranging for the administration of certain money, he stipulated that his wife should be administratrix unless she remarried (in which case it was to be transferred to his eldest son). His widow did marry a Castilian knight and the eldest son Vasco de Lobeira came into the administration of the property. Pires questions as to whether Vasco de Lobeira may not have composed the Amadis in Spanish, or, if in Portuguese, then himself have translated it into Spanish, since his step-father was Spanish and he may have passed much time near his mother and step-father, and asks whether this merchant could be the troubadour. Pires found also a copy of the will in question, in the Archives of Elvas preserved at Portalegre, and published the documents. Braga points out that both Barbosa Machado and Cardoso had associated the Lobeira with Elvas, and holds that these documents refer indubitably to the novelist and his father. That also the documents show that the Morgado, lost to Vasco de Lobeira's son, came in 1427 into the possession of Martim de Abreu which further substantiates Barbosa Machado's statement. Further, these documents prove that the João Lobeira shown by other documents to have been living in 1258, 1272 and 1321, was not the poet of the Leonoreta Lai, whose imitation of the Breton Lais indicates a later period. The bourgeois pride of Vasco may be indicated by his being armed knight only after passing the age of sixty, as was Macandon. The period of the death of Vasco de Lobeira given as 1403 by Machado seems confirmed also. It is after 1404 that the Amadis is mentioned by the poets of the Cancionero de Baena and by Pedro Lopez de Ayala, it was probably known to them in a Spanish version made upon the Portuguese text and joined with a fourth book, not in the plan, which had only three. The discovery of Antonio Thomaz Pires gives a decisive response to the objections of Baist, furnishing dates which fix the period in which João de Lobeira and Vasco de Lobeira followed the current of taste for the Breton romances, realizing a complete evolution of the lyric lai into the narrative and its evolution into the Romance prose. And since the lyric lays of Tristan are in the Cancioneiro Colocci-Brancuti in Portuguese, it is plausible that the leaf of the Tristan romance in Spanish may be a result of a Portuguese initiative, hypothesis which Vasco de Lobeira's relations with Spanish knights through family ties might justify. Braga closes by saying that it is certain that his whole work Formação do Amadis de Gaula will be remodelled upon the basis of this discovery.

Again, in his Introducción to Orígenes de la Novela, published in 1905 [1], Menéndez y Pelayo considers at length the Amadis question, enlarging upon what he had said earlier and in some instances going farther [2]. The Briolanja incident, while in no sense proving the Portuguese origin, does prove : 1° that Amadis was known in Portugal at the beginning of the 14th century (since the Infante in question must be the one who was later Affonso IV. [1]); 2° that already it was changed in an essential point which argues the existence of an earlier text, and, 3° that the « antiguos originales » were at least three in number (as Braunfels had argued). He further believes that the author of the Amadis version of the time of D. Diniz is probably the « Juan Lobeira miles » of whom we have poems composed between 1258 and 1286. In any event the song is his which is in the Amadis, and his name explains the attribution of the work to Vasco and to Pedro. Probably there were versions in Portuguese and Castilian, since Montalvo does not say that he translated, but corrected, the three books. The Azurara tradition merits little attention, since Amadis is anterior to the time of D. Fernando, during whose reign Vasco lived. The fourth book is probably Montalvo's own invention.

After passing thus in survey, without comment, the whole history of the Amadis question, it is now possible and essential to consider what advance has been made, what point reached, as the result of this long discussion. Down the line the advocates have in some measure answered or replaced each other and, as has been evident from the later discussions, there are certain points upon which there is practical unanimity of opinion to-day and which require therefore only restating.

1. « El infante de quien se trata no puede ser otro (y en esto conviene todo el mundo) que don Alfonso IV. » It will be noted that he seems unaware of his divergence on this point from Mme C. M. de V. whom in other places he quotes and upon whose arguments he largely rests his. Mr. Fitzmaurice-Kelly, in his review of the work in question (cf. Modern Language Notes, XXII, pp. 14-19, January 1907) touches upon some of the same points as are considered in these notes and in the second part of this dissertation. As these already formed part of my work when Mr. Fitzmaurice-Kelly's article appeared, I content myself with calling attention to the fact.

1. For Spain.

The priority in Spain of allusions to the hero and his group and to the Amadis in three books, the earliest of these antedating by a century any known mention in any other country. The existence in Spanish of the only form in which the romance in known, and one which accords, as to content, with all the early references, and whose prologue mentions three books.

2. For Portugal.

The priority in Portugal of attribution of authorship, which attribution, alone out of the many made, has persisted. The existence in Montalvo's rifacimento of a statement as to an Infante Affonso of Portugal having demanded a change in the story. The existence, also in the rifacimento, of a little song, a Portuguese version of which exists in the Cancioneiro Colocci-Brancuti, where it is attributed to a João Lobeira.

3. For France.

A certain relation of the content of the Amadis to early French romances.

Coming then to the points not resting purely upon evidence in our possession, and yet nearly as universally accepted, the first to present itself is that of « los antiguos originales » of Montalvo. In what language were they? That the early familiarity with the history of the hero Amadis, as shown by the poets from the unknown Enico down through Juan de Dueñas, points to the existence of a Spanish Amadis, is unquestionable, and Montalvo's own words are generally conceded to indicate Spanish texts. Any other interpretation, as Braunfels, Menéndez y Pelayo, and others have argued, is impossible, if one accepts Montalvo's prologue, and this point seems to have been at last yielded even by Braga, who finds that the Amadis might well have been translated from Portuguese to Spanish at a sufficiently early date to account for its existence there before the time of the poets of the Cancionero de Baena. With this the consideration of the Spanish claims may be closed, if we exclude the various theories based upon internal evidence, which are to be elsewhere treated.

But even though there has been a general acceptance of the early date at which Amadis was known in Spain, this has never been considered to be a proof of primitive Spanish origin by any of the advocates of Portuguese claims. Their aim has ever been, as Braunfels pointed out, to antedate the Spanish allusions. And, lacking all early poetical or other mentions, the whole argument rests of necessity upon statements made at a comparatively late period. We speak of the Lobeira attributions, and these, with the arguments based upon them, demand careful consideration.

Braga, believing that he has conclusively proved the earliest Spanish references to date only from the beginning of the 15th century, has, after long wavering, finally contented himself with placing João Lobeira, the author of the Leonoreta song, and Vasco Lobeira, author of the romance, in the latter part of the 14th century. What effect the knowledge of the passage in the Regimiento de los Principes may have upon his arguments it will be interesting to see. With his characteristic openness of mind and adaptability he will doubtless return to his early theory as to Affonso IV, after having completely failed to mention that prince or any other in his latest treatment of the subject.

Madame Michaëlis, accepting the early Spanish references as indicative of a knowledge of Amadis in Spain during the fourteenth century, is in the necessity of carrying her Lobeira and Infante Affonso back to the end of the thirteenth or beginning of the 14th century, which she has done without difficulty, finding documentary evidence of the existence of a João Lobeira in the 13th century and more than this, finding him associated with a D. Affonso.

It will be remembered that in the opening of her consideration was this brief and categoric statement : The earliest lost redaction belongs to the 13th century, is, in all probability, the work of a Portuguese troubadour and originally written in Portuguese. Upon what grounds then is this statement based? While in Spain, although the Amadis in three books was early known, the author is never mentioned, in Portugal the first mention (at least a hundred years later) is coupled with a statement that Lobeira is the author. What the value is of such a statement as to authorship and the priority of possession of a romance, any student used to dealing with attributions of authorship may well judge. But, she continues, since the publication of the Colocci-Brancuti manuscript this Lobeira theory has a real basis. The Leonoreta song of Montalvo's version of Amadis is there (in the Cancioneiro C.-B.) found attributed to a Lobeira, and she questions with seeming confidence in the response : « Welches ist die natürlichere Folgerung : dass Lobeira die Romangestalt und die Erlebnisse der kleinen Leonore, und also den echten, alten portugiesischen Amadis geschaffen hat? Oder dass ein anderer erst später auf das Liedchen hin, die betreffenden Szenen erfand und dem Amadis einfügte. » One not knowing well the rare appearances of the little Leonoreta — the first being in the second book at the moment of singing with her maidens the song in question — and not realizing the meagre part she plays, upon hearing Braga and Mme C. M. de V. and latterly Menéndez y Pelayo [1] upon this point, might deem the whole romance to be affected by it. A brief consideration of Leonoreta's appearances might aid in the answering of the above cited questions.

1. Cf. op. cit., p. CCXII. « Esta cancion o villancico, como la llama Montalvo, no constituye por si sola un argumento decisivo é irrefutable en pro del origen portugues del Amadis, pero es indicio de mucha fuerza. El nombre del autor Juan Lobeira nos pone sobre la pista de las confusas atribuciones que más adelante se hicieron del Amadis á personas del mismo apellido. No puede sospecharse interpolación, tanto porque los versos vienen traidos por la acción de la novela, cuanto por el olvido profundo en que yacía en tiempo de Montalvo la vetusta escuela de los trovadores gallegos y portugueses ».

The song and the personage seem so far from being an intrinsic part of the Amadis that the unheralded appearance of the little Leonoreta and her maidens startles one, and, however truly in accordance with the counsels of the troubadours and in its place as a lyric intermezzo in an imitation of the prose Tristan, is — let me say « in lack of counter proof » — an insertion. The two versions — that of the C. C.-B. and that of the Montalvo Amadis, can be easily confronted. The last Castilian strophe so little commented upon, merits our attention. Mme C. M. de V., it is true, did touch upon it in the Zeitschrift, and I quote her words : « Dass die letzte Strophe (aun que mi queja parece) zu dem eigentlichen Liede in gar keiner Beziehung steht, weder was die äussere metrische Form, noch was den Inhalt anbetrifft, und dass sie entweder später aus sachlichen Gründen hinzugedichtet ward, oder nur irrthümlich hier ihren Platz gefunden, ist wohl augenscheinlich [1]. » It is, it is true, neither in form nor in content one with the song by Lobeira, and this the words « später aus sachlichen Gründen hinzugedichtet ward » explain — had but the logical conclusion followed. In the preceding strophe the words are :

« De todas las que yo veo
No deseo Servir otra sino a vos ; »

in the one in question we find song of this nature, to make it suit the demands of the history. In the absence of the explanatory rubric which, if it were found in the Canc. C.-B., would say approximately : « This song Amadis made for the Infanta Leonoreta, daughter of king Lisuarte of Great Britain, when by the command of Oriana she asked that he serve her », we must hold that to deduce from this a definite proof of Lobeira as author of Amadis is impossible [1]. We can, however, admit with Mme C. M. de V. that the Lobeira attribution may in any case be explained. Once the song ascribed to Lobeira was found in the romance, by extension, or through misunderstanding, or owing to an early finding of the poem and the making of the same deduction as that of to-day, the whole romance may have been ascribed to him. This possibility of turning every point to serve the opposite side is characteristic of the question.

The long mooted question as to whether the change demanded in favor of Briolanja was asked of the author himself, Mme C. M. de V. answers to the effect that unless there be counter proof we must take it that the change was demanded of the author, was attached to the existing text as a note, and later combined with it. Why ? Because there is an authenticated document showing us a João Lobeira in relation with an Infante Affonso, and this indicates that it is he, this Infante, who should be taken as inspirer of the change. Indicates it — to one who has a Lobeira authorship to prove. And this change being made, off goes the infante gaily to the court of Spain, there to introduce his hero, and, being related by marriage to Don Juan Manuel (who, let us say, since Mme C. M. de V. does not, « unfortunately » never mentions Amadis), he finds himself in a circle where the romance is doubtless speedily welcome, and in consequence we have soon both translations and mentions.

Would it be strange, she continues, that one of the Troubadours who had exercised his pen translating the romances of Joseph of Arimathea, Merlin, Arthur, Tristan, Lancelot and the Grail (and now we understand why there must have been translations at this period, and not simply a knowledge on the part of the Troubadours and those for whom they sang and recounted), would it be strange that this Troubadour should have had the idea of composing on these models a romance itself corresponding to one lost — and who this Troubadour — who indeed but João Lobeira himself?

We hold with Mme C. M. de V. that it is unfortunate that the rubric, which would have settled for us without doubt the authorship of Amadis, is wanting, just as we admit with Braunfels, that the earthquake of Lisbon proved a convenient way of explaining the absence of the Portuguese manuscript (although such disappearances have been known even in the absence of so grave a cause). We interest ourselves in the tracing of a family tree to find on which member the laurel should be placed. But this might continue indefinitely.

Yet however far we may be from accepting as conclusive the arguments given, however clear it seems that the advocates have been unable to hold themselves free from the influence of long existing but unproved theories, the fact remains that there is an unexplained Lobeira tradition.

Whether the statement found in the Chronica de Dom Pedro de Menezes originated with Azurara or was quoted from an earlier writer or, as Braunfels believed, inserted by a later hand, could only be definitely determined had we two manuscripts not known to exist : 1st, the work of the « Comendador » who preceded Azurara, and 2nd, the original manuscript of the Chronica. As it stands, the paragraph seems, as Lemcke pointed out, to be actually a quotation from an earlier historian, Fernan Lopez or another. Yet even accepting it as incomplete conformity with the remainder of the Chronica, as Mme Michaëlis has satisfactorily shown, a question remains : after the simple mention of « os primeiros feitos de Ingraterra, que se chamava Gram Bretanha, e assy o Livro d'Amadis » or beginning with this last phrase « e assy » etc., may there not have been added by Zurara, or another later, the words : « como quer que soomente este fosse feito a prazer de hum homem, que se chamava Vasco Lobeira em tempo d'El Rey Dom Fernando, sendo toda-las cousas do dito Livro fingidas do Autor ? » The real authorship of this sentence matters little — the name Lobeira remains. A Vasco Lobeira was mentioned in the Chronica de D. Joam I. by Fernan Lopez, Azurara's predecessor as having been at the battle of Aljubarrota in 1383. This chronicle was known to Azurara, who continued it, and may have been to whosoever was responsible for the statement. But how did this name become connected with the romance ? Possibly, as has been suggested, the song which is found in Montalvo's version existed in some early version, presumably Portuguese, and was also known through the Cancioneiro as the work of João Lobeira, and through this the romance came to be attributed to a Lobeira and the name Vasco, given by the historians, may have been substituted for João. Possibly a Vasco Lobeira did have to do with some revision of the romance or a Pedro Lobeira translate it or some portion of it. Or, finally, the whole attribution may have had the simplest and most natural of origins : there may have existed a manuscript of the romance giving the name of a Lobeira as author, translator or reviser. Once the statement in Zurara exists, Barros, as historiographer of the king, may easily have had access to the Chronicle, and so may others. Or the tradition may have been in his time current, since his contemporaries Ferreira in Portugal, and Antonio Agustino in Spain, are familiar with it. That Barros knew also either the Castilian rifacimento of Montalvo or Herberay's translation of it is evidenced by his words as to the first four books, and seemingly also by what he says of the Castilians having claimed it.

That Ferreira moreover may have known, through the rifacimento, of the demand made by the Infante de Portugal is possible but in no way certain, since that there existed prior to Montalvo both Portuguese and Spanish versions of the romance can hardly be questioned. The whole history of the Portuguese claim points undoubtedly to such a possession, and for the Spanish as we have seen, the evidence seems absolute. What, if any, their interdependence may have been we cannot judge, but in any one of them Ferreira may have known the glose in question.

The retaining by Cardoso of the name Lobeira is puzzling. Whether through carelessness in speaking of the command of D. Pedro, in the same sentence he excharged Pedro for Vasco, or with definite intent, it is impossible to say ; the words « tabelião d'Elvas » would seem to indicate some definite source of information, and the fact that he knew, and frequently cites, João de Barros and Sousa de Macedo, seems an evidence that he was not ignorant of the Vasco tradition. The idea of the translation from the French might be explained by his knowledge of Herberay des Essarts claims. All this can be but pure speculation.

The Infante Affonso of Portugal who, owing to the number of that name whom Portugal has furnished, obligingly fits any theory and finds a Lobeira to keep him company, still remains undetermined, and it must be said that not even the definite fixing of Lobeira will necessarily prove which prince it was who thus interested himself in Briolanja, for the association of the two is neither indicated in our version of the story nor proved by Ferreira's poem.

Finally, then, as to the primitive Amadis, whether French, Spanish or Portuguese, we have no sufficient evidence upon which to form a judgment. Of all the theories we can say simply this : that any one of them may be proved — perhaps — but every one of them remains to be proved, and that with the evidence now at our disposal is impossible.

It has been seen, in the consideration of the history of the question, that, however great the diversity of opinion as to the nationality and authorship of the Amadis, a certain relation to early French romances has long been generally admitted [1]. Many have spoken of comparisons to be made, some few have indicated scattered incidents as taken directly from one or another of the earlier tales, but there has not been the detailed confronting of incidents which alone can render clear to what point the dependance is carried and so furnish a basis for any conclusions as to the romance itself. This comparison then must precede all other consideration.

The French romances so often mentioned are, briefly, those of the Arthurian cycle including the Tristan. Shadowy likenesses to varied romans d'aventure may be passed over with but a word. Aside from these attention has often been called to resemblances between the Amadis and the French poem Amadas et Ydoine [2], and also to similarities both in incidents and terms of combat to be found in the Amadis and La Gran Conquista de Ultramar [3]. To these I would add what seems to me to furnish the definite source of two of the minor incidents: La Vita Nuova.

Once the comparisons are made, and such conclusions drawn as then seem justified, questions will present themselves as to the primitive Amadis. Was it other than a skilfully welded imitation romance? Was there a primitive tradition? Did a poem antedate the romance or did it spring forth full-fledged from the brain of one who knew the older tales by heart ? What was the Amadis in three books ? What the portion original with Montalvo ?

These questions stated, we may immediately proceed to our comparative study of the romance and the sources already named, which we shall take up as follows : 1° Definite references to other romances, geographical placing, and the names of places and persons. 2° Episodes following closely the order of the romance and making the divisions those of the work itself.

II. Time and Place.

« No muchos años despues dela passion de nuestro redemptor Jesu Cristo fue vn rey cristiano en la pequeña Bretaña. »

Such are the opening words of Amadis de Gaula and they instantly recall to one's mind those of the Tristan in prose :

« Apres la passion de Jesu Crist avint que Joseph de Baramachie vint en la Grant Bretaigne. »

We may have here a chance similarity but it is clear that the author of one as of the other knew well the legendary history of Joseph of Arimathea and his followers, and in our romance at various times and with evident purpose the early date of the action is emphasized by comparison with the other tales. In these comparisons alone, it may here be noted, are found open references to the Round Table romances [1].

Amadis I. 1, « esta tan cruel costumbre y pésima duró hasta la venida del muy virtuoso rey Artur que fue el mejor rey de los que alli reinaron y la revocó al tiempo que mató en batalla delante de las puertas de Paris á Floyan ; pero muchos reyes reinaron entre él y el rey Lisuarte que esta ley sostuvieron. »

Amadis I. ch. IV. « y fue el mejor rey que ende hubo, ni que mejor mantuviese la caballeria en su derecho, hasta que el rey Artur reinó, que pasó á todos los reyes de bondad que antes de el fueron, aunque muchos rejnaron entre el uno y el otro.

Amadis I. ch. x. « Miémbrate, Rey, que te dixo vna donzella que quando cobrasses tu pérdida, perderia el señorio de Yrlanda su flor; y cata si dixo verdad, que cobraste este fijo que perdido tenias y murió aquel esforçado rey Abies que la flor de Yrlanda era ; y ahun mas te digo que la nunca cobrará por señor que ay haya, hasta que venga el buen hermano de la señora que hará ay venir soberuiosamente por fuerça de armas párias de otra tierra, y este morirá por mano de aquel que será muerto por la cosa del mundo que el mas amará. Este fué Morlote de Yrlanda, hermano de la reyna de Yrlanda, aquel que mató Tristan de Leonis sobre las párias que al rey Mares de Cornualla, su tio, demandaua ; y Tristan murió despues por causa de la reyna Yseo, que era la cosa del mundo que el mas amaua. »

IV. cxxviij. « vieron la insola dela Torre Bermeja, de que mucho plazer houieron... special aquella Bermeja... y en algunas hystorias se lee que enel comiençó dela poblacion de aquella insola y el primer fundador dela torre, y de todo lo mas de aquel gran alcaçar, que fué Josefo el fijo de Josep Abarimatia que el santo Grial traxo ala Gran Bretaña ; y porque ala sazon todo lo mas de aquella tierra era de paganos, que veyendo la disposicion de aquella insola, la pobló de cristianos, y hizo aquella gran torre, donde se reparauan el y todos los suyos quando en alguna gran priessa se veyan. »

IV. cxxix. « porque sepays que deste Brauor... nasció vn hijo que ouo nombre Galeote... Este Galeote fué daquella insola despues dela vida de Brauor, su padre... assi que vinieron sucediendo vnos empos de otros señoreando, siempre aquella insola tantos tiempos hasta que dellos descendió aquel valiente y esforçado don Segurádes, primo cormano del cauallero anciano que ala corte del rey Artur vino hauiendo ciento veynte años, y los cuarenta postrimeros que auia por su gran edad dexado las armas y sin lança derribó á todos los caualleros de gran nombradia que ala sazon enla corte se hallaron. Pues este Segurades fué en tiempo del rey Uter Pandragon padre del rey Artur y señor dela Gran Bretaña, y este dexó vn hijo y señor de aquella insola a Brauor el Brun, que por ser demasiado brauo le pusieron aquel nombre, que enel lenguaje de entonces por brauo dezian brun. A este Brauor mató Tristan de Leonis en batalla enla misma insola, donde la fortuna dela mar echo ael y a Yseo la brunda, hija del rey Languines de Yrlanda, y á toda su compaña, trayendola para ser muger del rey Mares de Cornualla, su tio, y deste Brauor el Brun quedó aquel gran principe muy esforçado Galeote el Brun, señor de las Luengas insolas, gran amigo de don Lançarote del Lago ; assi que, por aqui podeys saber si aueys leydo ó leyérdes el libro de don Tristan y de Lançarote, donde se faze mencion destos Brunes de donde vino el fundamiento de su linaje. »

It will be noticed then that in these allusions, with the exception of the reference to the Santo Grial, which must antedate our romance since it was through Joseph of Arimathea that all this land had been christianized, all are so worded as to show that this history precedes those of the Arthurian cycle, that these kings, as Lisuarte, lived and reigned long before, and that to the court of Uterpendragon came a far-off lineal descendant of one of these personnages. In brief, then, the whole purpose of these references might be to prove its priority — a common trick of the time, if trick it should be called — and perhaps also to give to readers a pleasant sense of familiarity with place and customs.

Throughout nearly the whole history the scene is that already known; it is but rarely that we need even question who has traced for the personnages their itinerary.

« En la pequeña Bretaña » begins our story. To the court of Garintir, its king, there comes a knight unattended and on horseback, who proves to be « el rey de Gaula. » So much of the placing might have been gained from the opening paragraph of Lancelot alone « En la marche de Gaule et de la petite Bretagne. » That Perion the king of Gaula should come from distant lands « de lejas tierras » might be taken to indicate that these countries were not close neighbors, but this seeming contradiction is easily explained by Perion's long journeys in search of adventure, elsewhere described. And thus accounting for it, the natural conclusion would be that by Gaula is meant France. This however has been a much disputed point [1], and the reason can be made clear only by examining all allusions to « Gaula. » For this as well as for a clear understanding of the whole geographical placing of our story, to indicate briefly the journeys and oft changing scene becomes indispensable. That a clear geographical knowledge should there be shown no one familiar with the earlier romances would expect, and therefore one must proceed with caution in drawing any inferences whatever.

1. Cf. Dunlop II, pp. 9. s ; Baret, p. 101 ; Gayangos, Discurso preliminar. The two most recent considerations of the subject (Menéndez y Pelayo's and Maximillian Pfeiffer's) state that Gaula is Wales.

I. Introduction. — La pequeña Bretaña, scene near and in a town called Alima. Hither comes Perion de Gaula.

Cap i. Perion departing on horseback takes the direct way to his kingdom; « se puso en camino derecho de su reino. »

Palace of Garintir (in Alima) is built in part over a river and the sea is not more than a half league distant. On this sea comes a bark in which a Scottish knight is returning from la pequeña Bretaña to Scotland and he lands in a town of Scotland called Antilia.

Cap. ii. Perion having arrived in his kingdom (Gaula) sends for his wise men, among them are Ungan el Picardo (var. Argan) and Alberto de Campaña.

Cap. iii. Perion, returning to la pequeña Bretaña takes again « el derecho camino », finds Elisena in a town called Acarte, and takes her back to Gaula.

Thus far, it may be noted, no mention has been made of any boats or of crossing any water in going from Gaula into la pequeña Bretaña. There is mention of their passing near a shore and reposing in tents.

King Perion was in a town called Bangil near the sea. A giant, native of Leonis, and having two castles on an island, comes to Bangil. (Mention is made of the death of the king of la Gran Bretaña and the coming to the throne of Lisuarte, who is married to the daughter of the king of Denmark).

Cap. iv. Lisuarte, leaving Denmark « con gran flota en la mar entró », and was carried to the kingdom of Scotland; and from there, entering his boats, goes to Great Britain.

Perion comes to the palace of Languines in Scotland to seek aid since the king of Ireland wars upon him; departs on horseback.

Cap. v. Perion leaving realm of Languines chooses of two ways the one which leads directly to his land; « la derecha para yr á mi tierra ».

Cap. vii. Agrajes of Scotland sets out with company for Gaula.

Cap. viii. Ships sent by Lisùarte come seemingly to court of Languines, and return speedily to Great Britain. Agrajes, we are told, is at the shore with his company ready to put to sea from Scotland and pass to Gaula; but they first go on horseback to Palingues, a good sea port town « frontera de Gaula », and there they enter the ships of Agrajes, cross the sea and arrive in another town of Gaula — otra villa de Gaula — called Galfan, and from there go to Baladin, a castle where king Perion is carrying on war.

Galayn, el duque de Normandia, was there as ally to the king of Ireland. Also with those of Normandy were those « de la Desierta. »

Amadis going to Great Britain from Gaula, entering a boat, landed in a good town called Bristoya and there learned that the king was in his town Vindilisora.

Cap. xi. Amadis on his way from Bristoya to Vindilisòra comes to castle, Bradoyd, which is near salt water. (Mention of Peña de Galtares.)

Cap. xii. Galaor coming from Peña de Galtares arrives at entrance to forest Brananda, which divides the counties of Clara and Gresca, then passes the river Bran in a boat and arrives at a beautiful town called Grandares (where the daughter of the king of Scrolis is in the care of the duke of Bristoya).

Cap. xiii. Amadis comes through forest to Windilisora.

Cap. xv. (mention of the king of Norgales at court of Lisuarte).

Galaor goes through forest Arnida and rescues daughter of Teloys el flamenco to whom Lisuarte has given county of Clara.

Cap. xvi. Agrajes, having returned to Scotland from Gaula is at the coast and sees a ship on its way from Norway to Great Britain brought to shore by storm. He goes to Briantes and from there sets sail for Great Britain, arrives in short time at Bristoya and thence goes through forest to house of duke of Bristoya (same as Grandares above). Leaving there goes on through forest Arunda to Vindilisora.

Cap. xxi. « Tierra Sobradisa que comarca con Seroloys y de la otra parte la cerca la mar. »

Cap. xxxi. Lisuarte with queen and nobles, goes from Vindilisora to the great city of London. There comes also the lord of Sansueña, not a vassal of Lisuarte.

Cap. xli. The island Grauisanda, which is three leagues from land.

Cap. xlii. Perion returning to Gaula from Alemaña is lodged in the house of the count of Selandia.

II. Introduction. — Apolidon the son of the king of Greece, and the daughter of the Emperor of Constantinople goes by sea to Rome and from there to the Insola firme.

Cap. xliij [1]. Amadis having left Sobradisa goes to the Insola firme, which is two days' journey « contra esta parte dela gran mar. »

Cap. xlvij. Patin, brother of emperor of Rome comes to Great Britain.

Cap. xlix. Miraflores, castle near London, « dos leguas de Londres en vna floresta a vn cabo dela montaña. Vegil, a seaport of Great Britain opposite Scotland, six days journey from there to Poligez (Seaport of Scotland).

Cap. liiij. Island Mongaça.

Cap. lvj. Tartaria and Yndia.

Canonia.

Cap. lviij. Towns of Ganota and of Fernisa (both in Great Britain).

1. The chapters I have here numbered as they are in the edition of 1508 ; to avoid confusion one may note that for Bk I. the numbering is the same as in the Rivadeneyra edition ; Bk II. xliiij corresponds to R. II, i ; Bk III, lxv. to R. III. i.

Cap. lix. Lisuarte goes to Fernisa and from there to the island of Mongaça.

Cap. lxj. Canileo-province.

Cap. lxiij. Spaña, Yrlanda, Borgoña.

Tasilana, a town where king Lisuarte was.

III. The king Lisuarte went to his town Gracedonia (mention of the king of Suesa).

Cap. lxv. Town of Gaula, Mostrol sea port opposite Great Britain.

Cap. lxvj. Sea port (of Great Britain) Jafoque.

Cap. lxvij. Island Leonida. Perion and others go from Gaula by boat to Great Britain. Gadanpa town of king Lisuarte.

Sea port called Alfiad (in Great Britain) from which one could pass to Gaula.

Cap. lxx. Amadis went from Gaula to Alemaña, and fearing the cold of winter went to Bohemia and then to the islands of Romania.

Cap. lxxij. Amadis came to Sadiana, a seaport town of Romania — opposite Grecia, « al cabo dela Tierra Firme. » From there he went to the islands of Romania and some of Grecia, then turned the ship toward Constantinople. (mention of Roma, Cerdeña, Calabria and Talancia).

Cap. lxxiiij. (Mention of Judea and the Island of Gadabasta). Embassadors of emperor of Rome came to a seaport opposite Great Britain called Çamando.

Cap. lxxvj. Embassadors who had arrived in Lombardia passed over to Great Britain landing in Fenusa.

(Mention of the Marquis of Ancona and the Countess of Selandia).

Cap. lxxviij. They reached the ocean (el mar Océano, que es en derecho dela costa de España) and when Amadis saw they were so near to Great Britain he urged sailors on. Tagades, a great seaport of Great Britain opposite Normandia — name of town and of mountain.

It will be readily noted that it is in the first book that we find the journeys most carefully traced, and the clearest indications of geographical points in the Arthurian domain, and that the fourth book had nothing new to add.

The journeys of different personages from point to point in Great Britain, as from Bristol to Windsor, correspond fairly accurately one with another, and the author seems not lacking in certain geographical knowledge. The relative position of Norway and Denmark to Scotland and England are correct. What exactness is shown in the journeys in the interior of the various countries themselves, beyond that of general direction and the approximate placing of important towns, could only be proved by the absolute determining of the towns, rivers and forests as known geographical points. In how far we have been able to do this, in how far they are found in the Round Table Romances, or in both, and to what extent they remain unsolved the appended list of names will indicate.

Before taking these up however, the point as to whether Gaula is France or Wales must be treated. As already noted, the opening chapters with no mention of ships would place it at least as upon the continent. But in chapters iv. and v. Perion arrives at the palace of Languines in Scotland as he had in la pequeña Bretaña, unattended and on horseback, and takes his departure in the same way. In chapter viij. Agrajes going from Scotland to Gaula goes on horseback to Palingues, a seaport on the border of Gaula, then enters his boats and goes to another town of Gaula. Amadis goes by boat from Gaula to Great Britain and lands in Bristol. In Book III. ch. lxv. we find mention of Mostrol, seaport of Gaula opposite Great Britain, and in ch. lxviij. Perion and his sons go thence in boat to Great Britain. In ch. lxx. Amadis goes from Gaula to Alemaña on horseback. We are forced then to admit that in the beginning Gaula is undoubtedly France or a part of it; that later, on the same kind of evidence, it is Wales, and then in the third book, we have a return to France upon finding Mostrol — Montreuil-sur-mer — in Gaula and finally, when Amadis sets out for Germany, the inference would be the same. It may be argued that the knight coming and going on horseback would not furnish a proof and that is true. But as one sees these different points so difficult to reconcile is one not forced to conclude simply that the geography of the author or authors of Amadis was, whether entirely based upon that of the Arthurian romances or not, at least like to it in the indefiniteness which usually characterizes it [1]. And as one goes on through forests,

1. In the Tristan we may here note we find Gaule and France used inter-overs rivers and to islands of the sea, one finds in the journeys the same mingling of fact and fancy as in these other tales. To attempt detailed comparisons of the journeys would be futile; in how far our authors made use of the material of the Round Table, and what knowledge they had of the geography of the countries considered can best be shown by the following list.

To these should be added the epithets, el Flamenco, and el Picardo.

Of the purely fanciful names of islands, forests and castles the confronting of a small number must suffice — here it seems rather a matter of suggestion. In Amadis the Insola Firme [1] and its description recalls l'Ile Tournoyante, the Insolas Luengas are les Iles Lointaines, and the Insola triste and Ile fortunée may well serve to show the relation if only by contrast. Ile Ferme is found also in Helias, le Chevalier au Cygne. The Floresta Malaventurada may be a memory of the Forêt Perilleuse, or of the Forêt Aventureuse.

There remains now that time and place have been considered, but the list of actors on this stage and first in our list stands Amadis. For the name of the hero which has called forth much speculation, we have first the explanation in the book itself, I, 1. « y este nombre era alli muy preciado, porque asi se llamaua vn santo a quien la donzella lo encomendó », and an early comment upon this is found in the edition of Venice 1533 in the « Prohemio del corigidor »: — « Como verdadero Amador dicho del santo Amador Amadis ». Later commentators have indicated Saint Amandus and Saint Amadeus as the saint in question [1]. Amado and its superlative has also been suggested [2]. The theory of Braga that Amadis was but a variant of Amadas (or that both came from Amadeus) while not to be carried to the extent he did, seems a not improbable explanation. But we need not go to the poem of Amadas et Ydoine to find this name. We have it, or variants of it, in the Round Table [3]. On page 365 of vol. II. of the Table Ronde, Paulin Paris gives « Amadas le Crespé ». This in view of the fact that the one description of Amadis (I, xxx) said « y Amadis tenia los cabellos crespos y rubios » seemed decidedly encouraging, but upon consulting the Ms. from which he made his version (Fonds fr., anc. numéro 332, f. 307), the form was Amadãt le crespe (or respe). In Sommer's Merlin is given Amadant de le crespe — and in his Sources of La Morte D'Arthur we find (p. 54-

1. First noted, I think, by Puymaigre, op. cit., I, p. 415, also cf. id., II, p. 199. — « Il paraît assez probable que l'auteur d'Amadis a voulu parler de l'ancienne île de Mona, aujourd'hui île de Man. On lui avait donné le nom d'île Ferme parce que, suivant quelques auteurs, elle avait autrefois tenu à l'Angleterre. » Cf. also Baret, op. cit., p. 105 ; B. Tasso, Amadigi, c. XCII.

3. Pio Rajna in the Romania XVII, p. 185, note 10, speaking of Arthurian names says : « Più notevole è l'occorrere che par fare qui da noi fin del secolo XIII, e precisamente a Bologna, tra Dinadani, Lancilotti, Ivani, Brandeligi, Princivalli, Galvani, il nome Amadigi. Amadigi Ghiselli era del Consiglio del Popolo nel 1292 (Ghirardacci, I, 297). In ciò s'avrebbe la riprova che il nome cui dette tanto lustro la letteratura della peninsola iberica è realmente come si pensava da molti d'importazione francese. S'ha da avvertire nondimeno che anzichè di un Amadis potrebbe trattarsi di un Amadis riportato inesattamente posto che al 1299 ci si presenta qual capitano di milizie a Bologna stessa un Giglio « domini Amadasii de Ghisilerijs » (ib. p. 387). Probabile che in un luogo o nell altro ci sia errore e da un abbreviazione mal letta potrebb' anche essere uscito il Ghiselli sicchè oltre ai prenomi volessero identificare anche i casati e quindi i personaggi. »

56) Aladan the crespes, Aladan le crespe. The possibility of considering Amadant or Amadan as an oblique form occurs to one ; and among other variants (La Morte D'Arthur, p. 37), we find Amadan lorguellous, Amandau orgulous, Amadan lorguelleux, and in the English version Ammadius the proud. The name Adamas occurring also in the Amadis, and a probable intentional deformation of Amadas may, together with the author's whole treatment of names, throw sufficient additional light upon the subject. What this treatment was may be judged by comparing, in the columns below, the form of names found in the Amadis with those of the Round Table and Tristan.

Whenever it has been possible to carry the names back to the Round Table that has seemed sufficient. A few demand consideration because of the various conjectures they have evoked [1]. Arcalaus so long Arc-à-l'eau is found in the Tristan in Archelaus, and we find there the name Archaus as well [2]. Angriote de Estravaus, persistently converted into Andrieux des Travaux, might easily find its model in names of the Round Table and this seems the more probable as Aygli des Vaus and Keu d'Estraus are so frequently cited together. For Lisuarte there seems no need of going back to a hypothetic Celtic origin since Lisiard or Lisiardus is a name found in early records [3].

1. Cf. Clemencin, Don Quixote, V. I, p. 108. Gayangos, Discurso Prelim., p. XXIV, n. 3 et al.

2. Cf. éd. Bédier, Soc. des Anc. Textes ; Löseth, Analyse, p. 226. There may be some significance in the character of Archaus who is a « ravisseur tué par Blioberis » ; cf. also Analyse, p. 447, where « le nom de Brunor le noir est remplacé par Archelaus ».

3. Lisiardus Turonensis, 1153-68 ; clericus et decanus Laudunenses, ms.

That a few of the names bear resemblance to some in La Gran Conquista must also be noted, Amagdelis, Amabilia (name of a town, Fr. Mabille), Melisenda and Norandin may be placed beside Amadis, Mabilia, Melicia [1] and Norandel. Of the names not thus accounted for it will be noted that many are formed upon one stem, having certain constantly repeated endings [2]; that some names of people are used again as names of places and vice versa; which reduces the list of those unaccounted for to a negligible number. The endings throughout are those of the French proper names as one has but to glance through some found in the Round Table to be convinced [3].

In epithets we may make two divisions : those simply carried over and those suggested by others.

Vita s. Arnulfi episc. Suessionensis, Hist. litt. v. XI, 26-9. That Lisuarte of Laon is connected with the Crusades as clerk arouses a question wich I have not yet sufficiently investigated to consider here. The connection of this name with « Les passages de oultremer du noble Godefroy de Buillon » — may be a key to solve another question in the Amadis touched upon later.

1. Cf. Rajna, op. cit., p. 130. n. 1.

2. See names beginning with Gal, Gan, and Gand, as well illustrating this.

3. A few endings will suffice to make clear the method of building names : an, ain, aim, ad, ador, al, andres, ar, agar, art, amont, amor, anor, antes, as, ault, en, ennes, eis, esen, et, idan, idat, lis, oinel, oart, ogles, ostre, uste, etc., etc. With patience one might work out nearly every name and one wonders whether Lisuarte itself may not be after all a combination of Lis and oart, or of Lis and Artus.

Among the many others we have el Cuidador, el Buen Justador, el Mesurado, which are of a class with l'Amoureux, le Beau parleur, le Sage.

III. Episodes

EPISODES OF BOOK I

The meeting and love of Perion and Elisena, the parents of Amadis, forms the introduction to our story, and in this very beginning is close analogy to the story of Rivalen and Blanchefleur, the parents of Tristan [1].

Elisena, the daughter of Garintir, is of rare beauty and has many suitors, powerful princes, but refuses to wed. Upon seeing Perion, « re di Gaula », who has come to the court of the renowned Garintir, and hearing of his valorous deeds, she is seized by love for him, as is he for her. She seeks a way to come to him and by the aid of her follower, Darioleta, succeeds. Perion leaves the court to return to his own country. Elisena finds herself with child and in great fear of the law which condemned to death any woman having a child out of wedlock. The child born to Elisena (in the absence of king Perion and unknown to him) is placed in a little ark which is entrusted to the river and borne out to sea. A Scottish knight returning to his country with his wife and new-born child rescues the infant. His wife cares for it as her own and it is known as such. Perion returns to Elisena, weds her and takes her to his own country.

In the Tristan of Thomas, Rivalen, king of Leonois (var. « seigneur d'Ermenie ») comes to Mark to offer his services, having heard much of his renown. Mark has a sister, Blanchefleur, very beautiful and loved by many princes and nobles. She and Rivalen love and, after a battle in which Rivalen is wounded, by the aid of one of her followers she comes to him. Sometime after Rivalen is about to go into his own country; Blanchefleur tells him of the danger in which he leaves her, saying « je porte un enfant, et restée seule ici, il me faudra subir le châtiment de vous avoir connu — si vous restiez, vous risqueriez avec moi une mort indigne ». Rivalen takes her with him to his own country and there weds her. Rivalen being slain in battle, Blanchefleur gives birth to an infant and dies. Roald, a faithful knight, bears the child away secretly; his wife takes child as her own.

The few remaining resemblances may be summed up as follows.

When Amadis was five, the knight gave him a bow and arrow and trained him in their use; at age of seven he is taken by the king of Scotland dubbed knight to his court. At fifteen he demands to be made knight, and is by Perion his father, who has come to court of Scotland. Later having come to the court of Perion, by means of a ring he is made known to Tristan at the age of seven was given into the charge of a wise master who taught him, among other things, to mount and to hunt; at age of fifteen he leaves his country; after various adventures reaches court of king Mark : recognized by means of ring, demands of his uncle that he make him knight, which he does.

Tristan, returning after reconquer-

his father and mother. Amadis fights for his father — first for his personal safety, then for his land attacked by the king of Ireland.

ing the land taken from his father, fights the Marholt to release his uncle from paying tribute to Ireland.

At this point the close relation which, as I have indicated, is not one of direct imitation, but rather seems inspired by memory, ceases, and we shall see that for this same period the resemblance to the Lancelot is close.

It is significant here to note that, while in the situation of Elisena and that of Blanchefleur we find close analogy, by combining a passage from the prose Tristan with one from the Merlin we have the exact wording of our text. This Rajna has already pointed out in Le Fonti [1]. In the Tristan [2] we find that the punishment for adultery was instituted by Apollo, the king of Leonois and Cornwall. There the law deals with married women, but in the Merlin, as in the Amadis, with maidens as well.

Amadis, I, 1. Porque en aquella sazon era por ley establecida que cualquiera muger, por de estado grande y señorio que fuese, si en adulterio se hallaba, no se podia en ninguna guisa escusar de la muerte, y esta tan cruel costumbre y pésima duró hasta la venida del muy virtuoso rey Artur... y la revocó al tiempo que mató en batalla delante de las puertas de Paris á Floyan.

Merlin, Huth. I, 6. En che tans estoit coustume que feme qui estoit reprise d'avoutire si elle n'estoit commune a tous, que on en faisoit justiche.

Tristan. Löseth, p. 15. Le roi de Gaule introduit cette pénalité dans ces états, où elle reste en usage jusqu'aux temps d'Arthur. Celui-ci tua dans l'île de Paris Frolle, prince d'Allemagne, qui ayant auparavant conquis la France avait aboli la coutume.

That the author or authors had under their eyes and not simply in their memories some of the earlier tales, no one who notes these portions can doubt.

1. P. 155.
2. Löseth, Analyse, p. 14.

The whole introduction, as that of the Tristan of Thomas to which it bears so close a resemblance, is simply a roman d'aventure. The unwillingness of Elisena to wed calls to mind also that of Isonberta in La Gran Conquista.

Amadis, Bk. I. Introduction. La otra hija que Elisena se llamaba fué mucho mas hermosa... y como quiera que de muy grandes principes en casamiento demandada fuese, nunca con ninguno dellos casar quiso, antes su retraimiento y sana vida dieron causa á que todos beata perdida la llamasen, considerando que persona de tan grande guisa, dotada de tanta hermosura, de tantos grandes demandada en matrimonio, no le era conveniente tal estado de vida tomar.

G. C., XLVII. Un rey había fija infanta e era muy fermosa e decíanla doña Isonberta e querían casar, ca era ya tiempo para ello. E la Infanta ficiérase tan apuesta e tan fermosa que era marauilla; e demandábanla para casamiento reyes e condes e nobles infanzones e otros muchos hombres honrados e muy altos, e amábanla todos mucho, e deseábanla haber cada uno para casar con ella; ...habia propuesto de no casar ahina.

To the story of Bohor and the king's daughter (T. R., V, pp. 155-168) we may be in part indebted also; for there we have the companion who might well have been Darioleta's prototype. Briefly given : in both a very beautiful princess becomes suddenly enamored of a prince who comes to her father's court, in both unable to conceal her feeling, the princess confides in a companion who goes to the prince, arranges for their meeting and brings them together; her words upon leaving them :

« J'ordonne à vous, chevalier, de demeurer; à vous, demoiselle, de le bien recevoir. Soyez, à compter de ce moment, elle à vous et vous à lui. » Cela dit, elle sort et ferme la porte sur eux.

In both we have a moral disquisition following, in both the princess asks as to her lovers stay, in both he promises to return, and in both the companion returns to warn them at break of day.

In following the Tristan analogies, we have gone beyond our story and neglected important episodes to which we must now return.

Perion, awaiting Elisena's coming (Amadis I, 1) fell asleep and dreamed that some one entered his room « por una falsa puerta, y no sabia quien á el iba y le metia las manos por los costados, y sacándole el corazon lo echaba en un rio, y el decia : « ¿por qué hicistes tal crueza? » « No es nada eso, decia el ; que allá os queda otro corazon que yo os tomaré, aunque no será por mi voluntad ».

Galehaut (Table Ronde, IV, p. 90) also had a disturbing dream, which he thus recounted to Lancelot : « La nuit dernière, je me croyais dans la maison du roi Artus ; un énorme serpent s'élançait de la chambre de la reine, venait à moi et m'environnait de flammes. Je sentais la moitié de mes membres se dessécher. Puis j'entendais battre dans ma poitrine deux cœurs entièrement de la même grandeur. L'un se détachait pour céder la place à un léopard... ; l'autre ne sortait de ma poitrine qu'en m'arrachant la vie. »

Returning to their own lands, Perion and Galehaut pursue exactly the same course.

A., I, 11. Llegado á su reino envió por todos sus ricos hombres, y mandó llamar los sabios mas sabidores que en sus tierras habia, esto para que declarasen aquel sueño.

p. 113. Galehaut fit avertir les sages clercs... de venir le trouver... conduisit les clercs dans sa chapelle et il s'y enferma avec eux et Lancelot.

miendo ninguna cosa por grave que se les mostrase; esto hecho, mandó salir fuera al capellan y él quedó solo con ellos : entonces les contó el sueño, como es ya devisado, y dijo que se lo soltasen lo que de ello podia ocurrir; el uno de estos, que Argan el Picardo habia nombre, que era el que mas sabia, dijo... : « pues vos place que en algo este vuestro tenido sea, dadnos plazo en que lo ver podamos. — Así sea, dijo el rey, y tomad doce dias para ello » ; y mandólos apartar, que no se hablasen ni viesen en aquel plazo; ellos echaron sus juicios cada uno como mejor supo, y llegando el tiempo vinieronse para el rey.

After the others had spoken, Perion said to Argan el Picardo : « agora, maestro, decid lo que supieredes. — Señor, dijo el, por ventura yo vi cosas que no es menester de las manifestar sino á ti solo. — Pues salganse todos fuera, dijo el rey » ; y cerrando las puertas, quedaron ambos. »

sur les saints que vous me soulagerez autant qu'il sera en vous, et que vous ne me cacherez rien de ce que vous découvrirez, soit à ma joie, soit à mon deuil. » Les clercs jurèrent, et Galehaut leur raconta les songes qu'il avait faits plusieurs nuits de suite. « Pour bien en saisir l'ensemble, dit maître Helie, il faut de longues méditations. Veuillez, sire, nous accorder un délai de neuf jours, après lesquels nous pourrons vous en donner le vrai sens. — Je vous accorde ce répit. » Les clercs mirent en œuvre toute leur science pour percer le secret de l'avenir. Le neuvième jour, Galehaut les rappela.

After the others had spoken, Galehaut said to Maître Helie : « Maître, il faut que vous suiviez leur exemple. Je parlerai, mais à la condition que nul autre que vous ne sera témoin de mes paroles. » — Galehaut fit signe aux huit premiers clercs de s'éloigner... Dès qu'il fut sorti, maître Helie reprit [1].

With the interpretation of the dreams we have not to deal, it is naturally different; one point however as to Argan el Picardo recalls Merlin.

Mas Argan el Picardo que mucho mas que ellos sabia, bajó la cabeza, y rióse mas de corazon, aunque lo hacia pocas veces, que de su natural era hombre esquivo y triste. El rey miró en ello y dijole : « agora, maestro ».

Perion, having departed, leaving Elisena with child, she is saved from danger by Darioleta who, upon the birth of the infant, places it in a little ark and confides it to the mercy of the waves.

The exposure of the child to protect the mother is no uncommon thing in early lays and romances, nor the placing with it wrappings worthy of a prince, and sword and ring by which to identify it later. No need to go back to classical instances, nor is it from the Tristan or Merlin that this feature is taken ; yet the farewell of Elisena to her child is very like some accounts of that in the Tristan [1].

Perion (A. I. II.), relieved by the interpretation of his dreams, goes toward his palace and is met by « una donzella mas guarnida de atavios que hermosa, y díjole : Sabe, rey Perion, que cuando tu pérdida cobrares, perderá el señorio de Irlanda su flor ». In the Tristan, Merlin meeting Ysabel, says : « Dame... on ne peut recouurer ce qui est perdu, mais cestui sera encore recouure ». And again Merlin says to Pellinor : « Sire, or avés autant gaaignié comme perdu, car vous avés gaaignié et recouuré l'un pour l'autre. » Not close imitations here, but rather memories yet not to be ignored. Gandales (A. I. II.), the foster-father of the « Doncel del Mar », as Amadis was called, riding out one day, met the same maiden as had Perion, and again her words are distinctly of the nature of Merlin's prophecies. « Ay, Gandales, si supiesen muchos altos hombres lo que yo agora, cortarle ya la cabeza. — Porque ? dijo el. — Porque tu guardas la su muerte, dijo ella. » She leaves him, soon returning however to ask his protection against knight who is pursuing her [2].

The rôle of Urganda la Desconocida for so the maiden finally discloses herself to be, is often that of the Lady of the Lake. In the Suite de Merlin we find that Niviene (later « Demoiselle du Lac ») having come to the land of King Ban with Merlin, was entertained by queen Elainne and upon seeing Lancelot « qui n'avoit pas encore un an d'aage, mais de tel petit d'aage estoit il la plus bele creature del monde » said : « certes, bele creature... tu seras li non pers de tous les biaus », and Merlin answered : « en nul tans ne il tant a loer de biauté comme de chevalerie. Vous ne porriés pas cuidier que devant lui ne après lui fust autre chevalier comme il sera. » In our story Urganda in large measure combines the two rôles, as her words to Gandales suffice to show : « digote que aquel que hallaste en el mar, que será flor de los caballeros de su tiempo; este hará estremecer los fuertes; este comenzará todas las cosas y acabaran á su honra en que los otros fallecieron; este hara tales cosas que ninguna cuidará que pudiesen ser comenzadas ni acabadas por cuerpo del hombre. »

Gandales having asked the maiden where he can find her. — « Esto no sabrás tu por mi ni por otro. — Pues decidme vuestro nombre... — Sabe que mi nombre es Urganda la desconocida, y agora me cata bien y conóceme si pudieres, y el que la vió doncella de primero que á su parescer no pasaba de diez y ocho años, vióla tan vieja y tan lasa que se maravilló como en el palafren se podia tener, ... y ella dijo : Parescete que me hallarias aunque me buscases ? pues te dijo que no tomes por ella hafan, que si todos los del mundo me demandasen, no me hallarian si no quisiese. »

Merlin changed often for the mystification of Pendragon, Arthur and others, but in a particular instance when he was sought, taking on the semblance of a wood cutter, he thus spoke of himself to those who asked where they could find him : « Tous ne le trouverés mie se il ne veult. Mais tant me dist il que je vous desisse que pour nient vous travilliés vous de lui querre. »

The Lady of the Lake as well, had power to change, as on one occasion she came to the court of Arthur with a great company « et se fu si atornee par enchantement que li rois ne la coneust jamais en cele semblanche ; car il vous samblast bien, se vous la veissiés, que elle eust passé soissante ans et plus ».

In the help which Urganda calls upon Gandales to render her as in later incidents we have a suggestion of the limitations of her power. We find that in common with Merlin, the Lady of the Lake, Camille, and Morgain, she is in so far, at least, as her love is concerned, not all powerful. But her power regained, she enchants the knight and brings him to her allegiance. The maiden deserted by him vows vengeance, and Gandales warning her that Urganda is of those who know, not merely what one does, but what one thinks, she says : « Muchas veces los que mas saben caen en los lazos mas peligrosos. » Truly so had Merlin found it.

As the Lady of the Lake has suggested Urganda, and the dreams of Galehaut influenced those of Perion, so and indeed in far greater measure has Lancelot furnished a model for Amadis [1].

Amadis, I, II. Doncel del Mar se llamaba, criábase con mucho cuidado de aquel caballero Don Gandales y de su muger, y hacíase tan hermoso que todos los que le veian se maravillaban... llegó á los cinco años, entonces (Gandales) le hizo un arco á su medida... y hacíalo tirar ante si.

I, III. la reina... hacia criar al Doncel del Mar con tanto cuidado y honra como si su hijo propio fuera, mas el trabajo que con el tomaba no era vano, porque su ingenio era tal y de tan noble condicion que muy mejor que otro ninguno y mas presto todas las cosas aprendia.

T. R., V. III, pp. 26-27. Jamais... mère ne fut plus tendre et ne donna plus de soins à son enfant... On l'appelait tantôt le Beau trouvé, tantôt le Riche orphelin; mais la dame ne lui donnait pas d'autre nom que celui de Fils de roi... (p. 37); il sortit dès sa quatrième année de la dépendance des femmes, pour entrer dans celle d'un maître... On lui mit d'abord à la main un petit arc et de minces bouzons, qu'il tirait à courte visée...

Il apprit les jeux... et s'y rendit en peu de temps des plus habiles... Il n'avait pas seulement droit au prix de la beauté du corps, etc.

The anger of the Doncel del Mar against one of his companions and his reproof by his « ayo » recalls that of Lancelot (T. R. III, pp. 45-47). But while Lancelot remained with the Dame du Lac until he was eighteen, the Doncel together with Gandalin, his foster brother accompanied king Languines to the court of Scotland and was there in charge of the queen.

Meanwhile Perion had returned to Elisena, and having married her, had taken her back to his own country. On the way he met a hermit who quoted to him a prophecy which again might wel be one of Merlin's.

Amadis, I, III. Quiero que sepais lo que una doncella al tiempo que á esta tierra venistes me dijo, que me parescia muy sabia, y no lo puedo entender : que de la pequeña Bretaña saldrán dos dragones que ternian su señorio en Gaula, y sus corazones en la Gran Bretaña, y de allí saldrán á acometer las bestias de las otras tierras, y que contra unas serian muy bravos y feroces, y contra otras mansos y humildosos, como si uñas ni corazones no tuviesen.

In the theft of Galaor, the second son of Perion and Elisena, by a giant who carries him away before the eyes of his mother, and in the explanation that a maiden has said that only by him can the giant's enemy be conquered, there seems a memory of the theft of Lancelot. This is rendered the more probable by the fact that the maiden is Urganda [2].

Lisuarte, heir to the throne of Great Britain, leaves his young daughter Oriana at the court of Languines. The queen gave her the Doncel del Mar to serve her as page.

Sabed que es ligero de haber, pero grave de mantener; y quien este nombre de caballeria ganar quisiere y mantenerlo en su honra tantas y tan graves son las cosas que ha de hacer que muchas veces se le enoja el corazon ; y si tal caballero es que por miedo y cobardia deja de hacer lo que conviene, mas le valdria la muerte que vivir en la vergüenza ; y por ende ternia por bien que por algun tiempo os sufrais. » El Doncel del Mar le dijo : « Ni por todo eso no dejaré de ser yo caballero.—Doncel del Mar, yo se quando os

Si vous connaissiez les devoirs qui leur sont imposés, votre cœur, si hardi qu'il soit, ne pourrait se defendre de trembler... Mieux vaudrait au valet vivre sans chevalerie toute sa vie qu'être honni sur terre et perdu dans le ciel pour en avoir oublié les devoirs. — (L.) Pour ce qui me regarde, si je

La dame réunit tout ce que demandait le voyage (to court of Arthur for the adoubement). Dame du Lac to Arthur. « Je viens vous demander un don. — Demoiselle, quand il devrait m'en coûter beaucoup, encore ne seriez-vous pas éconduite. Quel est le don que vous réclamez ? — C'est de vouloir bien adouber ce beau valet. — Assurément l'adouberai-je. »

Both alike at this time learn that they are of high lineage ; both have been confident of it before.

Amadis : Yo me tengo por hidalgo, que mi corazon á ello me esfuerza.

Lancelot earlier : « Je suis fils de roi et j'entends pour tel être tenu ; je sens bien à mon cœur que je serais digne de l'être. »

In the love of the Doncel del Mar for Oriana we have the counterpart, or rather, as was long ago noted, a borrowing of the very words of Lancelot and the queen.

A., I, IV. Como aquel que sin ser suyo es todo vuestro.

—¿ Como ? dijo ella ¿ desde cuando ? — Desde cuando os plugo, dijo el. — ¿ Y como me plugo ? dijo Oriana. — Acuérdeseos, señora, dijo el Doncel, que el dia que de aquí vuestro padre partió me tomó la reina por la mano y poniendome ante vos dijo : « este doncel os doy para que os sirva » ; y dijistes que os placia : desde entonces me

tengo y me terné por vuestro para os servir, sin que otro ni yo mesmo sobre mi señorío tenga en cuanto viva. — Esa palabra, dijo ella, tomastes vos con mejor entendimiento que á la fin que se dijo, mas bien me place que así sea. » El fue tan atonito del placer que ende hubo, que no supo responder cosa ninguna, y ella vió que todo el señorío tenia sobre él.

— Quand j'eus pris congé de monseigneur le roi, je vins devant vous armé, sauf la tête et les mains. Je vous recommandai à Dieu et dis que, si vous y consentiez, je serais votre chevalier. Puis je dis : Adieu, dame ! et vous avez répondu : Adieu, beau doux ami. Ce mot, depuis, ne m'est pas sorti du cœur. Ce mot me fera prud'homme, si jamais je le dois être..... — Par ma foi ! dit la reine, le mot fut dit de bonne heure, et Dieu soit loué de me l'avoir fait dire. Mais je ne le prenais pas tant au sérieux ; vous l'avez entendu autrement ; bien vous en est venu. »

...Elle ne doutait déja plus de son amour pour elle...Et Lancelot est tellement ravi de ces paroles qu'il ne peut que répondre : « Dame, grand merci. »

Having found in the infancy, adoubement and love, the unmistakable indications of imitation of the Lancelot, we are perhaps only too ready to see resemblances in their adventures : the Doncel del Mar takes leave only of his lady upon quitting the court immediately he is made knight ; his first adventure is the avenging a wounded knight, as the promise to avenge a « chevalier navré » is the first don of the Beau Valet ; sending back those conquered to the court of king Languines, he directs them to say they are sent by « vn cauallero nouel que hoy salió de la villa » ; the resulting delight of all and « sobre todos fué la de su señora Oriana » as in like instance the Beau Valet : « vous les conduirez à la cour du roi Artus et vous les présenterez à Madame la reine de la part du valet ». . . . Madame Genièvre en ressentit grande joie. » All these things are customary in like adventures throughout these tales. — Yet as we continue, as we find the Doncel del Mar, met by maidens, one of whom is Urganda la Desconocida, who brings him a lance and tells him he will perform great deeds with it — we recall the part of la Dame du Lac who sends to the Beau Valet the shields which enable him to accomplish great deeds; and finally as we find what recurs many times later — the like description of places, and the like attitude of these two knights — we are forced to conclude that there cannot be too careful noting of even the phrases.

The Doncel and the maiden who accompanied him came to a castle « que estaua sobre vn rio y auia vna puente leuadiza, » recalling the castle of the Douloureuse garde which was « bâti sur une roche et la rivière d'Hombre coulait d'un côté de la roche, » and to which Lancelot, no longer « le Beau Valet » but « le Blanc Chevalier » came at the same stage in his adventures.

The maiden passed and the squires, and last the Doncel — « y yua tan firmemente pensando en su señora que toda yva fuera de si » — until startled by the cries of the maiden. This fit of abstraction is that of the Beau Valet who following the chevalier de Nohan « donna librement cours à ses pensées » until he felt a branch strike his forehead. « Une branche d'arbre le frappa au front » (T. R. III, p. 139). Later we have the same words (A. I, II): « y dando las ramas de los árboles á Amadis en el rostro, acordó en su sentido. »

In the contest at the castle which follows, the Doncel del Mar having overcome the knights and those on foot attacking him, pursues two of the latter into a room where is an old man in bed, and angry at the man's replies « dió del pie al lecho y trastornólo sobre el. » In the Table Ronde IV. p. 287, Lancelot pursuing one fleeing, who seeks shelter under a bed where was sleeping Mongain, « prend à deux mains sommier et couvertures ...et les renverse ce dessus-dessous. » The intention, however, was different.

The maiden who has followed the Doncel tells him that her lady is Oriana.

Quando el oyó mentar á su señora, estremeciósele el corazon tan fuertemente que por poco cayera del cauallo. (Amadis, I. ch. V.)

En entendant parler de la reine, le Bon Chevalier baisse sa tête et s'oublie au point de laisser couler ses larmes. (T. R. III, p. 248).

Continuing his way he saw coming toward him a maiden in great distress « vio venir contra él vna donzella haziendo muy gran duelo », and the Beau Valet, now le Blanc Chevalier (T. R. III. p. 154) « voit venir à lui une demoiselle éplorée. » Though in this case the adventure following is not the same, in another similar one we find the maiden's response in the Lancelot put in the mouth of a dwarf in the Amadis. For the episode itself we have the evident source in an adventure of Hector. In both we have the same cruel customs.

A. I. v-vi. llegó á vista de un muy hermoso castillo que era de un caballero que Galpano habia nombre, que era el mas valiente y esforzado en armas que en todas aquellas partes se hallaba ; asi que mucho dudado y temido de todos era... tal costumbre mantenia cual hombre muy soberbio debia mantener..... las dueñas y las doncellas que por allí pasaban hacíalas subir al castillo,y haciendo de ellas su voluntad con fuerza ;... y á los caballeros... hacíalos jurar que se llamasen el vencido de Galpano..... y tomandoles todo cuanto traian se habian de ir á pie.

T. R. V. pp. 265-268. Le maître du château... est le plus cruel des hommes et le plus fort en armes qui existe. Il ne manque pas de provoquer tous ceux qui se présentent; quand il les a vaincus il les fait mettre à nud et les promène ainsi par les rues de la ville. Telle est la première coutume ; voici la seconde... Chaque jour il prend une de nos filles... il l'oblige à partager son lit... Plus de quarante belles pucelles ont déjà subi cet odieux traitement.

The Doncel del Mar combats several before meeting the knight himself, then :

vió á una puerta un caballero desarmado que le dijo : « ¿ Que es eso, caballero ? venistes aquí á me matar mis hombres ?... Ay caballero soberbio lleno de villania, agora comprareis la paraît un chevalier non armé, monté sur un grand cheval. «.Dieu vous sauve chevalier !... d'où. venez-vous, sire ? — Que vous importe ? consentez d'abord à faire ce qui m'amène... » maldad que hicistes... y no tardó mucho que lo vió venir en cima de un caballo blanco, y el todo armado que no le faltaba nada.....

Entonces se dejaron correr al gran ir de los caballos, y hirieronse... y juntaronse de los cuerpos y escudos y yelmos uno contra otro tan bravamente que ambos fueron á tierra; pero tanto le vino bien al Doncel que llevó las riendas en la mano... y luego metieron mano á sus espadas, y pusieron los escudos ante sí... De los escudos caian en tierra muchas rajas, y de los arneses muchas piezas, y los yelmos eran abollados y rotos.....

Ils s'éloignent aussitôt de l'un et de l'autre côté, puis reviennent et s'entrefrappent de grande furie... ils se heurtent, se prennent au corps et tombent en même temps sous les pieds de leurs chevaux. Hector, un peu moins étourdi de la chute, se relève le premier, l'épée déjà prête à frapper; l'autre le reçoit de son mieux, le feu jaillit des heaumes... ils trouent les écus, ils démaillent les hauberts.....

Le chevalier... recule, il n'a plus même la force de frapper, et n'oppose à la terrible épée d'Hector que les lambeaux de son écu. Enfin un revers de lame sépare de son épaule le bras qui tenait l'épée. C'en est fait, il jette un cri d'épouvante et Hector... lui arrache le heaume pour lui couper la tête s'il ne se déclare outré. « Je n'en ferai rien », répond-il. Hector ressaisit son épée et d'un coup suprême fait voler la tête à la distance d'une lance.

The Doncel having killed the knight against whom the maiden made complaint she asks for his head « yo leuaré la cabeça deste que me deshonró ». Numerous are the instances of like demands on the part of maidens (cf. T. R. V. p. 51) where one asks for the head of the knight just conquered. The maiden begs a don of the Doncel del Mar, and insists that he tell her his name. He responds « no soys en ello cortés en querer de ningun hombre saber nada contra su voluntad. Quando vió que no podia al fazer, dixo : A mi llaman el donzel del Mar ». The Beau Valet (T. R. vol. III. p. 194) says : « Eh ! tu me fais parler malgré moi. »

This is the usual attitude of the knights. Gauvain alone never conceals his name — or at least, so boasts.

The news of Galpano's death coming to the king, there is like amazement to that shown at court of Arthur on hearing of the taking of the Douloureuse garde.

Como ¿ muerto es Galpano por la mano de vn cauallero ? Marauillas me dezis ! — Cierto, aquel es el cauallero nouel », y preguntó á la donzella si sabia como hauia nombre. — Sí, mas esto fué con gran arte... ha nombre el Donzel del Mar.

T. R. III. p. 167. La Douloureuse garde est conquise; les portes ont été franchies par un chevalier dont personne ne sait le nom. — Voilà, dit le roi, ce que tu ne me feras pas aisément croire. — Sire, n'en doutez pas, c'est le chevalier nouvel.

The Doncel entering a forest a morning in April recites litanies of praise to his lady, is overheard by a knight, who says that if what he says be true he is unworthy such a one and contest follows. That for this we have but an embarrassment of sources. Rajna has shown in Le Fonti, [1] and of these scenes and the examples found he says : — « I miei dodici esemplari si riducono in fondo a due tipi. La scena è la stessa in entrambi : campagna e bosco; poi — salva qualche rara eccezione — un' acqua, che è quasi sempre una fonte. Sul margine. o sulla riva, c'è un cavaliere. Nel maggior numero dei casi piange e si dispera ; una volta sola appare lieto e contento ; qualche altra avvicenda l'afflizione e la beatitudine. Poco lungi si vedono dove uno, dove due altri personaggi, qui a sedere, là in piedi, in atto d'ascoltare. Questi gli elementi comuni, ma in uno dei due tipi il cavaliere addolorato comincia dall'esser solo. Gli altri attori vengono dopo, e fanno per solito, con esito più o meno felice, ufficio di consolatori. Invece nel secondo tipo i personaggi prendono posto sulla scena con ordine inverso : prima il deuteragonista ; poi il protagonista. »

In this instance (I, VIII) of the Amadis, we have the most simple

form of the first type. But if, leaving aside m for the oment our observance of the regular order of the episodes we look at the other like incidents, we find a goodly variety.

In the next (I, XIII) Amadis looking from a hill upon the city where Oriana is — laments and weeps. Gandalin tries to comfort him with the one result of making him angry. Later (II, II), when the woe is no longer without cause, Amadis, in his despair, having come to a fountain, fastening his horse to a tree, « se asentó en la hierba verde para hacer su duelo. » He falls asleep but wakening (III), « vió que la luna se ponia... y tornandose á sentar, dijo » etc. and having lamented, calling upon not only his lady, but his father, squire and friends, « callose que no dijo mas, dando muy grandes gemidos » and the two squires who heard him grieved but dared not appear. At this point there passed a knight singing of his love for Oriana, and we have here a combination of the two types — as is readily seen. Amadis follows him and a combat ensues.

In other unhappy moments even though there may be no lament, we find first a mountain stream, (ch. V), where Gandalin again tries to comfort Amadis, and then a fountain mentioned, and it is at a fountain that Amadis leaves his arms. Later at the Peña Pobre (II. VIII), « todas las noches albergaba debajo de unos muy espessos arboles » ...and made a lay which expressed his grief, and there « una noche debajo de aquellos árboles como solia, haciendo gran duelo, llorando muy fuertemente » hears music, sees two maidens « cabe la fuente » and is comforted by this. The different incidents pertaining to Palamèdes (Analyse de Tristan, § 31, 85, 137 and 623) aside from the general resemblance may have furnished some definite details. In § 31, Palamèdes throws down his arms, Gauvain finds them and hangs the shield upon a tree. In § 623 Tristan descends from his horse near a fountain and goes to sleep. Palamèdes arrives, and unable to sleep begins to make complaint — uttering the griefs of his heart. Tristan awakens and challenges him to combat. § 78. « Tristan, hors de lui, se lamente dans la forêt. Un chevalier entend les cris; ...trouve Tristan assis sous un arbre et s'efforce vainement de le consoler. » Tristan avows the cause of his grief, and then blames himself for having seemed to blame Iseut. In Amadis II. ch. v. Gandalin hoping to comfort Amadis blames Oriana — and angers Amadis. « Oriana mi señora nunca erró en cosa ninguna. » Analyse 77 a. « Fergus le questionne, mais Tristan ne répond rien ; Fergus respecte sa douleur et ne lui parle plus car il n'osa. 78 a. Tristan est toujours plongé dans la douleur, ne Fergus n'ot onques tant de hardement que de lui adresser la parole. »

Whatever may have been the original model for our scenes, whether possibly an early Lancelot episode [1] or another, it seems impossible to determine; but that for our version the Tristan has been closely followed is indisputable and this will come out even more clearly as we return again to these incidents in their regular order.

The Doncel del Mar, having joined his cousin Agrajes, comes to the court of Perion and remaining in the queen's house is there treated with much honor. In the story of Lancelot, here called « Le Bon Chevalier », we have an absolutely similar incident.

A. I. VIII. « la fazian mucha honra: la mañana venida fueron el rey Perion é su mujer á ver que hacia el Doncel del Mar... vieronle los ojos bermejos y las fazes mojadas de lagrimas assi que bien parescia que durmiera poco de noche. » The queen asks Gandalin « ¿ que ouo vuestro señor que me paresce en su semblante ser en gran tristeza ? ¿ Es por algun descontentamiento que aquí aya hauido ? — Señora, aqui recibe el mucha honrra y merced, mas el ha assi de costumbre que llora durmiendo. »

T. R. III, p. 249. « il n'y a pas d'honneur que ne lui rendent les deux rois... Durant toute la nuit, ils l'entendent gémir et quand de grand matin Galehaut revient, il s'inquiète en lui voyant les yeux rouges et mouillés de larmes : « vous avez un chagrin secret, auriez-vous reçu quelque offense? auriez-vous à vous plaindre de quelqu'un ? — Ah ! sire, si j'avais un grand chagrin, ce serait de ne pouvoir reconnaître votre douce et simple courtoisie, je suis assez sujet tout en dormant à me plaindre et pleurer sans le vouloir. »

In the ensuing battle, while we may find analogies in the early combats of Arthur and Lancelot — Arthur, having gone to fight for the king Leodogan, distinguishes himself in battle whith one gigantic in stature (T. R. II. pp. 151, s.) fights Rion of Denemark, (pp. 192-193); — the details of the combats are not sufficiently close to be given here. That in certain details there is closer similarity to the combat of the « Chevalier du Cygne » with the Duque Rainer it is interesting to note.

Amadis. Bk. I. ch. IX. pero la batalla parecia desigual, no porque el Doncel del Mar no fuese bien hecho é de razonable altura, mas el rey Abies era tan grande que nunca hallara caballero que el no fuese un palmo mayor; y sus miembros no parecian sino de un gigante, y era muy amado de su gente, y habia en si todas buenas maneras, salvo que era soberbio mas que debia.

La Gran Conquista de Ultramar. Bk. I. ch. LXXIX. é era muy mayor de cuerpo gran pieza que el caballero del Cisne.

Bk. I. ch. LXIX. p. 38. é era muy mayor de cuerpo que otro hombre muy gran pieza, de manera que semejaba gigante, e era muy buen caballero de armas ademas;... é era hombre de buenas maneras en las mas cosas; mas tanto se atrevia en si mesmo é en el poder é en el linaje donde venia, é en la gran mejoría de armas que de otro hombre sentia en si, que fué una gran maravilla, porque hobo á extender á facer muchas soberbias é muchas fuerzas.

The doncella de Denamarcha coming with a letter from Oriana, the usual abstraction of the lover ensues.

A. El tomo la carta mas no entendió nada de lo que dijo, y asi fue alterado cuando á su señora oyó mentar; antes se le cayó la carta de la mano y la rienda en la cerbiz del caballo, y estaba como fuera del sentido.

Amadis having been recognized by usual means : ring and sword, and having learned his rightful name (I, x.), a maiden arrives who bids Perion remember the prophecy which has found its fulfilment in the finding of Amadis and the death of Abies, and here our author or redactor intercalates his explanation, i.e. that the rest of the prophecy has to do with Tristan and Iseut who are to live and love long after this time.

Having learned of the loss of his brother Galaor, Amadis determined to seek and recover him, and was on his way to Windsor when a maiden came to him asking his aid for Urganda. The episode following we see through the eyes of Galaor who, in company with the giant, was on his way to the court of Lisuarte by whom he hopes to be made knight. They came to a castle which resembles the Douloureuse Garde, as does the whole episode the adventure of the Blanc Chevalier.

A. I. xi. el castillo era asentado en una alta peña y de la una parte corria aquel agua, y de la otra habia gran tremedal... vieron un caballero armado sobre un caballo blanco con unas armas de leones y llegara á la puente que alzada estaba, y no podia pasar, y daba voces á los del castillo... Vieron contra el castillo del cabo de la puente dos caballeros armados, y diez peones sin armas, y digeron al caballero que queria. « Queria, dijo él, entrar allá. — Eso no puede ser... si antes con nosotros no os combatis. — Pues por al no puede ser, dijo él, haced bajar la puente y bajar á la justa. »

T. R. III. p. 155 et s. Le Blanc Chevalier arriva devant le château. Il était bâti sur une roche naturelle... La rivière d'Hombre coulait d'un côté de la roche ; de l'autre, un courant était formé de la réunion de quarante sources très rapprochées.....

Sur le haut de la porte parut un homme qui demande au Blanc Chevalier ce qu'il voulait. « L'entrée du château. — Vous ne savez pas ce qu'il vous en coûterait pour y entrer. — Non, mais ouvrez-moi cependant, car le jour avance. »

in one case it is Urganda herself, in the other a follower of the Lady of the Lake. The remainder of the episode has nothing in common with the Douloureuse Garde, which however, as we shall see, furnishes a model for later episodes. It may be that here we have the explanation of Urganda's interest in the Doncel del Mar, since it is said that « si por él no, por otro ninguno no puede cobrar lo que mucho desea ». She may have known in advance her future need of him as she had known that the giant could only be avenged by Galaor, and — as in certain versions of the Lancelot story (which we have no other reason to think known to our compilers) — the fairy steals the child that he may perform for her later a feat of which no one else is capable [1]. Here, by the aid of Amadis, Urganda regains her beloved who, a prisoner in the castle, can only be freed by combat, and but for the intervention of Amadis she would have made the maiden, who was the cause of her lover's imprisonment, drown herself. The explanation of Urganda's lack of power is found in the statement that the lady of the castle was also an enchantress.

Galaor, who has watched the combat, asks « el caballero de los leones » to make him knight. The preparation of Galaor for knighthood has been first in the reading « en unos libros... de los hechos antiguos que los caballeros en armas pasaron... fue movido á gran deseo de ser caballero », I, v, then with the giant, I, xi, he has learned all « que á caballero convienen » and having set out for the court of Lisuarte to be knighted, readily renounces that plan as have in like case many young aspirants in the Round Table upon seeing some deed of valor which fires their enthusiasm for the doer [2]. Urganda provides the sword, as she has a lance for Amadis, and the brothers separate, only to learn later the other's identity.

1. Cf. p. 69, n. 2.
2. T. R. III, p. 314 et passim.

Galaor fights and kills the giant, enemy of the one who had stolen him. So the young Arthur « jeune et petit chevalier » had fought Sapharin, a gigantic king [1], and in another combat of Arthur's that with the Giant of Mont St Michel, the giant's weapon was a club.

The combat over, of two maidens who have been awaiting him, one takes leave go to the court of Lisuarte and by her he sends word to his brother now there; the other, who has said that her lady sent her thus answers Galaor's question.

We have here two adventures of Gauvain combined, as the following quotations will show :

Amadis, I, ch. XII. « ¿Quien era su señora que alli la había enviado? — Si lo quereis saber, dijo ella, seguidme, y mostrar vos la he de aqui á cinco dias. — Ni por eso, dijo él, no quedaré de lo saber, que yo os seguiré » ...Pasada una pieza de la noche, llegaron á una hermosa villa y des que llegaron á la parte del alcazar, dijo la donzella : « Agora decindamos y venid en pos de mí, que en aquel alcazar vos diré lo que tengo prometido. — Pues llevaré mis armas, dijo él. — Si, dijo ella, que no sabe hombre lo que venir puede. » Ella se fue delante, y Galaor en pos de ella hasta que llegaron á una pared... Galaor entró por una huerta y llegó á un postigo pequeño que en el muro del alcazar estaba, y estuvo alli un poco hasta que lo abrió y vió la doncella y otra con ella... « Entrad, dijo ella » ; entrando hicieronle desarmar, y cubriendole un manto, y salieronse de alli, y la una

p. 30. On était à l'heure du premier somme. — A peu de distance s'élevait une grande et superbe maison où l'on arrivait en passant par un beau verger. La demoiselle les introduit par une poterne ou porte secrète. « Maintenant, dit-elle, descendez; voici une étable, laissez-y vos chevaux. » Puis elle les conduit en silence dans une salle haute... « Messire Gauvain, cette maison appartient au roi de Norgalles dont votre amie est la fille; elle ne désire rien tant que votre venue » ;... iba detras y la otra delante y él en medio, y entrando en un gran palacio muy hermoso, donde yacian muchas dueñas y doncellas en sus camas, y si alguna preguntaba quien iba ahi, respondieron ambas las doncellas. Asi pasaron hasta una cámara que con el palacio se contenia, y entrando dentro vió Galaor estar en una cámara de muy ricos pasos una hermosa doncella que sus hermosos cabellos peinaba; y como vió á Galaor púsose en su cabeza una hermosa guirnalda y fue contra él.

E la doncella que alli seguió dijo: « Señor, veis aqui mi señora, y agora soy quita de la promesa; sabed que ha nombre Aldeva, y es hija del rey de Serolis, y hala criado aqui la muger del duque de Bristoya. »

autant de chevaliers armés, aucun ne se réveille. ...Au milieu de cette seconde chambre était un lit magnifique, et sous la couverture d'hermine reposait une jeune fille dont la beauté était facile à reconnaître.

T. R. III, p. 293. Le lendemain, au sortir du bois, il trouve dans une prairie belle et riante un riche pavillon tendu. Il approche de l'entrée, et sans descendre avance la tête; une belle demoiselle était à demi couchée sur un lit somptueux; sa pucelle passait un peigne d'ivoire incrusté d'or dans ses longs cheveux blonds qui flottaient sur ses épaules; une autre pucelle lui présentait d'une main un miroir, de l'autre un chapelet de fleurs.

Both Gauvain and Galaor being discovered make valiant fights against a numerous company. The maiden who had guided Gauvain dares not remain behind : « s'ils viennent à me prendre, rien ne me sauvera de leur ressentiment. » The one who had guided Galaor was less fortunate, and being put in prison was condemned to be burned. Her rescue came through other hands and has to do with another adventure.

In the castle or fortress to which Amadis next came (I.XIII) were lights, and he heard the voices of men and women singing and making merry, as often in the Round Table tales, both in castles and in the open air. (T. R., V, 35-36) He is refused admission, learns the name of the knight of the castle and is taken by two maidens to their home where he learns that this Dardan has claimed a lady's lands unjustly and unless she finds a champion she must lose them. One remembers that one of the Beau Valet's earliest exploits was in defense of the Dame de Nohan and as every step of that story has been imitated in one place or another in ours, it seems probable that it has inspired this. Continuing on his way accompanied by the two maidens to whom he has confided his intention of presenting himself as champion for that lady, he meets two knights who seek to take the maidens from him, and for this we have hosts of examples as for his forcing them to swear that never would they take lady or maiden against her will.

The adventure and combat of Amadis with Dardan el Suberbio in all ways in which it differs from others of similar character might come from the epithet itself — but as has been seen to be true of the combat with Abies earlier, so this has some strong analogies with the adventures of the chevalier du Cygne though we have here a personal motive added — it is still the question of a lady deprived of her land and who must lose it unless a champion declares himself.

Amadis, I, ch. XIII. El rey Lisuarte dijole : « Dueña ¿habeis quien se combata por vos?—Señor, no, dijo ella llorando » ; el rey hubo de ella gran duelo.

Gran Conquista, LXXI. El Emperador cuando esto oyo (that she begged for some one to fight for her) e vió cuán llorosamente las dueñas mostraban su querella... hobo muy gran piedad en su corazon.

In each case the knight who defends the lady is unknown and arouses much curiosity.

A., I, XIII. Amadis... cató suso y vió á su señora Oriana que estaba en una finiestra, la espada se le reboluio en la mano y su batalla y todas las otras cosas le fallescieron por la ver. Dardan vió que su enemigo cataba a otra parte... y comenzó á herir por todas partes... Amadis tenia el pensamiento mudado en mirar á su señora. A esta hora començó á mejorar Dardan y el a empeorar y la donzella de Denamarcha dijo : « En mal punto vió aquel cauallero acá alguna;... Cierto no deuiera el cauallero á tal hora su obra fallescer. » Amadis que lo oyó, ouo tan gran vergüença que quisiera ser muerto, con temor que creeria su señora que hauia en el couardia.

The battle over, Amadis departs unperceived, sends Gandalin to Oriana and in the planning and carrying out the meeting of Oriana and Amadis there are again portions taken from that same first rendez-vous of Lancelot and the queen of which we found part carried over bodily in an earlier scene (A., I, IV). Gandalin coming to Oriana uses much the same language as that of Galehaut in speaking to the queen.

A., I, XIV. « Señora, aquel es todo vuestro y por vos muere y su alma padesce lo que nunca caballero... Haced lo que debeis si lo amais, que él os ama sobre todas las cosas que hoy son. »

T. R., III, p. 226. « Dame, vous savez qu'il vous aime plus que tout au monde et qu'il a fait pour vous plus que ne fit aucun chevalier. — Je m'accorde à ce qu'il soit tout mien. »

The arrangements made for the meeting, Oriana shows Gandalin a garden below her window and says : « Amigo, dile que venga esta noche muy escondido, y entre en la huerta. »

The queen to Galehaut: « Je pourrai donc le voir sans que nul autre que vous le sache? — Madame, il viendra cette nuit même à la chute du jour. Voyez-vous là-bas, dans les prés, cet endroit ombragé d'arbrisseaux? » The « finiestra pequeña con una redecilla de hierro, cerca de tierra », through which Amadis and Oriana speak, finds its prototype here.

I, XIV. Oriana le mostró una huerta que era de yuso de aquella finiestra donde se hallaban y díjole: « Amigo... dile que venga esta noche... y entre en la huerta, que debajo está la cá-lui montre la fenêtre qu'il aurait à gagner...

Il se couche de bonne heure... A l'heure propice, il se lève,... franchit le vieux mur du jardin et arrive à la fenêtre où la reine l'attendait. Il avance ses bras entre les barreaux, il touche les mains de la reine.

The remainder of the episode, as is fitting, is taken from the early meeting of Lancelot and Genièvre.

Quando Amadis asi la vió, estremecióse todo con el gran placer que en la ver hubo, y el corazon le saltaba por mucho que holgar no podia... Oriana dijo : « Mi señor, vos seais muy bien venido á esta tierra, que mucho os hemos deseado... digo vos que no tengo á buen seso lo que haceis en tomar tal cuita, porque de ello no puede redundar sino á ser causa de descubrir nuestros amores de que tanto mal nos podria ocurrir. »

Arrivé enfin devant la reine, le Noir chevalier (Lancelot) est saisi d'un tel tremblement qu'il peut à peine la saluer... la reine (dit) : « Sire, nous vous avons bien longtemps désiré...

« Mais que la chose demeure entièrement secrète... Si par vous je venais à perdre mon bon renom, nos amours en seront bien contrariées. »

The burial of Dardan el Superbo and his beloved by Lisuarte has close analogy to that of the Irish knight by king Mark (Huth Merlin, I, p. 227).

As Arthur upon Lancelot's being made known at the court, taking the queen aside begged her aid him in keeping Lancelot as knight of the Round Table (T. R., IV, p. 85), so « el rey Lisuarte (Amadis, I, xv) habló con la reina diciéndole... que él habia mucho á voluntad que hombre en el mundo tan señalado quedase en su casa », and the queen asks him to become her knight and that of her daughter. Is this because Gauvain and the other knights ask Genièvre to let them be her knights?

The history now returns to Galaor who is brought by a squire to a castle where he overcomes the usual number of knights and foot soldiers — and finally causes the death of the owner of the castle. He sets free a lady whom he finds enchained there — memory of the maiden made prisoner by Camille — the same incident although with different development, as one in career of Amadis [1]. Galaor, as the earlier incidents might prepare us to expect, is largely modeled upon Gauvain, and his amorous adventures are many.

Agrajes, a cousin of Amadis and his understudy as a faithful lover, is frequently before us but rarely in adventures of importance. Of these the only one we have to consider is the coming to the defense, with his uncle Galbanes, of the maiden who had served as a guide to Galaor (I, XVI). « Y caminando por una floresta, á la salida de ella encontraron una doncella (who seeks Galaor) querria que acorriese á una doncella que por él es presa... el duque jura que la hará quemar de aqui á diez dias... y de los diez dias son pasados los cuatro... dijo Agrajes : nos haremos lo que Galaor haria... El dia antes que la doncella habían de quemar », they arrived and had battle — but although they conquered still the duke persisted in his purpose, and the following day, accompanied by twelve armed men and two knights, he took her to the edge of the forest to burn her. Agrajes and Galbanes coming then saw the fire and that the maiden was about to be thrown in, but she in great fear was saying she would tell the truth. They were victors and took her, at her request, to the house of a knight near by.

The adventure of Lancelot upon which this is built begins thus : « au moment d'en sortir (de la forêt), il fit rencontre

d'une belle demoiselle démenant grand deuil (because a maiden on account of Lancelot) fut condamnée à être brûlée si elle ne trouvait champion pour la défendre... demain matin on doit la jeter dans les flammes. » Lancelot going the next morning, sees a great fire, « il aperçut une demoiselle tenue par six gloutons qui semblaient attendre le signal des juges pour la jeter dans le feu. Elle pleurait et invoquait Lancelot. » The one combat here suffices, and there is but one knight. Lancelot takes the maiden at her request to her chateau not far distant. (T. R., V, pp. 175-176, 181-183).

Receiving message from Galaor Amadis begs Oriana's permission to go in search of his brother and bring him to the court of Lisuarte. So Lancelot and other knights always demand permission (T. R., IV, 75 et al.) His first adventure is with a wounded knight and begins as does one of Yvain's.

I, XVII. Habiendo ya pasado las dos partes del dia vió venir una dueña que traia consigo dos doncellas y cuatro escuderos, y traian un caballero en unas andas, y ellos llorando todos fieramente. Amadis llegó á ella y dijo : « Señora, ¿ que llevais en esas andas ?... es un caballero... y va tan mal llagado que cuido morirá. El se llegó á las andas y alzó un paño que le cubria y vió dentro un caballero asaz grande y bien hecho, mas su hermosura no parecia nada que rostro negro y hinchado y en muchos lugares herido...

T. R., IV, pp. 246-247. « Il chevaucha jusqu'à basses vêpres sans trouver aventure... il fit rencontre d'une litière que traînaient deux palefrois. Une demoiselle vêtue de noir l'occupait... Sept écuyers escortaient sa litière et devant la dame était placé un grand coffre dans lequel gisait un chevalier navré de nombreuses plaies. Mess. Yvain salua la demoiselle... « Demoiselle, vous plairait-il m'apprendre ce que peut contenir ce coffre ? — ... Il contient un chevalier navré... » Mess. Y. lève le couvercle. Le chevalier avait à travers le corps deux plaies de fer de lance, un coup d'épée au milieu du front...

Yvain's adventure is not for him to achieve, and that of Amadis is completed in the usual way.

Amadis encounters dwarf who promises to guide him where will be three days hence the best knight of this land if he will grant him a don. He grants it and they ride on together. Amadis comes upon two knights fighting a third — dissuades them.

So Gauvain finds two knights fighting — stops them — they explain why they are fighting.

A., I, XVII. : « decidme porque os combatis... — Porque este dice que el solo vale tanto para acometer un gran hecho como ambos. — Cierto, dijo Amadis, pequeña es la causa. »

T. R., IV, p. 21. « Ce matin comme nous nous vantions à qui mieux mieux, il soutint qu'il me passait en force et en prouesse. — En vérité, dit Gauvain, si vous n'avez d'autre sujet de querelle, il sera facile de vous accorder. »

That Gauvain offers to fight the two of them — may have suggested the fighting of two against one in the Amadis. We have other instances in Gauvain's career of his thus interfering in combats [1].

Amadis comes upon the Caballero del Pino who loving a lady who does not love him promises her that he will for a year guard this valley and make each conquered knight swear that his (Angriote's) lady is more beautiful than his own. Naturally Amadis refuses to admit this, and conquers.

So Lamorat fights Meleagant because he refuses to admit that the queen of Orcanie is as beautiful as Genièvre. Lancelot, learning it, is in a fury and wishes to fight him but is dissuaded and Lamorat renders tribute to superior beauty of Genièvre [2]. Hector fights Perside to prove that the beauty of Hélaine sans pair is greater than the prowess of Perside. While not same incident — similarity. Perside has conquered one knight after another in same way — but is now beaten [3].

So also Segurade has been promised by the Dame de Roestor that she will marry him in a year if he continues to overcome all knights who present themselves as aspirants to her hand [4].

With dwarf Amadis reaches a beautiful castle and here it is that he must give him the don. Dwarf : « yo vi aqui el mas bravo caballero y el mas fuerte en armas que cuido ver, y mató alli en aquella puerta dos caballeros, y el uno de ellos era mi señor ».

Again we return to the incident of the Douloureuse Garde, the words of the maiden who met the Blanc Chevalier are « la mort de mon ami, un des plus beaux chevaliers du monde. Il a été tué à la porte d'un château dont il voulait abattre les mauvaises coutumes » (T. R., III, p. 154). The resemblances briefly given are : both are castles of enchanters, both have evil customs to be done away with, both are very strongly defended, have many prisoners; but the incidents of Amadis are a combination of this with other adventures, as the following comparison will show :

Amadis, I, XVIII, after overcoming the first difficulties — hears some one lamenting and finds in a cell a lady chained whom he sets free. « Quien soys que acá entrar pudistes? » She is beloved by Arban de Norgales and kept there by Arcalaus who hates Arban. The air of which she speaks « tan escuro que ninguno me pudo ver » may be a memory of Ascalon le Ténébreux [1].

T. R., IV, p. 82. Lancelot, having taken castle of Camille, « dans un réduit secret Keu le sénéchal trouve une demoiselle enchaînée contre un pilier. Elle avait été longtemps l'amie du chevalier que Lancelot venait d'immoler aux pieds de Camille. « Qui vient me délivrer [2] ? »

The supernatural nature of Arcalaus is but hinted at in the combat between him and Amadis, when « siendo ya la hora de tercia que Arcalaus habia perdido mucho de su fuerza ». Which may be a memory of Gauvain's increasing and diminishing force. See Huth Merlin, II, p. 239; also Summers Merlin, XII, p. 137, and legend of Sir Gauvain, pp. 12 and 13, where we find that Gauvain's force increased until « midi » but that at « none » began to decline (Merlin, II, p. 240) « viers nonne... lors commence Gavains a lasser augues... car sans faille cele forche que lui venait entour miedi aconstumeement ne li duroit pas très bien jusques a nonne ». But Arcalaus is dependent upon place to defend himself — as is true of Brandus of the Douloureuse garde — he retreats into a room where Amadis is powerless through enchantment. Merlin made use of enchantment to rob an opponent of Arthur of power causing him to fall into sound slumber, but he was not dependent upon such devices. Arcalaus taking the armor of Amadis wears it to court of king Lisuarte. Meantime two maidens arrive to rescue Amadis and the arts of the enchantress Camille and the means necessary to dispel them have doubtless inspired this.

A., I, XIX. « E la una de las donzellas sacó un libro de una arquita que so el sobaco traia, y comenzó á leer por él, y respondiale una voz algunas veces; y leyendo de esta guisa una pieza, al cabo le respondieron muchas voces juntas dentro en la cámara, que parescian mas de ciento. Entonces vieron cómo salia por el suelo de la cámara un libro rodando como que viento llevase, y paró á los pies de la doncella y ella le tomó y partiolo en cuatro partes y fuelas á quemar á los cantos de la cámara donde las candelas ardian. »

T. R., IV, p. 83; L. du Lac. — « Mais êtes-vous assuré contre la fausse Camille? — Elle est en notre pouvoir. — Ce n'est pas assez, et vous n'avez rien gagné, si vous lui laissez emporter ses boîtes et son livre. En ouvrant le grimoire, elle peut enfermer le château dans un déluge d'eau, et vous noyer tous tant que vous êtes. Mais ce grimoire, où est-il? Là, dans ce grand coffre. » Keu essaie d'ouvrir le coffre, mais voyant ses efforts inutiles, il y met le feu et le réduit en cendres avec tout ce qu'il contenait.

Amadis (I, XIX), sets free the captives (one hundred and fifteen, and thirty knights), who follow him, saying : « Ay caballero bien aventurado, que asi salió muestro Salvador Jesu

Cristo de los infiernos, quando sacó los sus servidores; el de las gracias dé la merced que nos haces. » Asi salieron todos al corral, donde viendo el sol y el cielo se hincaron de rodillas dando muchas gracias a Dios que tal esfuerzo diera á aquel caballero para los sacar de lugar tan cruel y tan esquivo », and they promise him allegiance and help forever after and Bramdoybas ; « querria ser vuestro vasallo para os servir », — « yo te recibo por mi vasallo. » Is this a pious version of the deliverance of the prisoners of Pintadol, T. R., IV, p. 226, where the people crie : « Bien venu le bon chevalier qui a mis un terme à nos maux et délivré nos enfants de servage » — et chacun de tomber à ses genoux comme devant un sanctuaire. And despite his reluctance so persuades him that « il en reçut la féauté ».

Again setting out, Amadis has a new encounter with a weeping maiden.

A., I, XIX. Y no tardó mucho que encontró una de las doncellas... llorando fuertemente, y dijole : « Señora doncella ¿porqué llorais ?— Lloro, dijo ella, por una arquita que me tomó aquel caballero que alli va, y á el no tiene pro... (See also A., I, VI). Vió venir contra el una doncella haciendo muy gran duelo... El Doncel del Mar le dijo : « amiga, ¿ qué es la causa de tan grande cuita ? »

T. R., t. V, p. 274; adn. Yvain. Il n'alla pas loin sans apercevoir une seconde demoiselle qui démenait grand deuil. Après l'avoir saluée, il lui demande la cause de son chagrin. « Sire, mon ami m'avait donné en garde le plus bel épervier du monde, mais sur le chemin... je ne pus empêcher un felon chevalier de me le prendre. »

We see from this same incident that Urganda knows when Amadis is in peril and succors him as the Lady of the Lake does Lancelot on various occasions, although the magic here used is that of Camille. So, too, Merlin and the Damoiselle du Lac had known of the dangers threatening Arthur. And the recognition by Amadis of the maiden sent by Urganda is that by Lancelot of one of the maidens sent by his protectress.

Entonces se tiró el yelmo y la doncella le conosció y el á ella... y la fue á abrazar. (Amadis, I, XIX).

La demoiselle baissait sa guimpe et laissait voir un doux et gracieux visage... il n'eut pas de peine à la reconnaître. « Ah! belle douce demoiselle », dit-il en lui ouvrant ses bras. (T. R., III, pp. 159-60) [1].

Arcalaus having put on the arms of Amadis, goes to court of Lisuarte, whom he meets with a company in the forest « y vió como venia Arcalaus contra él... y todos pensaron que Amadis era... mas siendo mas cerca vieron que no era que pensaban ». Arcalaus says that he has conquered and slain Amadis. The word is brought to Oriana by her maidens.

Lancelot (T. R., V, pp. 229-232) having according to a promise — gives his arms to knight demanding them. The knight passes by the queen and her maidens — having at his saddlebow the head « fraîchement coupée ». En le voyant approcher, elles crurent que c'était Lancelot, mais elles reconnurent bientôt leur erreur et la reine qui aperçut la tête frémit en pensant être celle de son ami.

A., I, xx. Oriana se estremeció toda... y falleciéndole á Oriana cayose en tierra amortecida... y como hablar pudo dijo llorando... « Ay flor y espejo de toda la caballeria! » — (Mabilia and Oriana tear their hair). Mabilia seeing Oriana as she thinks dead, says — « Ay Dios! no te plega de yo mas vivir, pues las dos cosas que en este mundo yo mas amaba son muertas! »

Elle tomba pâmée, sans mouvement. Quand elle ouvrit les yeux : « Hélas! hélas! s'écrie-t-elle, c'en est fait de la fleur de toute chevalerie. » Les dames... déchirent leurs visages, arrachent leurs cheveux... Rohor (navré) entendit les cris... « O mort! dit-il, pourquoi ne me prends-tu ? et comment pourrais-je survivre? La vie ne m'est plus rien sans lui. »

Both Oriana and the queen speak of the other knights and the grief they will have, the latter saying however « ils en seront encore plus désolés que nous » ; the former « mas a mi mucho mayor y mas amargosa (cuita y dolor) ».

The mistake at the court of king Lisuarte is speedily righted and we may with our author turn to Galaor who being cured of his wounds starts out in search of new adventures, and coming to a fountain, finds there a knight on foot and kindly offers him his squire's horse.

I, XXI. The knight thanks him and says that before they go he must know the marvellous property of this fountain « que no hay en el mundo tan fuerte ponzoña que con esta agua fuerza tenga... todas las personas de esta comarca vienen aqui á guarecer de sus enfermedades. » Galaor descends to drink, his squire also, placing the arms against a tree. The strange knight offers to hold the horse « y en tanto que bebian enlazó el yelmo, y tomó el escudo y la lanza de don Galaor, y cabalgando en el caballo le dijo : « Caballero, yo me voy... » Galaor quedó con gran saña... y cabalgó en el palafren y fuese por la via que el caballero fue ».

T. R., III, p. 380. Hector guided by a valet comes to a fountain, of the water the valet says : « Il n'est pas de plaie grave et merveilleuse qu'elle ne ferme et ne cicatrise. Descendez, s'il vous plaît. » Hector se laisse persuader, descend, ôte son heaume, suspend son écu à une branche voisine et l'écuyer qui s'est chargé du destrier quand il le voit penché sur la fontaine, passe l'écu à son cou, saisit le heaume, monte sur le destrier et s'éloigne à toutes brides. Hector se tourne, voit qu'il est trahi, enfourche le roncin et suit le valet d'aussi près qu'il peut.

At this point our story diverges from its model. Galaor meets a maiden, who promises to take him to the knight if he will grant her a don. Riding on she warns the knight, who is her lover. Seeing Galaor conquer she begs the knight's life as the don, but Galaor in his anger has already killed him. That this may be a modified account of a celebrated episode in the life of Gauvain the end of the story makes not too improbable. There (Huth Merlin, II, p. 89) Gauvain, having raised his sword to kill a knight, cuts off the head of the maiden who comes between to save her lover. To return to Galaor, the maiden follows him, saying she will go with him « hasta llegar donde me deis el don que prometido me teneis, y vos haga morir de mala muerte ». So a maiden swears that Lancelot shall die when he kills her lover (T. R., IV, p. 288), but she attemps to kill him with her own hands.

Returning now to Amadis we see that his next adventure which furnishes the beginning of the story of Briolanja called as yet « la niña hermosa », needs only to be placed parallel to that of the coming of Lancelot to the castle of the Dame de Malehaut. The trick played upon Amadis does not however find its source here nor does the part played by the lions, but that this is no chance resemblance the later development of the two stories, i. e. those of Briolanja and the Dame de Malehaut, clearly shows.

Amadis, I, cap. XXI. Y entró en el castillo, y yendo adelante oyo una gran vuelta de gente en un palacio y luego salieron del caballeros armados y otra gente de á pie, y venian diciendo : Estad caballero, y sed preso, si no muerto sois. Cierto, dijo él, en prision de tan engañosa gente yo no entraré á mi grado. Entonces enlazó el yelmo y no pudo tomar el escudo con la priesa que le dieron y comenzaronle á herir por todas partes ; pero él en cuanto el caballo le duró defendióse muy bravamente, derribando ante sus pies los que á derecho golpe alcanzaba; y como se vió ahincado por ser la gente mucha fuese contra un cobertizo que en el corral estaba : alli metido hacia maravillas en se defender... pero como la gente fuese mucha, y se herian por todas partes de tantos golpes que á las veces le hacian hincar las rodillas en tierra, no pudiera ya por ninguna cosa escapar de ser muerto; que á prision no le tomaran... si fuese luego á la puerta del castillo... la niña hermosa hubo del gran piedad... la dueña y toda la otra gente bajaron de lo alto y se vinieron á él...

T. R., III, p. 215. Lancelot comes to a ville called le Puy de Malehaut. Dès qu'il eut franchi lui-même les portes de Malehaut, elles se refermèrent sur lui; il entendit de grands cris confus, et bientôt il se vit entouré d'une foule furieuse de chevaliers, écuyers et sergents, qui se ruèrent à l'envi sur lui et commencèrent par tuer son cheval. Il se dégagea vivement et tint longtemps en respect plus de quarante glaives tendus vers lui ; enfin il gagna les degrés d'une maison forte voisine et continua une défense désespérée. Accablé de lassitude, il venait de tomber à genoux, quand la dame de la maison descendant jusqu'à lui offrit de le recevoir prisonnier...

T. R., p. 226. « Sire chevalier, je vous ai fait tenir prison ; mais tant que j'ai pu, j'ai adouci la rigueur de votre captivité et... vous m'en saurez un peu de gré. — Assurément, dame... comptez-moi pour votre chevalier en tous lieux, et dans toutes vos nécessités. »

Leaving the castle of the niña hermosa, accompanied by the dwarf, Amadis meets a knight and maiden ; the former seeks to cut off the dwarf's head. Such demands are not unusual, we have a maiden to whom Arthur has promised a don, asking for the head either of a maiden or knight, and many such incidents. The inevitable combat takes place and would have been such a fatal one as that between Balain and Balaan [1], had not a knight, coming upon them most opportunely, asked the maiden who the combatants were. She answers that they are Amadis and Galaor, that as don she had demanded the dwarf's head, knowing that as Amadis was best knight in the world Galaor would be killed. The knight, Balais de Caroante (note the resemblance to name Balain) stops the combatants, having first slain the maiden. Such combats between brothers or close kinsmen are frequent. The famous one mentioned above may well have furnished the inspiration for this, although much modified here. Details such as Galaor's lament over having fought his brother would leave no doubt. One finds also in such combats Lancelot and Hector, Lancelot and Bohor, Gauvain and Loth, and Lancelot and Lionel [2].

The three knights, Amadis, Galaor and Balais, going on together, (I, xxiv) each finds an adventure. So (T. R., III, p. 376 et s.) Hector, Sagremor and Yvain all find adventures at the same time, and two at least are in the beginning similar.

1. Huth Merlin, II, pp. 45-56.
2. T. R., II, p. 245 ; V, p. 117.

Yvain follows a maiden carried away by force; Sagremor goes to the aid of a knight, and Hector, hearing sounds of grief, comes to a number of people escorting the bier of a dead knight. The likeness is but superficial, however. Amadis goes to aid a maiden struck by a knight, Galaor remains by the body of a dead knight upon which they came at the cross roads, and Balais follows a knight who has first been dismounted by Amadis. The knight beside whom Galaor remains is taken away while he sleeps. He finds him again however, and avenges him by killing the traitor who had slain him, and wins another maiden (XXIV). Throughout this, as other adventures of Galaor, the memory of Gauvain seems to have largely influenced the story, but I find no direct imitation, although any one of the plentiful stories of wounded knights might have served as a model.

The Amadis adventure, rescuing the maiden who is struck, is a combination of several. So Gauvain went to the rescue of one cruelly treated who proved to be his mother (T. R., II, p. 166). The maiden is taken from him as he sleeps. So a maiden is taken from her knight while he is in combat.

A., I, XXVI. El caballero... la puso ante sí y comenzó de ir su camino... ella... dió voces: « Ay señor, acorredme, que me lleva no se quien. »

T. R., V, p. 218. Un chevalier... la saisit, la plante sur son cheval et s'éloigne. « Margalan! criait-elle, à mon secours! laisserez-vous donc emporter votre amie? »

The quest of the maiden differs somewhat although in each the knight fights several and properly wins the maiden. The combat at the castle in Amadis resembles many another, Amadis having conquered first one knight then two, then three, then the one who has carried off the maiden fixes as condition that she should be given him that and that the lady of the castle, who is beloved of Angriote, appear at court of king Lisuarte and grant him a don. In two adventures of Lancelot, T. R., V, p. 36-37 and 48-51, there are slight similarities, as the haughty knight in each armed save for his head is conquered and in each a lady intervenes, the one [1] to save the knight's life, the other to demand his head.

A., I, XXVIII. Balais... andubo hasta la media noche. Entonces oyó voces ante sí en una ribera, y fue para allá, y halló cinco ladrones que tenian una doncella que la querian forzar.

T. R., II, 290. Une nuit... Gauvain crut entendre de grands bruits, des cris et des plaintes. Il avertit Éliéser... Ils trouvèrent à quelque distance une demoiselle aux mains de cinq hommes armés, qui la frappaient et menaçaient de la tuer, si elle ne se taisait et ne satisfaisait pas leur odieuse brutalité.

Balais having rescued maiden meets knight, recovers his horse and returns to the crossroads.

Returning from their adventures, Galaor and Balais come to the court with Amadis, I, XXX. The king asks to have Galaor among his knights and the queen's words are those of Genièvre, who gives Lancelot to Galaor : " Galehaut, je vous donne à toujours ce chevalier " ; with but little change, although the circumstances are very different; her words are : " Señor, agora vos doy á Galaor que me pedis. "

With the plan of king Lisuarte to hold court begins a portion of the romance full of importance as an example of the method of the compiler (I, XXIX-XXXVIII).

A., I, XXIX. Mandó el rey apercibir á todos sus altos hombres que fuessen cón el el dia de Santa Maria de Septiembre á las cortes, y la reina assi mesmo y todas las dueñas y doncellas de alta guisa.

reina con sus dueñas y doncellas á las cortes que en la ciudad de Londres se habian de juntar, la gente pareció en tanto número que por maravilla se debria contar. El rey habia mandado que llevassen tiendas y aparejos porque no entrassen en poblado, y se aposentasse en las vegas cerca de las riberas y fuentes, de que aquella tierra muy abastada era.

XXXII. El rey Lisuarte quedó con sus ricos hombres por les hablar, y díjole : « Amigos, assi como Dios me ha hecho mas rico y mas poderoso de tierra y gente que á ninguno de mis vecinos, assi es razon que guardando su servicio procure yo de hacer mejores y mas loadas cosas que ninguno dellos ; y quiero que me digais todo aquello que vuestros juicios alcanzaren, por donde pueda á vos y á mí en mayor honra sostener ; y digo vos que assi lo haré. »

The knights confer and answer him, and then : Esto assi hecho, la reina dijo,que la escuchassen si les pluguiesse, que los queria hablar. Entonces se llegaron todos y se callaron por oir lo que diria ella ; dijo al rey : « Señor, pues que tanto habeis ensalzado y honrado los vuestros caballeros, cosa guisada seria que assi lo haga yo á las mis dueñas y doncellas .... Lo que vos demando en don es, que siempre sean de vosotros las dueñas y doncellas muy guardadas y defendidas de cualquiera que tuerto ó desaguisado los hiciere : é assi mesmo, que si caso fuere que hay prometido algun don al hombre, que vos le pida, y otro don a dueña ó doncella, que antes dellas seais obli-

Après la messe du grand jour, le roi invita ses chevaliers à suivre dans la salle où les tables étaient dressées et les nappes posées...

Vers la fin du grand festin, le roi Artus prit la parole : « Je vous rends grâce et merci, seigneurs qui avez formé ma cour en si grand nombre. Écoutez ce que pour l'honneur de mon règne j'entends établir.

p. 250. In response Nascien speaks for chevaliers de la Table Ronde.

p. 251. « Sire roi », dit Nascien, « devant Dieu, devant vous et devant tous, les compagnons de la Table Ronde font vœu que jamais, tant que le siècle durera, nulle dame ou demoiselle ne viendra réclamer justice en cour, sans y trouver un des nôtres, celui qu'elle désignera, prêt à combattre pour elle, envers et contre tout autre chevalier ». Il n'y eut personne dans la salle qui n'applaudît à cet engagement. Gauvain, de son côté, s'adressant aux Chevaliers du roi qui l'avaient choisi pour leur chef, demanda s'ils ne voulaient pas aussi s'engager par un vœu. Tous le prièrent de le faire en leur nom et d'avance approuvèrent ce qu'il lui plairait de dire. Alors, s'approchant de la reine : « Madame », dit-il, « mes compagnons et moi Gauvain, vous prions de nous retenir pour être vos chevaliers et de votre maison...

gados á cumplir como parte mas flaca, y que mas remedio ha menester; y assi lo haciendo seran con esto las dueñas y doncellas mas favorecidas y guardadas por los caminos que anduvieren, y los hombres desmesurados ni crueles no osarán hacerles fuerza ni agravio, sabiendo que tales defendedores por su parte y en su favor tienen ». Oido esto por el rey, fue contento del don que la reina pidió, y todos los caballeros que delante estaban : y assi lo mandó el rey guardar como ella le pedia, y assi se guardó en la Gran Bretaña por luengos tiempos, que jamas caballero ninguno lo quebrantó por aquellos que en ella se sucedieron; pero de cómo fue quebrado no vos lo contaremos pues que al propósito no hace.

In the meantime — that is between the announcing of the holding of the court and its actual occurrence while there was general joy, none thinking of the changeableness of fortune, « acaesció á entrar en el palacio una doncella estraña assaz bien guarnida y un gentil doncel que la acompañaba... « Señor, dijo ella, bien semejais rey en el cuerpo, mas no se si lo sereis en el corazon », asks promise of king and will return when he holds court. There came next three knights, one unarmed, with white hair, who addresses king. « Dios os salve, señor, como al principe del mundo que mejor promessa ha hecho si la tener supierdes. » King and queen promise for the mantle and crown which he takes forth from a box to give whatever he may ask or to restore them upon demand.

comme mes seigneurs et mes amis; et comme vous vous donnez à moi, je me donne à vous de cœur fin et loyal. « Voici, maintenant, reprit Gauvain, notre second vœu : Personne ne viendra jamais réclamer devant vous aide et protection qui ne trouve un de nous prêt à défendre sa cause un contre un, et qui ne puisse conter sur celui qu'il désignera pour champion. Il l'emmenera aussi loin qu'il voudra, et si l'on n'en reçoit pas de nouvelles à la fin du mois, chacun de nous ira à sa recherche et emploiera à la quête un an et jour [1]. »

So to the court of Arthur (T. R., II, p. 97), where there was news which made them joyful, but their joy was of short duration, came a maiden « richement vêtue... Trente chevaliers l'accompagnèrent... « Dieu sauve le roi ! Sire vous êtes le prud'homme par excellence, mais j'en excepte un point. » (In T. R., II, p. 52, a knight addresses Arthur in the same words, and ibid., p. 57, the Demoiselle du Lac less courteously speaks to Claudas.) The maiden accuses the queen of treachery and an old knight who accompanies her takes from a box a letter. The charge having been made against the queen, Arthur appoints Candlemas as time for the hearing.

1. T. R., II, p. 335 et al.

To the courts of Lisuarte (Amadis, Bk. I, XXXIII), comes a maiden asking for a don : that she be given two knights who will accompany her. Amadis and Galaor are given her by the queen. Entonces se partieron (Amadis and Galaor) de alli y fueronse á armas, y ...entraron en el camino con la doncella. Assi andubieron por donde la doncella los guiaba hasta ser medio dia pasado que entraron en la floresta... doncella dijo : « Señores, en esta tienda descabalgad y descansareis ; que hoy trajistes gran jornada ». Ellos lo hicieron y hallaron sirvientes que les tomaron las armas... no passo mucho que dieron sobre ellas hasta quince hombres... y entraron por la puerta de la tienda diciendo : « Sed presos, si no muerto sois. — Que quereis ? dijo A., que antes seremos muertos que presos, ende mas de un traidor »... la dueña, tomandoles las manos, se las hizo atar reciamente con una correa.

In T. R., IV, pp. 59, 60 and 61, maiden to whom Gauvain, Lancelot, Galehaut and Hector have made promise arrives and demands its fulfilment. « Gauvain, Lancelot, Hector et Galehaut, s'arment, montent et suivent la pucelle jusqu'aux premières lices de la Roche aux Saisnes... Elle les quitte et laisse ouverte la poterne qu'elle avait su défermer. Nos quatre chevaliers demeurent en aguet... ceux qu'il (Lancelot) venait défendre le saisissent et le font tomber de cheval. Les autres se jettent sur lui, lui prennent son épée et lui crient de se rendre s'il tient à la vie. « Plutôt mourir que demander merci à des traîtres. » On le désarme, on lui lie les mains ; il est transporté dans une forte prison. Les trois autres sont pris dans le même piège ; désarmés, ils sont liés et conduits dans une grande geôle [1].

The remainder of the incident departs completely from this, and we return to the court of Lisuarte for the continuation of our episode.

A., XXXIX. The knight who had left mantle and crown comes to reclaim them, and since they have disappeared demands Oriana. « Ay caballero ! dijo el rey, mucho me habeis pedido » é todos hubieron gran pesar. coger á sus cámaras ». Oriana is put upon a horse and taken away. Is in charge of Arcalaus and four others. Amadis coming to the rescue, « hirió á Arcalaus que delante venia tan duramente que lo derribó en tierra... y hirió á Grumel...uno dellos y (that one) cayó luego muerto, y la lanza quebrada. Despues metió mano á la espada y dejose ir á los otros... por maravilla eran los golpes que daba, y assi le crecia la fuerza y el ardimiento en andar valiente y ligero que le parecia si el campo todo fuesse lleno de caballeros que no le podian durar ni defender ».

de Meleagan, porte à terre le premier qu'il atteint, mais le fer de son glaive reste dans le corps du moribond; il met la main à l'épée, court çà et là, tranche écus, hauberts et heaumes, si bien que tous se tiennent à distance et s'écartent quand il vient à portée... Meleagan à la vue des merveilles... devine que ce doit être Lancelot... Ses chevaliers entourent Lancelot qui les reçoit en faisant rayonner son épée avec plus de promptitude et d'à-propos qu'on n'aurait pu l'attendre de trois ou quatre chevaliers. Les uns fuient dans la forêt ».

While Lancelot thus fights, Meleagan and his men depart with the queen. Lancelot pursuing again loses his horse and Meleagan escapes with the queen.

Not so with our hero. Arcalaus attemps to escape with Oriana, but to save his life is forced to let her go.

The rescue of Oriana by Amadis, and his winning her as his own, seems not to have its origin in the tales of the Arthurian cycle. There is in a poem which has been often suggested as having to do with our story a scene which might have inspired ours. It is that in Amadas et Ydoine. Where Amadas having learned that Ydoine has been carried away flies to her rescue and once she is safe begs for her love. But Ydoine unlike Oriana

Ne li otroie ne consent ;
Ainsi li monstre raisnaulement Raison tant qu'il set bien et voit.
. . . . . .
Biaus dous ami vostre desir
Ferai et tout vostre plaisir
. . . . . .
Icel dezir devés cargier
Tant que l'puissiés sans pecié faire Et a grant joie et à cief traire.

Que nus n'i puisse vilonnie
Noter, ne mal, ne felonie.

At first glance the similarity in the two must appear very slight, but at other times Oriana has promised as does Ydoine in this. « Amigo señor, no vos desconcerteis, que yo haré cierto la promessa que vos doy. » (I, xxx) and in this very scene where she yields says : « Yo haré lo que quereis y vos haced como aunque aqui yerro y pecado parezca no lo sea ante Dios. »

I, xxxiv. King Lisuarte rides into the forest and meets maiden to whom he had promised don; he follows to combat for her, at her request girds on the sword she carried, for the one whom he is to fight cannot die unless he be struck with the lance and sword she brings and the blow dealt by the most honored of the « reino de Londres », « y la espada diera él (caballero) á guardar á una su amiga, cuidando que lo amaba mucho, pero no era assi que muy mortalmente lo desamaba y diomela á mi y la lanza para con que me vengasse del; » In the combat the lance of Lisuarte breaks: « hirieronse por cima de los yelmos,.... la espada quebro luego por cabo de la manzana y cayó el hierro en el suelo. Entonces conosció que era traicion » but making good defense the maiden calls for help, ten knights appear, the king resists as best he can, but one whom he had struck wounds his horse « y el caballero cayó so el caballo y luego dieron todos sobre él... « They disarm him, « echaronle una gruesa cadena á la garganta... y ficieronle cabalgar en un palafren. » He his to be put in prison of Arcalaus.

T. R., IV, pp. 151-153. At Candlemas a delay having been granted to the maiden representing the false Genièvre, Arthur is told by knight that there is a huge boar in the forest, and by knight's advice separates himself from the others.

« Tout à coup il est environné de chevaliers qui l'avertissent de ne pas tenter une résistance inutile. Le roi se voyant trahi lève son épée et résiste de son mieux; mais son cheval mortellement frappé s'affaisse sous lui... lui-même désarmé. On lui attache les mains, on le lève sur un palefroi qui l'emmène d'un pas rapide. »

The detail as to the combat is to be found in another experience of Arthur (cf. Huth Merlin, vol. II, pp. 199-206), where he receives from Morgain a sword which he believes his own, in the combat perceives that it is not and that he has been betrayed « li rois li donne par mi le hyaume si grant coup comme il puet amener... l'espee fu tent et povre, si avint que elle brisa a chelui caup par devant le heut si que li brans en chei sour l'erbe et li poins l'en remest en la main. »

And the story of the sword as told by the maiden in that of Karadoc, T. R., IV, p. 317, who loves blindly maiden who hates him. « Or sa mère (de Karadoc) avait conjuré pour lui une épée qui devait seule avoir la vertu de lui donner le coup mortel et il en avait confié la garde à la discrétion de sa plus cruelle ennemie. D'une fenêtre la pucelle suivait avec intérêt la lutte terrible... elle va chercher l'épée fée, la fait briller aux yeux de Lancelot... la dépose sur la haute marche du degré. Lancelot va la prendre » and Karadoc dies by it.

Lisuarte being prisoner and the knights having gone forth in search of him, Arban de Norgalles alone remaining near queen the remainder of the plot is put into operation by Barsinan. The bravery of Arban de Norgalles recalls that of Yvain de Gaules [1] against the Saxons, upon the king's being made prisoner by Camille and that it may there find its source seems the more probable since there has been such a piecing together of the various incidents of Camille's treason, that of the false Guenevere and Bertolais.

Galaor having with Amadis escaped from the emprisonment into which treachery had brought them, goes to the rescue of Lisuarte. His encounters with knights who judge him a coward (I, XXXVI), remind one of like judgement of Lancelot when he is seeking to save queen — but the reasons are not the same.

1. T. R., IV, p. 62.

Amadis with permission of Oriana goes to aid Briolanja as he had promised her. And as Gauvain innocently roused Guenevere's jealousy by telling her of the damoiselle d Escalot (T. R., V, p. 338), and so angered her that she sent for Bohor and told him she would not again see Lancelot, so Adrian the dwarf in his ignorance told Oriana that Amadis loved Briolanja (I, XL) and she prepared her revenge. When later the queen saw the maiden of Escalot dead, and read the letter she had written, she was convinced, and Oriana in spite of all proofs still could not be content until she heard from Briolanja's own lips the confession that her love had been scorned. Amadis meanwhile goes on his way accompanied by Galaor and Agrajes. They come upon a knight who is guarding a forest for fifteen days but will only combat with lance.

I, XL. A la salida de la floresta vieron un caballero grande todo armado ...y cabe él un escudero que cuatro lanzas le tenia, y... acostó las lanzas á un arbol. » Agrajes goes first to meet him « y fue en tierra tan ligeramente que él fue maravillado de que hubo gran vergüenza y su caballo suelto. Galaor tomo sus armas, el caballo (de G.) en tierra fue con su señor, y quedando Galaor en el suelo, el caballo huyó por el campo... El caballero se reia del... Amadis y su caballo fueron en tierra... y el caballero de la floresta... cabalgó luego muy ligeramente », and unwilling to continue the jousting « movió de alli por la floresta cuanto su caballo lo pudo llevar. Amadis dijo : « mucho me pesara sino supiera quién es aquel caballero ». The maiden says that without a guide it would be impossible to find him, reminds Amadis of his promise to go to aid of Briolanja. Galaor guided by maiden goes in quest of knight.

T. R., III, p. 289. Gauvain, Sagremor, Yvain, Keu, and Giflet see arrive « un écuyer portant sur son épaule une liasse de lances. Il délie le faisceau et dresse les lances autour du pin... De la même forêt arrive un chevalier entièrement armé. » Sagremor goes to meet him « mais dès la première attente il est jeté des arçons. L'inconnu frappe le cheval et le fait galoper à vide du côté de la forêt... Keu raille le pauvre Desrée... mais le chevalier lui répondit en lui faisant mesurer la terre et en chassant son cheval du côté de la fôret ». Giflet et Yvain are also beaten and lose their horses. But before Gauvain has opportunity the knights departs. « Je veux savoir quel est ce chevalier, » and he goes in search of him.

Amadis and Agrajes arrive at castle where Briolanja and her aunt are. « La niña hermosa » is wonderfully beautiful and Amadis asks Agrajes : « Que os paresce de esta doncella ? — Paresceme que si Dios hubo sabor de la hacer hermosa, que muy por entero se cumplió su voluntad. » T. R., V. p. 307. Upon seeing la belle demoiselle, daughter of Pelles, Lancelot himself finds her charms only to be compared with those of the queen. « Que pensez-vous ? dit alors le roi Pelles à Lancelot, de la demoiselle ? — Il me semble que damoiselle ne vis-je oncques si belle. »

A., I, XL. Briolanja á Amadis miraba y paresciale el mas hermoso caballero que nunca viera y por cierto tal era... y en tal punto aquesta vista le causó que de aquella muy fermosa doncella que con tanta aficion le miraba tan amado fue.

I, XLII. Y Briolanja... habiendo temor que los pensamientos tan ahincados y las lágrimas que algunas veces por su rostro veia, no de la flaqueza de su fuerte corazon se causaban mas de ser atormentado, sojuzgado y afligido de otra.

Briolanja habiendo cobrado su reino, ...fue por la parte della requerido que dely de su persona sin ningun intervalo señor podria ser, mas esto sabido por Amadis dió enteramente á conoscer que las angustias y dolores con las muchas lagrimas derramadas por su señora Oriana, no sin gran lealtad las pasaba.

T. R., V, p. 298. Lancelot « fu de totes bieautez si garnis que nus ne poist estre plus biaus. Lors commença à le regarder la suer en chevalier qui estoit si bele... Elle regarda Lancelot... et voit en lui tant de biaute... Meintenant la fiert Amors si tranchanment qu'ele tresaut tote. »

T. R., III, p. 225. Elle avait en soupçon que le cœur du prisonnier n'était plus à prendre.

Gran Conquista, I, CLXI. « Cuando la doncella vió que por Gudufre de Bullon habia la tierra cobrado, cayó á los piés, é pidióle merced que della é de cuanto habia feciese á su voluntad ; é él respondió que gelo gradescia mucho, mas que aquella lid no tomara él por amor de mujer ni por cobdicia de haber ni de tierra, salvo tan solamente por Dios é por el derecho que él creia firmemente que ella tenia. Mas, pues que ella habia cobrado su tierra, no demandaba él mas, é con aquello era él pagado. »

Quant la damoisele ot sa terre recoillie,
Et envers Godefroi dolcement s'umilie,
Son castel et s'onor li met en sa baillie « Bele, fait Godefroi, par Dieu le fil Marie, Por or, ne por argent ne l'commenchoi mie ;
Ja n'en auroi del vostre vaillissant une alie. »

That the battle which preceded these was similar will be seen.

Returning to Amadis, we have the variants of the preceding response made to Briolanja. Without discussion of them let us see what their sources may be.

I, XI. « La doncella doliendose que aquella su señora demandó á Amadis para cumplimiento de su promessa que de una torre no saliesse hasta haber un hijo ó hija en Briolanja... y que Amadis por no faltar la palabra en la torre se pusiera, como le fue demandado, donde no queriendo haber juntamiento con Briolanja, perdiendo el comer y el dormir, en gran peligro de su vida fue puesto. Lo que al sabido en la corte del rey Lisuarte como en tal estrecho estaba, su señora Oriana porque no se perdiesse le envió a demandar que hiciesse lo que la doncella le demandaba ; y que Amadis con esta licencia, considerando no poder por otra guisa de alli salir ni ser su palabra verdadera, que tomando por su amiga aquella hermosa reina hubo en ella un hijo y una hija ».

T. R., V, p. 300. — The same maiden who above fell in love with Lancelot — and who, L. being poisoned, has been caring for him, « ne voulait le guérir s'il ne s'engageait à la payer de la même tendresse... Lancelot pour rien au monde n'eût voulu faire à la reine la moindre infidélité. » Lionel having sought to persuade him on the ground that should he die the queen would also, goes to Kamalot and returns with the response of the queen : « Elle vos envoie plus de cent mile saluz, et vos mande, se onques l'amastes, que por vos delivrer de mort et li ausi, façois la volenté à la pucele ; et se vos ce ne fetes, vos avés s'amor perdue. » Il fait donc dire aussitôt à la demoiselle qu'il veut être son chevalier, celle-ci ne demandait rien de plus : son amour était dégagé de tout desir charnel [1].

1. Livre d'Agravain. This relation was first noted by Wilhelm Foerster in his review of Braunfels.

Whence then came the brutal element in our story ? One though not entirely satisfactory solution presents itself. That same beautiful daughter of the roi Pelles, mentioned above to whom Lancelot is brought by ruse, that by him she may have the son who alone can deliver the country from the adventures, may have furnished the inspiration. This is rendered more probable by its close connection in the « Livre d'Agravain » to these other definite imitations. Robbed of the Grail motive we would have the element so hard to understand in the Briolanja story.

But our compiler was in advance of his story. The combat itself between Amadis with Agrajes to second him, and Abiseos and his sons, is both as to reason for being and actual happenings closely allied to that of Gudufre de Bullon, of which we saw the close above. As (Amadis, I, XLII) Abiseos holds unjustly the land of his niece Briolanja, so Guion de Montefalcon that of the maiden his cousin (Gran Conquista, I, CIV-CXI). The angry words of Darasion son of Abiseos are in content the same as those of Guion, those of Amadis offering to give up the battle if Abiseos would repent and give up lands, since otherwise it would be sin, are as near those of Gudufre. And the incidents of the combat (save that in Amadis it is not of one against one) are closely alike, even to the cutting off by Amadis of Abiseos' arm « que cortado todo se lo derribó á tierra, » to that by Gudufre of the hand of Guion, « de manera que luego cayó en tierra ».

Vencida la batalla... no quiso Amadis desarmarse hasta saber si algo de entrevalo que á Briolanja para cobrar el reino habia que lo estorbasse; mas luego llegó alli un gran señor... y aquel hizo cierto á Amadis... que no temiesse ni pensasse sino que todos estaban en aquella lealtad y vasallaje que debian contra aquella su señora.

Cuando Gudufre hobo tajado la cabeza á Guion... demandó... si habia de facer mas ó si la doncella sino habia quito su heredamiento; é ellos dijeron que no habia mas de facer, é que la doncella de alli adelante debia haber la heredad quitamente.

The battle over Amadis and Agrajes remain to be healed ot their wounds. Meanwhile Galaor (I, XLI), follows the maiden who has promised to guide him to where he can find the knight of the forest who had jousted successfully against him, and his brother, and cousin, the knight is in a castle on an island. Only one knight could go to it at a time. The lady of the castle keeps the knight there and that he may be content has found this way of bringing knights to combat with him. He sounds a horn which he finds there, ladies come forth to see the combat and then the knight appears. The combat between them is of the most terrible and finally the lady of the castle, seeing the danger of her knight, begs Galaor to desist. He learns that this is Don Florestan, his brother. This is but another version of the combat between Balaain and Balaan (Merlin, II, p. 47-56). That also took place on an island where the lady of the castle had made the knight promise to remain. He instituted the custom of combatting with every knight who dared try the adventure. As in the other, before seeing the knight the one arriving saw the ladies who were gathered to see the battle. The account of the fierce combat to a certain point is the same, and a fatal outcome for Don Florestan at least would have been the end but for the lady who in this case arrives in time.

The combat of don Florestan with Galaor introduces him into the story, the account of Perion's adventure with his mother (I, XLII) brings up that of Ban with the daughter of Agravain [1], but there it is enchantment which stills Ban's unwillingness to disregard the obligations of hospitality; here the maiden threatens to kill herself. There are points of resemblance also with various Lancelot episodes, among them the endeavor to escape from her caresses and her reproaches [2].

Florestan and Galaor are conducted by a knight to the fuente de tres Olmos — where were three maidens — and high in an elm a dwarf. Florestan asks Galaor to leave the next adventure to him. They come to the house of a knight who is very sad, because another has in his power the maiden beloved. Numerous instances of the same type are found in the earlier tales [1]. The development of this is, as will be seen, taken from another and quite different story. The first of the maidens asks him to take her away, he agrees, the dwarf calls, and a knight arrives whom he overcomes, and who accords him the maiden, saying « maldita sea ella y el dia en que la yo vi ». For the second maiden, who accuses him of not daring to take her, he also combats successfully, and the third, in this instance fighting a « caballero muy grande » and whom — he is warned by the maiden — he would do better to avoid. This one he slays, and this third maiden he gives to the knight who brought them there. The other two he and Galaor conduct to the castle of an aunt of the maidens. This episode is another version of that of the Beau Valet [2], who frees first a maiden under a sycamore tree guarded by two knights. He overcomes the one and the other yields without combat; then retiring to the pavillon where he had left the « grand chevalier » he overcomes him and is accorded the maiden he guards, with the words « que maudite soit l'heure ou je la pris en garde ». He sends the two maidens to the queen by the knight who accompanies him, and with Galaor goes on his way to Sobradisa where they find Amadis.

aquella ó aquel que primero comenzó amar ». This, as Paulin Paris long ago pointed out [1], cannot but recall the Val sans retour, or Val des faux amants (T. R., IV, p. 238). There, as the name indicates, it was not a question of entering but of departing, for Morgain « jeta sur le val un enchantement dont la vertu était de retenir à toujours tout chevalier qui aurait fait à son amie la moindre infidélité d'action ou de pensée ». And in the Jeux de Guinebaut (T. R., II, 197-99) the enchantment is to remain « jusqu'au moment où surviendra un fils de roi qui n'aura jamais faussé ses amours et qui joindra à cette rare vertu celle d'être le plus preux chevalier de son temps ». The enchantments of the Insula Firme have been instituted by Apolidon of Greece, before leaving the island, at the request of Grimanesa who « rogó que dejasse alli por su gran saber como en los venideros tiempos aquel lugar señoreado no fuesse sino por persona que assi en fortaleza de armas como en lealtad de amores y de sobrada hermosura á ellos entrambos paresciesse ». (Amadis, II, Introd.).

For the Val des faux amants Morgain la fée was responsible, and for the Jeux, Guinebaut, who did this for the pleasure of his lady. But what in these corresponded otherwise to other castle conditions, as combats, in the Insola Firme has reached a far fuller development. The inscriptions found in the Amadis are not in these others — unless we except the letters upon a cross in one version of the Val sans retour. But if the inscriptions are lacking in these accounts, they are not in others of the Round Table. Whe have them in the Saint Grail (T. R., I, p. 222) — and is it chance ? one of the first examples is in connection with the Ile Tournoyante — and very like they are in purport, as those Nascien sees upon the ship of Solomon, on and by the sword and crown, and in the Livre d'Artus upon the sword which Arthur drew forth from the stone. In the Merlin (Huth, vol. II, p. 67) we find that when the knights of the Round Table rose from their places the name of each was written on his chair, and in the adventures, as that of the Douloureuse Garde, we find continually such inscriptions, sometimes false, but always the work of an enchanter. So we have models in abundance for our inscriptions. But the Insola Firme has beautiful buildings, statues made in the semblance of people and exactly like them, voices and wonderful music. Even for this there is no lack of examples. We have in Arthur images of the thirteen kings made to bow before him and with lighted candles (Huth Merlin, I). At the Douloureuse Garde is the figure of a giant which would fall at the moment when the one attacking should have reached the second wall (T. R., III, p. 155). In the Tristan we have the Salle aux Images and this is on an island [1] close to the shore, and to be reached when the tide was low. (Ours too it may be remembered is on such an island.) And here Tristan having conquered the giant, as did Apollidon upon reaching the Insola Firme, finding there a room hollowed out in a rock had made images of Iseult and himself, and of Brangain and others, and upon rings, cups, etc., are inscriptions. All this Tristan does without aid of enchantment. Whether the « arc de pierre au milieu de la voûte » has any significance for us it might be hazardous to attempt to consider, and yet one is tempted to see in this and the rooms with their wonders, in the images, a model of our own. See the image of the queen Isolt, « une image dont les proportions et la figure étaient rendues avec tant d'art que personne à la voir n'aurait pu douter que la vie ne fût dans tous ses membres », and then two images which Apollidon placed in his palace, « dos figuras á semejanza suya y de su amiga, tales que vivas parecian, las caras propiamente como las suyas y su estatura ». The rooms « ricas de estraña labor », even the perfumes may be memories of the Salle aux Images. One may mention in passing « las fechuras de la cámara » of the Gran Conquista, I, chap. LXXVI, where the image raised its hand to indicate approval or disapproval.

II, IX. As to the enchantments, the blows received from unseen hands by don Florestan and don Galaor, they are not new here. Florestan « sintióse herir de todas partes con lanzas y espadas de tan grandes golpes y tan espessos que le semejaba que ningun hombre los podia sufrir... y cayó que no pudo ir adelante... no tenia mas sentido que si muerto fuesse, y luego fue lanzado fuera del sitio. » So with Galaor and Agrages. But Amadis coming prays for and then « paró un poco y dijo : Oh mi señora Oriana ! de vos me viene á mi todo esfuerzo y ardimiento : membrad vos, señora, de mi, en esta sazon en que tanto vuestra sabrosa membranza me es menester. Y passandose adelante sintióse herir de todas partes duramente y llegó al padron de mármol y, pasando del, paresciole que todos los del mundo eran á lo herir, y oia gran ruido de voces... pero el, con aquella cuita no dejaba de ir adelante, cayendo á las veces de manos y otras de rodillas ; y la espada con que muchos golpes diera habia perdido de la mano, y andaba colgada de una correa que no la podia cobrar ; assi llegó á la puerta de la camara y vió una mano que le tomó por la suya y lo metió dentro... y como dentro de la cámara fue... él quedó descansado, y cobrada en toda

Lancelot and Yvain come to Ascalon le Ténébreux (T. R., IV, pp. 279-282). Mess. Yvain goes first. « Au tiers du chemin il reçoit sur le heaume tant et de si rudes coups qu'il a beau tourner son écu... il chancelle, les pieds lui manquent, il tombe enfin privé de sentiment... les volées de coups ne s'arrêtent pas ; plus de six fois il tombe avant de regagner la porte ; il n'a plus la force de lever le pied et reste étendu sur le degré... Lancelot, d'une voix basse : « Ma souveraine dame, je me recommande à vous. » Puis il se signe, descend les degrés, saisit la chaîne et avance résolument... Bientôt il est criblé de coups sur les bras, la tête et les reins ; il sent le fer des lances, des haches et des épées... Il tombe à genoux, il se relève, frappe à droite, à gauche... Arrivé aux deux tiers du chemin il fléchit encore sur les genoux ; tout malmené qu'il soit il ne lâche pas la chaîne, si bien qu'enfin il arrive au dernier pas de l'aventure... Il tombe renversé, mais ses bras en mesurant la terre touchent le seuil ; la porte s'ouvre d'elle-même. Aussitôt, une immense clarté inonde le moutier .. Peu à peu il reprend ses esprits... Une foule nombreuse les entoure, transportée de reconnaissance et de joie. On rend grâce au vainqueur comme s'il eût été Dieu lui-même...

fuerza... agradesció a su señora Oriana aquella honra que por su causa ganara. A esta sazon todos los del castillo que las voces oyeran... comenzaron á decir en alta voz : Señor, vemos cumplido, á Dios loor, lo que tanto deseado teniamos. »

Un vieillard le conduit devant une tombe... A peine l'a-t-il vue qu'il se trouve guéri et dispos comme avant de tenter l'épreuve.

We have seen that (I, xi) Oriana, thinking Amadis untrue to her, planned revenge. She sends him by Durin a letter in which she forbids him ever again to appear before her (II, i). We have seen that Guenevere sent a like message to Lancelot by Bohor (T. R., V, p. 338-340). Bohor recalls to her the number of knights who have suffered through being falsely suspected by women aud adds : « Et se vous voliez garder des anciens devins... assez vos en porroie mostrer qui furent honiz par femme. Regardez en l'estoire David... Salemons... Sanson Fortin... Hector et Achilles... et plus de cent mille avec eus ». So our author (II, v) : « Pues si le fuesse preguntada la causa de tal destrozo, que respondiera ? Con otra cosa salvo que la ira y la saña de una flaca muger, poniendo en su favor aquel fuerte Hercules, aquel valiente Sanson, aquel sabio Virgilio, no olvidando entre ellos al rey Salomon... »

For the idea of the letter we must look elsewhere. Iseult hearing of Tristan's marriage, sends him a letter in which however she begs him to return, and this, together with the letter of Iseult to Kahedin which caused the despair of Tristan already cited as furnishing a model for portions of the Amadis, had a share in the development of our history. Iseult, writing her letter sends it secretly by Brangain, Oriana hers by Durin. That little details are the same, it may be sufficient to state. In an old Spanish version of the Tristan, as yet accessible only in the fragment published by Monaci [1], there is an interesting resemblance in the wording of the passage there given which is the very one in which Iseult sends her letter.

A., II, I. Acabada la carta cerrola... e hablando con un doncel... le mandó que no holgasse hasta llegar... II, II. Durin... partió luego en un palafren muy andador.

Facsimili 6. « Echa ꝛ sellada esta carta la reyna llamo a Brangen... ꝛ mandola que... partiesse de ally aquella noche... le dio la reyna ꝛ su palafren bien andante.

Amadis upon receiving the letter does not go mad, as Tristan and Lancelot on similar occasions [1], but leaving the Insola Firme, after the scenes of lament, which we have treated earlier, goes with a hermit to Peña Pobre — where also is found the scene with the maidens (A., II, VIII), — imitated from the Tristan [2].

But we with our authors have anticipated events. Amadis (II, II), in his grief remembered a dream which, to fully see the relationship, one must place with another and later dream (II, V.), and follow by the hermit's explanation.

II, II. « Que aquella noche pasada soñara... y alderredor de mucha gente que hacia grande alegria, y que se llegaba entre ellos un hombre que le decia: « comed desto que en esta bujeta traigo », y que le hacia comer dello; y paresciale gustar la mas amarga cosa que hallarse podria, y sintiendose con ello muy desmayado y desconsolado... pareciale que la gente que antes alegre estaba se tornaba tan triste que él habia duelo della... venia á él un hombre viejo... y decíale unas palabras en lenguage que no las entendia, y con esto dispertara ; y agora le pares-sanguigno leggiermente; la quale io riguardando molto intentivamente, conobbi ch'era la donna delle salutè... E nell'una delle mani mi parea che questi tenesse una cosa, la quale ardesse tutta, e pareami che mi dicesse queste parole : Vide cor tuum. E quando egli era stato alquanto, pareami che disvegliasse questa che dormia; e tanto si sforzava per suo ingegno che le facea mangiare quella cosa che in mano gli ardeva, la quale ella mangiava dubitosamente. Appresse ciò, poco dimorava che la sua letizia si convertia in amarissimo pianto; e cosi piangendo si ricogliea questa donna nelle sue braccia, e con essa mi parea che se ne gisse verso il cielo, ond'io sostenea si grande angoscia, che lo mio deboletto sonno non potè sostenere, anzi si ruppe e fui disvegliato... Lo verace giudizio del detto sogno non fu vedùto allora per alcuno, ma ora è manifesto alli più semplici... Tristan too had dreams of similar character (Analyse §§ 460, 471) : in one he sees the Joyeuse Garde and Iseut burned. As with Amadis the dreams are easily to be explained by the events to come. That they may have furnished the primary element from which the form we have was developed, is possible.

That the Lancelot is never long forgotten, the words of Amadis to Gandalin clearly show.

II, III. Sabete que no tengo seso, ni corazon, ni esfuerzo, que todo es perdido cuando perdí la merced de mi señora, que della y no de mi me venia todo.

T. R., IV, p. 347. Je sens que j'ai perdu les biens qui étaient en moi; comme elle était venue, ma prouesse s'en est allée. Elle était empruntée, je la devais à la vertu d'autrui.

Galaor, Florestan and Agrajes go in search of Amadis, such a quest as was frequently [1] undertaken by the Round Table companions: they separate agreeing to return to the court of Lisuarte « en el dia de san Juan »; their adventures since their quest was unsuccessful the author spares us. Gandalin, however, on the sixth day came to the fountain where Amadis had left his armor [2] and there heard from maidens that Guilan el Cuidador had found the armor. We have here the story of Galehaut who, having left Gauvain, Lionel and Yvain, continues the quest of Lancelot alone and comes upon his shield.

A., I, v. é cuando Guilan vió el escudo por quien preguntais, hubo gran pesar, y descendiendo de su caballo dijo, que no era para estar assi el escudo del mejor caballero del mundo; y alzólo del suelo llorando de corazon y pusolo en aquel brazo de aquel arbol y dijonos que lo guardassemos... á la mañana dió el guarnecimiento á los escuderos y el ciño la espada, tomó el escudo.

T. R., IV, pp. 332-5 (Galehaut) vit dames et chevaliers formant de joyeuses danses autour d'un écu suspendu à la branche d'un pin... il le reconnut pour avoir été porté par Lancelot... il demande pourquoi l'on faisait tant d'honneur à cet écu. « Sire, répond-il, parce qu'il a appartenu au meilleur chevalier du monde. « Galehaut tend le bras jusqu'à la branche où pendait l'écu, le prend et le passe à l'un de ses écuyers [3].

Guilan returning to court with the armor has on varied occasions to defend it and comes to a river « y el agua era grande é habia en el una puente de madera tan ancha como pudiesse venir un caballero y ir otro ». Upon the bridge is his cousin Ladasin who with his horse falls into the water. This seems but one of the very frequent bridge incidents. As Rajna has said, « Se non che in ogni romanzo si vede qualche giostrante cadere nell'acqua, ed anche affogarvi [1] ». That for this we are undoubtedly indebted to the Tristan Rajna has clearly shown [2]. I shall give only such lines as most clearly show the relationship. In the one case Guilan, in the other Tristan come to the bridge and witness a combat.

This scene it should be noted Rajna considers imitated from the Tristan (cf. also p. 89, n. 1, 2, 3, 4); while this may well be the more exact accord with the Lancelot story would indicate that here as elsewhere not one but two or more episodes were known to the Amadis redactor.

A. I, VII. y el agua era grande y habia en él una puente de madera tan ancha como pudiesse venir un caballero y ir otro... una torre... estaba enmedio del río que era hermosa fortaleza y pasaban á ella por una puente de piedra.

qui lui ferme le passage ». Gauvain falls with his horse into the mud, is saved by a knight who comes and proves to be his cousin Yvain [1].

The grief of Oriana upon hearing from Durin of the despair of Amadis, her words as to her own death, the consolation given by Mabilia and the doncella de Denamarcha, and the going of the latter in search of Amadis (II, VI), may be compared with the despair of Iseult, her words of her death, Brangena's consolations, and the going of Brangena to seek for Tristan. (Analyse 82-3). Brangena does not return with news — but brings back Tristan's harp. Iseult though unhappy is somewhat consoled by the thought that he is still living (Analyse 84) and commences a lay. Oriana hearing the maiden sing the song which Amadis had made is somewhat comforted (II, VIII).

But it is in the last of the Peña Pobre incidents that we have the close imitation of the Tristan.

Amadis, II, ch. VIII. hizo esta cancion con gran saña que tenia .. pues habiendo hecho esta cancion... estando una noche debajo de aquellos árboles como solia oyó tañer unos instrumentos alli cerca muy dulcemente ...vido dos doncellas cabe la fuente que los instrumentos tenian en sus manos, y oyólas tañer y cantar. »... Beltenebros preguntó á las doncellas que ya tomaban sus instrumentos » — He teaches them his lay.

The doncella de Denamarcha in search of Amadis comes to the Peña Pobre (II, IX). « A esta sazon Beltenebros estaba en la fuente, debajo de los árboles donde aquella noche albergaba, y era su salud tan allegado al

Wishing to comfort Tristan she brings his harp and sings at his request lays which he had composed and before singing the third makes him promise to compose another — which he does the following day. « Tristan commence en pleurant le Lai Mortel. fonce dans le bois en criant comme une beste forcenée. »

Once Amadis has Oriana's letter there are general resemblances, as also in his return and rejoining Oriana, to the return of Tristan with Brangian, as Iseut « devise comment il porroit a lui venir (Analyse 75 a) Qe vous diroie-je ?... ne demandez mie la joie qui entr'eulz fu faite. » So our author : « Mas quién será aquel que baste á recontar ? »

To the court of Lisuarte comes Corisanda seeking the recreant Florestan as many ladies of the Arthurian tales.

In the meantime Lisuarte finds himself upon the eve of a battle with Cildadan de Irlanda, « y la razon era por ciertas parias que aquel no era obligado á pagar á los reyes de la Gran Bretaña, y que eran convenidos que si el rey venciesse fuesen las parias dobladas y el rey Cildadan quedasse por su vasallo, y si fuesse vencido quedasse quito de todo para siempre. » The connection of Ireland and the « parias » cannot but recall the Morhoult (cf. Analyse §§ 25, 28, et passim).

And Lisuarte being at table, a strange knight enters and challenges him in the name of five powerful leaders who will aid Cildadan unless certain conditions be fulfilled, among them the giving up of Oriana. The king responds that he will war but never consent to such peace. The various wars of Lisuarte are modelled on those of Arthur, in this case there are six against him, as in the early uprising of the feudal kings, and just such a message as this did Rion send to Arthur (T. R. II, pp. 320-22) asking, it is true, in that case for his beard [1].

Florestan's anger against Landin who seeks Amadis and his desire to fight with him recalls Lionel, ever eager in the defense of Lancelot.

For the introduction here of another daughter of king Lisuarte with her little maidens who come, at the king's command, to dance and sing, as well as for the pretty story of her demand that Amadis be her knight, I have as yet found no definite source [2].

Amadis returning from la Peña Pobre, had various encounters which have few if any points to distinguish them from hosts of others. He arrives before the tents (or pavilion) of Leonoreta « hija del rey Lisuarte »; there is forced by her knights against his will to joust. They propose to take his horse. He conquers them one after another, taking from them their horses, which he sends to Leonoreta (II, XII). There is a like adventure of Yvain who jousts with knight who has sworn to let neither knight nor maiden pass before his pavilion without taking the horse and giving it to his lady. Yvain conquers, and gives horse to the maiden who has accompanied him (T. R., V, pp. 273-74). Beltenebros later saves these knights from the giants who are taking them away with Leonoreta and her maidens. There seem here vague memories of different exploits of Lancelot and Gauvain, the latter having become the chevalier des Pucelles, but not definite accord [3].

To the court of Lisuarte comes an old squire Macandon who for sixty years has been seeking to find one who could make him knight. A conjecture without possibility of definite proof is that the old knight Brannor le Brun (Analyse 620-3) may have suggested the idea of an aged squire.

3. Cf. Gauvain's defense of the Dame de Nohan, T. R., III, pp. 191-192.

A. II, XIII. The sword which Macandon takes from the large casket he bears is described as « la mas estraña que nunca se vió, que la vaina della era de dos tablas verdes como color de esmeralda, y era de huesso tan claras que la oja del espada se parescia dentro ; mas no tal como de las otras que la media se mostraba tan clara y limpia que mas no lo podia ser, y la otra mitad tan ardiente como un fuego : el guarnimiento della y la cinta en que andaba todo era del mesmo huesso de la vaina hecha en muchos pedazos juntados con tornillos de muy fino oro, de guisa que muy bien como otra cinta se podia ceñir... Rey, esta espada no la puede sacar de la vaina sino el caballero que mas que a ninguno en el mundo á su amiga amare, y cuando en la mano deste tal fuere, la mitad que agora arde será tornada tan limpia y clara como la otra media que paresce, y assi la hoja parescerá de una manera. Agora me decid, dijo el rey, como este fuego tan vivo desta media espada no quema la vaina. Esso vos diré : sabed que entre Tartaria y India hay un mar tan caliente que hierve assi como el agua sobre el fuego y es todo verde, y dentro de aquel mar se crian unas serpientes... y tienen un hueso desde la cabeza hasta la cola,... y porque fue criado en aquella mar ferviente ningun otro fuego lo puede quemar [1]. »

In a portion of the Saint-Graal already cited, and which other examples will show was undoubtedly before the eyes of one of our compilers (T. R. I. pp. 222-3 ; 234-5), Nascien entering the ship of Solomon saw « une épée qui jetait grande clarté, et à demi tirée du fourreau. La poignée était faite d'une pierre qui semblait offrir la réunion de toutes les couleurs... La poignée de l'épée était faite de deux côtes, fournies l'une par le serpent... qu'on trouve surtout dans le pays de Calédonie ; quand on la touche on devient insensible à l'ardeur du soleil... L'autre côte venait d'un poisson de grandeur médiocre,... qu'on trouve dans le fleuve d'Euphrate. » Inscriptions read « Le privilège de m'employer n'appartiendra qu'à un seul, lequel surpassera en bonté tous les autres hommes qui sont nés ou à naître », and upon the blade « Que nul ne soit assez hardi pour achever de me tirer, s'il ne sait mieux frapper que personne,... le fourreau, dont il ne put reconnaître la véritable matière, était de la couleur d'une feuille de rose... Et Nascien ayant voulu voir encore si les deux côtes de l'épée étaient semblables... tourna la lame dans l'autre sens. Il vit qu'elle était de couleur de sang ». This had been made by Solomon — as the other by Apolidon.

1. Cf. T. R., II, pp. 104-5. Arthur's sword « elle jette une si grande clarté qu'on eût cru voir allumés trente cierges. »

And before going on to the other incidents we may here call attention to the fact that the name of the father of Macandon is Ganor — the name of the duke in the Saint-Graal who built « la Tour du Jugement ou des Merveilles (qui) brûle d'un feu permanent », which may be la Torre Bermeja, mentioned later in Amadis.

The « tocado de flores », half so beautiful and fresh and the other half withered, which can only become fresh when put upon the head of a lady or maiden who loves as greatly as the knight who can pull the sword from its sheath, as Rajna has pointed out (Fonti, p. 579) is of the same family of tests as the cup from which only the husband whose wife was faithful could drink, and of the mantle which fitted the wives who were true, and the flowers which faded as soon as touched by a faithless hand. What need to say that while none of the others succeeded, Beltenebros and Oriana in this test showed themselves the greatest of lovers. The different attempts made to draw the sword forth are those of Arthur, Lancelot, and others. The mocking words of Macandon and those addressed to him recall others — as when Bertolais the old knight offers battle (T. R., IV, pp. 207-8), Dodinel says to the king: « Sire, j'ai trouvé le chevalier qui pourra se mesurer avec le souteneur de la demoiselle : c'est Charas de Quimper, hautement renommé d'armes avant que votre père ne fût armé chevalier. Ces mots font éclater de rire tous ceux qui les entendent. » Dragonis to Macandon : « si vos por el cabo desta prueba vos armais caballero, no sereis tan niño que se vos no acuerde. Todos rieron de lo que Dragonis dijo. »

The encounter with Arcalaus at this point, his demand that Oriana be brought to him, Oriana's frights, his order to Lindoraque to take the « tocado » for Madasima ; the death of Lindoraque and Arcalaus's loss of his hand recall in a confused way the earlier encounter with him as he is carrying Oriana away and also various and familiar Arthurian incidents.

To the demand of Enil that he be made knight upon the eve of the battle with Cildadan and the disinclination of Beltenebros to make him so we find the usual conversation between knights and squires.

A., II, xv. Enil: Señor, demandovos que me hagais caballero, y que rogueis al rey que me meta en el cuento de los cien caballeros que uno le falta. — Amigo... no entre en tu corazon comenzar tan gran hecho como este será y tan peligroso. E yo no lo digo por no te hacer caballero, mas porque á ti te conviene comenzar por otros mas ligeros hechos.

T. R., IV, pp. 333-334. Sire, veuillez me faire chevalier, je vous aiderai dans ce pressant besoin. — Non, répond Galehaut, j'aurai honte de te donner la colée pour un tel motif. Je t'armerai plus tard et avec plus d'honneur.[1].

The arrangement in the battles, the order of knights, all again recalls the battles of Arthur, and Cildadan does Galehaut. Are not the « cien caballeros » a memory of le Roi des cent chevaliers. So Cildadan's size recalls Galehaut and his friendship later for Galaor leads to the same conclusion.

In the battle with Cildadan the great deeds of Beltenebros may be likened to those of Arthur aiding Leodagan, and of Lancelot aiding Arthur. The giant's attempt to carry off Lisuarte is evidently that of one who did, thus carry away Gauvain.

A., II, xv. « Madanfabul fue derecho al rey con tanta braveza que los que con el estaban no fueron poderosos de se lo defender... y echole el brazo sobre el pescuezo, y tan recio le apretó que desapoderado de toda su fuerza lo arrancó de la silla y iba con él á las naos. »

T. R., IV, p. 211. « Il (Gauvain) est soulevé, retenu par le milieu du corps et placé en travers du cheval aussi facilement que si l'inconnu avait eu affaire à un enfant. Les trois compagnons se lèvent pour l'arrêter, mais l'inconnu s'éloigne. »

Galaor was dangerously wounded in this battle, as Urganda

had predicted, and there arrived twelve maidens who asked to take him away as his only hope and putting him and Cildadan in their boat went their way, « alzando las velas partieron de la ribera á gran priessa. » So in La Mort d'Arthur there came ladies who took the seriously wounded Arthur and put him in their boat and « l'esquif s'éloigne rapidement ». But Galaor and Cildadan have not disappeared for ever from view, as did Arthur. The former awakening from his sleep finds himself in what seems a prison, and is told by a maiden that she has been told to put poison in his wounds. She puts soothing ointment instead. Gauvain (T. R., IV, p. 263), when made prisoner by Karadoc, has the experience only suggested here, for the mother of Karadoc put in his wounds what would irritate and poison them without being fatal [1]. Other incidents of their sojourn, as the companionship of two young maidens (XVI), might have found their origin in any of numerous like incidents in the Round Table. The part of Urganda here is again that of Merlin [2].

Oriana still unable to free herself from all jealousy of Briolanja upon meeting her and seeing her beauty is constrained to question her and Briolanja answers as did the Dame.

The coming of Urganda to the court of Lisuarte, while much elaborated (II, XVII), is based upon the various appearances of the Dame du Lac at the court of Arthur [1]. Sufficient to note here a few details.

A., II, XVII. Una dueña de paños blancos vestida... « Señor... (soy) yo Urganda la desconocida... vengo á vos como al mejor rey del mundo.

T. R., III, p. 122. Elle était vêtue d'un merveilleux samit blanc... « Sire, Dieu vous bénisse comme le meilleur roi du monde... on m'appelle la Dame du Lac.

Urganda wishing to talk freely with Oriana puts the other maidens to sleep as Merlin put whole households [2]. In her words to Oriana we have words of the Dame du Lac to Genièvre.

A., I, XVII. « Os hizo amar á aquel que sobre todos los que honra y prez tienen y procuran, luce como el dia sobre las tinieblas; del cual... sin duda podeis segura estar de ser vos aquella que mas que su propia vida ama; desto debeis, mi señora, rescibir gran gloria en ser señor sobre aquel que por su merescimiento del mundo todo merescia ser señor. »

In the combat of Amadis with Ardan Canileo (II, XVIII), in which by single combat will be decided the possession of an island and the freedom of a maiden — there is again the stolen sword motive already employed. The maiden who came as messenger gained entrance to the room where Amadis kept his arms and carried his sword away under her mantle. That it has disappeared is discovered by Gandalin, and Amadis replaces it by the one he firs. carried. The scabbard fortunately in this case, as Lisuarte notices, has not been taken, for having it one will not suffer from great heat or cold. That of Arthur also, an enchanted one which prevented blood flowing from his wounds, had been stolen [1]. In this, as in the Arthur incidents (and it may be noted that in the Merlin as here the story is repeated) and in the Lisuarte imitation, the sword carried by the hero breaks; Amadis defends himself with shield, finally regains the sword and kills Ardan Canileo. In this combat we have again the scene at the window, but in this case when Oriana unable to look upon the combat withdraws, Amadis presses the battle the more fiercely. Another detail, the « reliquias » which Oriana sends to Amadis to wear in the combat, and which he had earlier given her, recalls the « drueries » often given at such a time, even on occasion when no sentiment had entered into the consideration, as in the case of the giving of them to Gauvain by the Dame de Roestoc [2].

That Amadis should continue in such favor was impossible were the history to be continued [3]. At this point nothing stands in his way, he might well, having at different times saved the kingdom of Lisuarte, ask for the hand of Oriana. We have had jealousy upon her part to keep him away, we have had him in all danger. Nothing now would serve as obstacle but that he lose favor with the king. This Lancelot and Tristan had done, the former not until late however, the motive there could not be employed here, but the means well could : there might well be jealousy of one so successful, and so the barons who feel it influence Lisuarte, as in Tristan, charging Amadis with desire to become all powerful in the land. The case is again one of suggestion rather than imitation. At this moment Amadis asks of the king that the island of Mongaza, which he had won by his victory over Ardan Canileo, be given to Madasima and Galbanes. The king refuses, saying that he has given it to Leonoreta, and showing his ill-will toward Amadis. Amadis then with his friends comes before the king to take leave of him, saying « no me puedo despedir de vasallo, pues que lo nunca fui vuestro... Mas despidome de aquel gran deseo que yo de os servir y pagar tenia. »

Lancelot when judgement had been brought against the queen (T. R., IV, p. 171), said : « Sire, j'ai été votre chevalier, compagnon de la Table Ronde; cela par votre grâce, dont je vous remercie. Je vous demande de m'en tenir quitte. »

So Amadis with many knights sets out for the Insola Firme, where Briolanja had gone to try the adventures. The account of some of the wonders which Briolanja witnessed there would seem composed of bits from experiences of Lancelot and Gauvain and of strange dreams various ones have had, all combined by our master workman into one fabulous succession [1].

In the account of Oriana's alarm, the like circumstances, and the counsel and aid of Mabilia, and the Doncella de Denamarcha (II, XXI), we find simply retold, though with interesting variations, the story of Elisena.

For the continued madness of king Lisuarte, the cruel counsels of his evil advisers, his threat to behead Madasima and her maidens; the consequent coming from the Insola Firme of twelve knights as champions for the maidens, (II, XXI) the conspiracy of Bertolais and the false Genièvre, (T. R., IV, 148-204) certainly is drawn upon, as it was for Amadis's farewell to the king, and incidents leading up to it. So the discovery of the treachery (A., III, Introduction).

EPISODES OF BOOK III

Having started for Gaula with Bruneo de Bonamar and their squires, Amadis comes with them to the Insola Triste (III, 1) whose very name recalls the Chastel des Pleurs to which Tristan came with Iseult, and not the name alone. Here as there the evil customs originated with a giant who hated Christians. Here no knight or lady comes who is not killed or made prisoner; there « on emprisonne les voyageurs, qui passent le reste de leurs jours à pleurer leur sort ». The remainder of the story is different save that both set free the prisoners, for Amadis does not kill the giant but gives him his life on condition that he give up his evil customs and become a Christian. The old giantess Andandona, sister of Madarque, bears a certain resemblance to the mother of Karadoc, and that in the Tristan these two stories are closely allied, and since in an adventure of Galaor which preceded this there is a suggestion of the same story, it is safe to think, that influenced this [1]. Galaor and Cildadan healed of their wounds, and now saved from death by Amadis, and Bruneo accompany them to Gaula, then set out for court of Lisuarte.

The description of the coming of Norandel, a son of Lisuarte, to the court to there be made knight while still unknown (III, ch. III) is taken almost bodily from that of Lancelot (T. R., III, pp. 122-126) even to the king's returning from the chase.

1. Cf. also T. R., IV, p. 319, where Lancelot kills Karadoc and sets free Yvain and the Duc de Clarence.

A confronting of the two lengthy passages seems here unnecessary. The adventure of Lisuarte's youth here indicated, as has already been said of the story of Perion [1], might be that of Bohor — or of any of numerous princes who won the hearts of maidens on their journeys.

The incidents attending the birth and disposal of Esplandian again resemble those attending that of Amadis. Here may well be placed in juxtaposition also a passage from the Tristan, and because it so clearly brings out the resemblance I have made use of the Spanish version.

Amadis, I, 1 (Elisena) un hijo pariesse y tomandole la donzella en sus manos vido que era fermoso... pusolo cerca de su madre... La madre lo tenia en sus braços llorando... y diziendo : « Mi hijo pequeño, quan grave es á mí la vuestra cuyta! »

III, IV (Oriana) fue parida de un fijo muy apuesta criatura... e Oriana dijo que llegassen á la cama, y tomandolo en sus brazos lo besó muchas veces.

Don Tristan (Ysabel) pario vn hijo varon y quando ella vuo parido dixo ala donzella que le pusiesse su hijo enlos braços, y la donzella lo hizo assi. E quando ella lo tomó y le vio tan hermoso y apuesto, dixo : « O mi hijo, como tu eres nascido en gran tristeza y en gran dolor... » y despues besole tres vezes en la boca ℣ bendixole ℣ santiguole ℣ diolo luego ala donzella.

The child of Oriana must be secretly carried away, but instead of entrusting it to the mercy of the waves, all arrangements are made for its being reared carefully. In vain, being put down for a moment, it is carried away by a lioness, and but for the intervention of a hermit would have perished. That it then is nursed by the lioness (and we must add a goat and a ewe), until the hermit's sister arrives to care for it, recalls the classic tale of Romulus and Remus, but bears far closer relation to the story of the Caballero del Cisne and his brothers as told in La Gran Conquista, where a hind cares for the infants until a hermit finds them and then following him, continues to do so until they no longer need her (G. C., I, LVI). It must be noted here that in Elioxe, another version of the story of the seven children [1], the hermit's sister comes to his aid as does the sister of Nascien.

Upon the breast of the child born to Oriana are strange letters, those to the right as white as snow, and those to the left like live coals, and the hermit reading them saw that the white said in Latin « Esplandian » and « pensó que aquel debia ser su nombre y assi se lo puso »; (but the colored ones which were in Greek he could not read). When Lionel, the cousin of Lancelot, was born, his mother noticed upon his breast « une tache vermeille en forme de lion : de là le nom qu'elle lui avait donné [2]. » One might go even farther in the comparison and call attention to the fact that, as the lion presaged a great exploit of Lionel's when he fought the lion of Libye, so the letters an exploit of Esplandian's, and that in both a lion has a part, but it is unnecessary and even useless.

The childhood of Esplandian and his comrade Sargil, his training the lion to hunt with them, his coming to the notice of king Lisuarte, his part in bringing peace between the kings, all is so loosely connected with the action of our story that it could be separated from it entirely and not in any way affect its continuity.

Again Lisuarte is warred against by the kings of the islands with Arcalaus to aid them, a new Arthurian battle, Amadis, Perion and Galaor, wearing strange armor, sent by Urganda, go to his aid, and the kings are overcome. Our three knights depart undiscovered, as often Lancelot and his companions in the other romances. Shipwrecked they are brought by the wiles of a maiden who pretends she is mute, to the prison of Arcalaus. The incident with Dinarda (III, ch. v), her pretense of loving him and making her escape when she can may be again a Gauvain incident, although not without parallel in the career of other knights. And we now begin to find our adventures departing more decidedly from the earlier ones and their models. Their imprisonment by ruse takes us back to the earlier episodes in this and the Round Table — but we have there no such elaborate system, this room which can be lowered and raised. However the incidents of the imprisonment are the same; there is the maiden who has pity on them and brings them food, as in the captivity of Lancelot and Gauvain [1]. Arcalaus seeks safety in flight as did Brandus of the Tour douloureuse [2]. Galaor, it will be noted, is ever Lisuarte's special knight as Gauvain was Arthur's. When in battle he gives Lisuarte his horse (III, III) and takes part of Lisuarte in spite of his quarrel with Amadis, we recall Gauvain. Florestan who even in the danger of battle will not strike the king may be a memory of Pharien and Claudas or Cleodalis and Leodagan (T. R., II, 194-195).

Amadis (III, VI) after his return to Gaula sets out upon a journey through distant lands that he may performs feats of arms. So Tristan had travelled [3] in Normandie, Alemagne, he had served the emperor of Rome and gone into Espagne, from there into « Erminie » (var. Parménie), Bretagne and to Arundel. Tristan had in his youth learned various languages [4]. Amadis not having had this advantage, « siempre procuraba de aprender los lenguajes por donde andaba » (II, VIII). Amadis went into Alemaña, Bohemia, Romania, las Insulas de Romania, and to Constantinople.

Amadas also travelled extensively.

Returning by sea, Amadis passed by the coast of Spain. One cannot but recall here the journey of Amadas, who among other countries went to « Roumenie, Alemaigne, and Espaigne ». In his wanderings are few new resemblances to be found; we have combats with Romans, where the spirit of pride which so marked them in their relations with Arthur is most prominent. In Grasinda's treatment of him (III, VIII), we have a repeating of the Briolanja story, even to the words where thinking of his beauty and wishing to have him for her husband, « vinole en miente cómo le viera llorar y cuidó que aquello no seria sino por amor de alguna muger que amasse y no la podia haber [2] »; and so a new imitation of the Dame de Malehaut.

For the combat of Amadis and the Endriago we have again an embarrassing number of possible sources. And not only as to general outline but in detail. We have two exploits of Arthur: one with the giant of Mont St. Michel, the other with the giant Cat; we have Lancelot's combat with a dragon; also Tristan's; and in the Gran Conquista, that of Baldovin and the serpent.

Diablo tiene nombre. (The Endriago is the off-spring of an evil, idolatrous giant and his daughter; killed his nurses, his mother and father). « El Endriago saltó por cima del (su padre), y saliendo por la puerta de la camara... se fue á las montañas, y no passó mucho tiempo que los unos muertos porel, y los que barcas y fustas pudieron haber para huir por la mar, que la insula no fuesse despoblada.

Amadis : « Amigos, yo quiero entrar en aquel castillo y si hallo a Endriago combatirme he con el, y si no le hallo... yo buscaré esta bestia por estas montañas... y si me fuere bien tocará la bocina Gandalin y entonces creed que él es muerto y yo vivo...

Entrado en un valle de brava montaña y peñas de muchas concavidades, dijo : « Da voces, Gandalin, que por ellas podria ser que a nosotros el Endriago acuda... » y no tardó mucho que vieron salir de entre las peñas el Endriago mui mas bravo y fuerte que nunca lo fue; ... El Endriago venia tan sañudo echando por la boca humo mezclando con llamas de fuego, y hiriendo los dientes unos con otros haciendo gran espuma y haciendo crujir con gran furia las conchas y las alas tan fuertemente que gran espanto era de lo ver. Y cuando el Endriago los vió, comenzó á dar grandes saltos y voces como aquel que mucho tiempo passara sin que hombre ninguno viera, y luego se vino contra ellos... El caballero dijo a Gandalin : « Hermano, tente afuera » y tomó su lanza y cubriosse de su escudo y se fue condispersés çà et là... « Il (Artus) avertit ses compagnons de demeurer à quelque distance... Puis l'épée dressée au poing, l'écu devant la poitrine, il s'avança... Artus pensait lui donner de l'épée par le visage, mais la pointe seule (de l'épée) avait atteint les sourcils et pénétré dans la racine du nez : le sang, descendant alors sur les yeux, inonda le visage du géant qui ne vit plus goutte... la peau d'un serpent, cuirasse impénétrable, défendait le géant contre le tranchant de Marmiadoise... Enfin, il (le géant) entrevit encore son adversaire, il se jeta sur lui, le saisit des deux bras... le le roi laissa tomber Marmiadoise, le géant du bras qui n'étreignit pas le Roi voulut la saisir. Artus profita du moment où il se penchait et fit pénétrer dans l'aine un des javelots qu'il avait à la ceinture ; la douleur que le monstre ressentit lui arracha un cri terrible ; il fléchit, il tomba à terre. Alors Artus reprit Marmiadoise, revint sur lui, souleva sa cuirasse, et lui plongea dans le corps le fer brûlant. On entendit un profond mugissement, ce fut le dernier soupir du monstre.

Artus et le Chat de Lousanne, p. 358. Merlin à Artus. « Roy Artus, dit-il, vous n'irez pas à Rome et vous ne retournerez pas encore en Bretagne. Ces contrées ont besoin de vous. Vers le lac de Lousanne se tient un démon, épouvante de la contrée ; il tue et dévore tous ceux qui l'appro-

Como el Endriago le vió tan cerca de sí, pensóle de tomar entre sus uñas y no le alcanzó sino en el escudo, y llevóselo tan recio que le hizo dar de manos en tierra ; y entre tanto que el diablo lo despedazó todo con sus mui fuertes uñas, hubo el caballero lugar de levantarse,... fue para el Endriago que mui fallecido y flaco estaba... pensando acertar en el otro ojo con la espada... se la metió por una de las ventanas de las narices que mui anchas las tenia, y con la gran fuerza que puso, y con la que el Endriago traia, el espada caló que la llegó hasta los sesos; mas el Endriago como le vido tan cerca abrazóse con él, y con las sus mui fuertes y agudas uñas rompió todas las armas de las chent; la campagne en est devenue déserte. — Comment, dit Artus, personne ne l'a-t-il attaqué ? — Ce n'est pourtant qu'un chat, dit Merlin, mais un chat vomi par l'enfer, si grand, si horrible que sa vue seule est capable de donner la mort. — Dieu nous garde ! dit le Roi; comment une pareille bête a-t-elle pu venir en ce lieu ? — Je vais vous le dire. (Story of fisherman who failing to keep his vow to give first fish caught to the Lord, finally draws up « un petit chaton plus noir que mûre »), il rapporta le chat et le nourrit si bien qu'en moins d'un jour la bête étrangla lui, sa femme et ses enfants, puis s'enfuit vers la montagne qui s'élève au-delà du lac. Là est son repaire, d'où il sort chaque jour pour mordre et dévorer ceux qu'il aperçoit. Allez de ce côté, c'est le chemin qui mène à Rome; il viendra sur vous, et, avec la grâce de Dieu, vous en délivrerez le pays. »

... Ils arrivèrent sur les bords du lac de Lausanne, et trouvèrent le pays désert et sans culture. Arrivés dans une vallée bornée par la montagne où se tenait l'affreux démon : « Je veux, dit Artus, voir seul de mes yeux cet ennemi d'enfer. » Merlin se tenait à quelque distance ; il donna un coup de sifflet. Aussitôt le chat, encore à jeun, s'élança pour dévorer sa nouvelle proie. Artus le reçut à la pointe de son épieu ; le chat en broya le fer dans ses dents et fit chanceler le Roi, qui ne voulut pas lâcher son glaive. A force de mordre, le chat détacha le fût, puis, ayant rejeté le espaldas y la carne y los huesos hasta las entrañas; y como él estaba ahogado de la mucha sangre que bebia, y con el golpe de la espada que á los sesos le passó... no se pudiendo ya tener abrió los brazos y cayó á la otra parte como muerto sin ningun sentido.

El caballero, como assi lo vió, tiró por la espada y metiósela por la boca cuanto mas pudo tantas veces, que lo acabó de matar; pero quiero que sepais que antes que el alma se le saliesse, salió de su boca el diablo y se fue por el aire con mui gran tronido, assi que los que estaban en el castillo lo oyeron como si cabe ellos fuera... Gandalin tocó la bocina en señal que el Endriago era muerto...

E cuando vieron una cosa tan espantable y tan desemejada... fueron mucho maravilladas mas que antes. El caballero le dijo : « Muchas gracias y mercedes doi á Dios, por que assi me ha querido guardar de tal peligro. » fer de sa bouche sanglante, il s'élance sur Artus, qui, laissant le tronçon du glaive, lève l'écu, en frappant rudement le monstre et le renverse sur le dos. Aussitôt relevé, le chat saute une troisième fois sur le Roi, mais la lame de Marmiadoise pénètre et entame l'os de la tête. De nouveau rejeté à terre, le chat recule de quelques pas, esquive le second coup de l'épée et d'un grand bond s'attache à l'épaule du Roi, y enfonce les ongles, pénètre jusqu'à la poitrine et fait jaillir un ruisseau de sang qu'il lape avidement, comme pour s'en désaltérer. Le Roi prend son temps, glisse l'écu sous le ventre du chat, tout en labourant de son épée son dos, sa croupe et ses flancs. Le monstre rompt les guiches de l'écu; Artus retombé à genoux les retient dans sa main. Heureusement les ongles du chat étaient engagés dans le haubert et l'y laissaient comme suspendu. Artus attendait le chat qui, tout affaibli, tout mutilé, trouve encore la force de s'élancer sur son adversaire. Mais il rencontre M. et l'épée pénétrant dans ses entrailles le fit retomber sans mouvement pour ne plus se relever... Ils regardèrent les pattes demeurées dans l'écu, jamais ils n'en avaient vu de pareilles (Arthur, p. 362). « J'avais eu moins de peine avec le géant du Mont en péril de mer, et je rends grâce à Notre-Seigneur de m'avoir secouru dans un si grand danger. »

The Lancelot adventure I give as summarized by Miss Weston [1], noting first that it is in a « waste land devastated by the ravages of a devil in the form of a beast. » — « Lancelot's sword and spear can make no impression on its skin ; its claws pierce through shield and hauberk and score deep wounds on the knight's body ; it breathes forth venom... finally as it opens its jaws to devour him, the knight thrusts his spear down its throat and pierces the heart. The monster utters a loud cry, which is heard over two miles off, and expires. »

Tristan having come to Ireland, hears cries — « tout le peuple courait vers la mer, fuyait le péril épouvantable... un dragon redoutable. Chaque jour il descendait dans la ville causant grands ravages; car tous ceux qu'il pouvait atteindre, il les tuait dans les flammes qu'il vomissait. Il ne restait plus dans tout le royaume personne qui fût assez fort ni assez preux pour oser lui tenir tête... Tristan entend son cri. Il s'élance à cheval, et nul de ses compagnons ne s'en aperçoit, sauf son écuyer (Gouvernal). Il éperonne le destrier et le lance vers les rochers où le dragon se tenait la nuit, dans le val d'Enferginan... Or il vit venir le dragon, le mufle haut dressé, les yeux étincelants à fleur de tête, la langue hors de la gueule, crachant de toutes parts le feu et le venin... Le dragon a vu Tristan; il rugit, gonfle tout son corps. Le preux recueille tout son courage... se couvre de son écu, et enfonce sa lance dans la gueule du monstre, d'un coup si terrible qu'il fait voler hors de la tête toutes les dents que sa lance a rencontrées ; le fer traverse le corps et s'enfonce dans le ventre, si profondément qu'une partie de la hampe pénètre dans le cou du dragon. Les flammes vomies par lui tuent le cheval de Tristan; mais le preux s'élance adroitement de selle, et le requiert de l'épée. Tristan le combattit longuement sous les arbres de la forêt. Mais un jet de flammes venimeuses l'atteignit, et ses armes noircirent comme un charbon éteint. Enfin, il lui enfonça son épée en plein cœur et l'abattit. »

Is there any need of dwelling upon the points which are similar in all, as the site, the country devastated by the dragon and the hero coming from another land, who undertakes the adventure unsolicited? In each of the incidents here compared with the Amadis we find some point not in the others and each of these points is found in the Amadis. Would then a combination of these give us all the elements found in the combat of our hero? It would seem easy to answer in the affirmative, certainly the story told by Elisabat of the Endriago's antecedents, is easily to be developed from that of the giant cat told by Merlin to Arthur when there is at hand the story of the horrible giant of the Mount Saint Michel, and since giant stories such as the one indicated in Tristan (Analyse 10) were common. The description of the Endriago and even the devil's occupation of this dragon and its departure by the mouth would be the very points which such compilers as our own might add.

But interestingly enough these very points, even to the sought for devil are to be found in La Gran Conquista.

Amadis, III, IX. La insula que del Diablo se llamaba, donde una bestia fiera todo lo habia despoblado (en una valle de brava montaña y peñas de muchas concavidades)... y no passó mucho tiempo que los unos muertos por el y los que barcas y fustas pudieron haber para huir por la mar que la insula no fuesse despoblada.

Tenia el cuerpo y rostro cubierto de pelo y encima tenia conchas sobrepuestas unas sobre otras tan fuerte que ninguna arma las podia passar; encima de los hombros tenia alas tan grandes que hasta los pies le cubrian tan fuerte que ninguna arma las podia empecer, con las cuales se cubria como si fuesse un hombre con un escudo... las uñas tan fuertes y grandes que en el mundo no podia ser cosa tan fuerte

Gran Conquista, II, CCXLII. E habia una muy gran sierpe de la cual contarémos agora aquí en aquella tierra del monte Tigris en una peña muy alta, e esta era una bestia fiera (e habia destruido esa tierra yerma... ca las gentes de las villas é de los castillos al derredor eran huidos por miedo della.

Habia cabellos lungos é duros é el su cuerpo era como concha é tan duro, que ninguna arma no gelo podria falsar, é las orejas mayores que de una adaraga con que se escudaba é se encubria á manera de esgremidores de tal forma que non la podia ninguno herir en la cabeza, las uñas habia tan luengas como una vara de cuatro palmas, é cortaban como navaja, é eran tan agudas como alezna; é los sus dientes agudos y luengos que entre ellas entrasse que luego no fuesse deshecha. Dientes tenia dos en cada una de las quijadas, tan fuertes y tan largos que de la boca un palmo le salian, y los ojos grandes y redondos mui hermosos como brasas, assi que de muy largo siendo de noche eran vistos y todas las gentes huian del. Saltaba y corria tan ligero que no habia venado que por pies se le pudiese escapar.

Fuerza grande del pecado causó que entrasse en él el enemigo malo.

mas que los de la vibora, é traia en la fruente una piedra que relumbraba tanto que podria hombre ver de noche la su claridad á dos leguas é media — é non pasaba ninguna por aquel camino que della pudiese escapar á vida (con la cola daba tan gran herida que non habia cosa viva á que alcanzase que no la matase de un golpe).

Were it not so long as to render it impracticable one might rearrange the whole combat, but a few lines will be sufficient to show their great similarity.

A. Vieron salir de entre las peñas el Endriago mui mas bravo y fuerte que nunca lo fue;... y cuando el Endriago los vió, comenzó á dar grandes saltos y voces como aquel que mucho tiempo passara sin que hombre ninguno viera, y luego se vino contra ellos... El caballero ... tomó su lanza y cubriosse de su escudo y se fue contra el Endriago assi á pie. El diablo... Echó fuego por la boca con humo... El caballero como assi lo vió tiró por la espada y metiossela por la boca cuanto mas pudo tantas veces, que lo acabó de matar : ... salió de su boca el diablo...

Pues como el Endriago fue muerto, el caballero se quitó afuera... y cayó amortescido.

II, cap. CCXLV. La sierpe salió de la peña, la garganta abierta, é dió salto en el é entonces comenzó la sierpe á facer muy gran ruido é dar grandes voces... é estonces le salio el diablo por la garganta que non pudo hi mas estar en semejanza de cuerpo... é la sierpe no pudo mas estar en pié, é cayó amortecido; é Baldovin... cuando aquello vió... metióle la espada por la garganta, é empujóla adentro tanto que la firio de la punta en el corazon... é estonces murió la sierpe...

Despues que Baldovin hobo muerto la sierpe... en tirándose a fuera... amortecido.

Could the Gran Conquista in its turn alone suffice? The answer must be negative, for some of the elements would then be lacking : in the combat with the Giant of the Mount Saint-

Michel there is the question of loss of vision; in that with the Cat, the acconnt given by Merlin to Arthur, the resemblance in part of the account itself, the instant and like punishment of the sinner, and the whistle; in the Tristan we have the details of flame, of people fleeing toward the sea, the being forced to fight on foot, and the putting the spear down the monster's throat; this last is also in the Lancelot but with the important variation that this was the fatal stroke, and it is here that we find first that sword and spear can make no impression upon the monster's skin (with the giant the skin of a serpent answered this purpose), here, too, is mention of the cry heard two miles away. Off all the passages cited only one can be eliminated on the ground of our having no other indication of its being known to our compilers : the Lancelot episode which is found in the Dutch Lancelot and not in the versions upon which our author has been drawing, and it, once we include the Conquista in our number of sources, contains nothing not found in the others.

Over Amadis on his voyages and at the court of the emperor of Constantinople we need not delay, — the incident of the little Leonorina, the emperor's beautiful daughter, and all which attends it is but a remodelling of early portions of our story, and one which recalls very forcibly the Leonoreta episode. The response of Amadis as to the crowns which are to be given — one to the most beautiful maiden, the other to the most beautiful lady, as he places the first upon the head of the small maiden herself « yo pongo esta corona en la cabeza de la mas hermosa doncella que agora se », recalls the words already cited of Lancelot « damoiselle ne vis-je onques si belle; car de dame ne dis-je mie. » (T. R., V, p. 307). The emperor's expression of willingness to give his daughter to an unknown knight recalls Leodogan's words when Arthur was at his court unknown (T. R., II, p. 158) [1]. The revival here of the early attitude of Amadis, his fits of abstraction, and tears is not without interest, placed as it is continually in juxtaposition with remodelling of early scenes on the one hand and preparation for the continuation of the tale on the other.

The demand of Grimanesa (III, XII) that he take her to the court of Lisuarte and there prepare to fight any who would challenge his statement that in that court there is no maiden so beautiful as is the lady (herself) whom he brings there and that he should take her to the Insula Firme, his distress and the way out of his difficulty are again but the working over of such instances as have just been cited, and a reminder of Briolanja's desire to try the Insola Firme's adventures. The finding of companions who had set out in search of him (and in the case of one we have again the fountain and lament), recalls varied meetings of Lancelot, Gauvain and others, where it often happened that the object of the quest came to the defense of those pursuing it.

Passing over the voyage, in the combat which the Caballero Griego, as Amadis now is known, fights to prove the beauty of Grasinda greater than that of any maiden at the court (III, XVI) we have unquestionably a memory of the tournament in which the knights of the Chastel-aux-dames were against those of the Chastel-aux-pucelles. (T. R., V, 108, 114-119). There Lancelot entered as « Champion des Dames » — as here Amadis is against the maidens. Other than its being made so definitely a contest between the champions of the « Dueñas » and « Doncellas » here, — and of course in the outcome, — there is little resemblance.

EPISODES OF BOOK IV

The whole episode of Oriana's being promised by her father in marriage to the emperor of Rome and entrusted to his embassadors, is evidently of our story itself. Yet Genièvre and Yseult have again furnished the basis doubtless of our story.

The different conditions would in themselves demand a different reason for her being sent away. Amadas thus rescues Ydoine and as has been noted she so guards her honor, and only after the rescue by Amadis do we again find our sources. The rescue, itself, on sea, has no details in common with the earlier tales, but immediately following we have this scene : Genièvre having been repudiated by Arthur, goes to Sorelois which Galehaut has offered her.

Oriana llamó á Amadis á un cabo del estrado y mui passo le dijo : « Mi verdadero amigo, yo vos ruego y mando por aquel verdadero amor que me teńeis, que agora mas que nunca se guarde el secreto de nuestros amores y no hableis conmigo apartadamente sino ante todos. — Señora, dijo Amadis, yo no vivo sino en esperanza de vos servir, y si esta me faltasse, faltarme ha ya la vida, y como lo mandais assi se hará. »

La reine prit à part Lancelot, Galehaut et la dame de Malehaut. « Lancelot, dit-elle... beau doux ami... Je vous demande un don : laissez-moi me garder mieux que je n'ai fait quand je courais danger d'être surprise. Au nom de l'amour que vous me devez, j'entends qu'ici vous ne réclamiez de moi rien au delà du baiser et de l'accoler. — Dame, répond Lancelot, ce qui vous plaît ne saurait me déplaire. Votre volonté est ma règle ; de vous dépendront toujours et mon cœur et mes joies. »

The question arising as to where Oriana should be taken, some thought to the Insola Firme, others to Gaula, and others to Scotland; so Gauvain suggested for the queen either the kingdom of Urien or Léonois, or Sorelois. That Oriana was taken to the Insola Firme brings us to another episode in the life of Genièvre. (T. R., V, 344) Having been condemned, she is rescued by Lancelot « avec trente-deux chevaliers » and is taken to the Joyeuse Garde. Tristan and Iseut also sojourn at the Joyeuse Garde by the invitation of Lancelot (Analyse, p. 344 et al).

Having thus made enemies of King Lisuarte and the emperor of Rome, our knights of the Insula Firme send messengers to the rulers upon whom they may call for aid. And, although the sending of letters and messages has not been infrequent in the Round Table, one need but look through chapters IV-X (Book IV) to feel that their model is not found there. In the Gran Conquista, however, the sending of these messages is as frequent as here, and the comparing of a few letters of various chapters in each will show great similarity.

Amadis, Bk. IV, ch. VIII. Como Amadis envió otro mensagero á la reina Briolanja; IX. Como don Cuadragante habló con su sobrino Landin y le dijo que fuesse a Irlanda y hablasse con la reina su sobrina para que diesse lugar á algunos de sus vasallos le viniessen á servir; X. Como Amadis envió al rei de Bohemia.

Bk. I, ch. CXX. Como el caballero del Cisne envió con cartas á Terrin á demandar acorro al Emperador; CLXXIII. Como el Abad envió al Prior con cartas al duque Gudufre; CLXXV. Como el Duque envió cartas al Emperador é á los altos hombres que le enviasen gente; CXC. Del mensaje que envió el Duque al rey de Hungria, etc.

One might make a long list were one to include the chapters treating of the arrival of the messengers, the responses, etc. but we may content ourselves with these few examples.

Amadis (Bk. IV, ch. IV). Con acuerdo y consejo de don Cuadragante y de su primo Agrajes, hizo llamar á todos aquellos señores... que se juntassen. E alli venidos todos, que ninguno faltó, Amadis se levantó en pie... y hablóles (He speaks of their dangerous position and the need of sending for their powerful friends, and so does Cuadragante). E luego fue acordado que Amadis lo hiciesse saber al rei Perion... assimesmo lo enviasse á todos los otros que sabia que le podrian y querian acudir.

El caballero del Cisne (Gran Conquista, I, ch. CXX) se puso á pensar sobre lo que havia acordado con Ponce é con Almante é fizo llamar á Terrin é mandóle que dijiese á todos los sus vasallos que fuesen á la tarde con él. E ellos... fueron con él... e él, cuando los vió venir levantóse á ellos... e comenzóles á mostrar la cuita en que estaban... E si gelo ellos consejasen que le viniesen a acorrer, é entendiesen que era bien que enviaria mandado al Emperador que la enviase acorro... e gelo consejaban.

Arcalaus, hearing of the war, calls together the kings who before warred upon Lisuarte, and we are thus carried back into the earliest part of our tale once more. The emperor of Rome and Lisuarte set out with their hosts for the Insula Firme. Again we have an Arthurian combat, recalling various ones fought by that hero, the one against the Romans most vividly (T. R., II, 358); here as there, the Emperor is killed. We have also here certain likeness to the battle between Arthur's forces and those of Lancelot before the Joyeuse Garde (T. R., V, 345). There Lancelot having the king in his power helped him to mount. Amadis, seeing Lisuarte in danger of loss, not only of the battle, but of his life, has the battle ended for the day. This battle but just over, Arabigo, Arcalaus and the other kings attack Lisuarte, and Amadis comes to his rescue.

The result of the magnanimous actions of Amadis, and his reward call for no study of sources. The marriage with Oriana, and the marrying off of all the unmarried princes and princesses may well be considered original [1]. It would seem that with this the adventures of Amadis as knight errant might come to a close. But no, he himself desires to roam again. Oriana, however, as loving Arthurian ladies had often done, refuses to allow it. He amuses himself, as did Tristan at the Joyeuse Garde, in hunting. Thus engaged, an adventure comes to him, and without sending back for his arms, lest Oriana refuse permission, he steps into the boat of the lady in distress and is gone. So Lancelot went in quest of Gauvain without the queen's permission (T. R., IV, 273).

The adventure itself is an elaborate combination of familiar elements: — the avenging of a dead knight; an island and its conditions; the usual giants; and a combat demanding marvellous force. For this elaboration and for the ending in a marriage of the son and daughter of the agressor and the aggrieved, who, we are told, are the ancestors of well known Arthurian personages, the similar process in other like episodes of the third and fourth books indicates sufficiently the attribution. So with the inscriptions found which merely prepare for the adventures of Esplandian. The freeing of Arcalaus by Amadis because of the promise made long before recalls the setting free by Lancelot of Brandus. These vague resemblances can have here little if any, significance. They are, without the slightest question, those of a late period, and to be ascribed to one who has at his disposal not only the Lancelot and Tristan but the early version or versions of the Amadis itself, and who, now skilled in weaving together various threads, continues to weave on, often perhaps bringing in again unconsciously the early episodes.

The comparison of the definite episodes aside, certain general similarities may be briefly indicated; the castle conditions, the days chosen for holding court, the coming and going of the knights, maidens in distress. Throughout, the battles are alike, the arrangements are the same, as A., III, III : « hizo el rey dellos tres haces. La primera hubo don Galaor; é la segunda haz dió al rey Cildadan ». T. R., III, p. 235 : « Le roy Artus ordonnait ses batailles et en formait cinq échelles; il confiait la première au roi Ydier, la seconde à Hervis de Rinel. ». And so even to the war cries, that of Lisuarte is that of Arthur « Clarencia, Clarencia que era su apellido (Lisuarte) » (A., III, III), « Clarence! l'enseigne au roi Artus. » That following with this as model we have « Gaula, Gaula! » « Irlanda, Irlanda! » is of interest only as further imitation of what has first been taken over exactly.

The confronting of the content of the Amadis, chapter by chapter and book by book, with that of the earlier romances brings us to a point where certain definite conclusions may be drawn. For the first three books, with the exception of the introduction of Esplandian and Leonoreta, the sources are practically complete and the fourth book is largely built upon the preceding ones. The names, too, are so closely connected with those found in the French romances, have departed so little from a French form, that with few exceptions they might have appeared in the Lancelot and Tristan without occasioning any surprise to the reader. What the exact significance of this may be it is not easy to say; their very formation however is illuminating in its close likeness to the way in which the whole romance was constructed. Yet they are far from solving the problem of the original Amadis, for whether they appeared first in a primitive French version, or in one in Spanish or Portuguese who can say? In the Spanish translations of the Lancelot and Tristan we find comparatively little change in the names; one, notably, has suffered the same change as in the Amadis : Languines for Hanguin. In whatever language composed I believe the author drew definitely upon his sources at first hand, not upon translations.

Were the version which we possess the original, once the sources of so considerable a portion of the romance had been found there would remain, but the question of the method of fitting together the many bits of which this mosaic is composed. The transferring of the adventures of one hero to another was common to all the prose romances. In considering the mutual indebtedness of the Lancelot and Tristan stories Gaston Paris said : « En général on peut dire que les contes bretons de la période anglo-normande se composent d'un certain nombre d'aventures rattachées à un certain nom, mais sans qu'il y ait entre ces noms et ces aventures un rapport quelque peu constant. Les personnages les plus célèbres deviennent successivement, avec mille variantes, les héros des aventures les plus répandues [1]. » As that indicates, those groupings and inter-transferences were of an early period. It may be urged that since the Amadis also had earlier forms its growth may have been similar and one cannot absolutely deny such a possibility. We must for the moment judge by the version we possess as it stands. And there we find a defininite distinction, in that the imitations are too continual and the relation between whole groups of incidents too close to admit of any doubt as to their model having been the romances in complete form as we know them to-day, whether found in some such compilation as that of Rusticien de Pise or separately.

The one who thus levied upon those tales was no mere workman who followed blindly a pattern already set for him by another, but an artist who had his own design, and having it took here and there ruthlessly whatever the execution demanded. That this could not have been Montalvo we know, for the Amadis known in Spain a hundred and fifty years before his time was no simple poem or story but a romance in three books and one which the contemporary references show to have been much what it is to-day.

How then are we to distinguish the work of Montalvo from that of his predecessor (or predecessors)? If we accept his own statement [1] we have the three books, long before cited by Pero Ferrus, which have undergone some change at his hands, and a fourth book which he has translated and corrected (together with Las Sergas de Esplandian). Any liberty then which he may have chosen to take with the first three books his own words have justified in advance, and as to the fourth — generally supposed to be his since it was thus that in his time a writer often gained for his work hearing and credence — he has silenced all objections which might be made to the continuation and change in the already well known characters. Whether we are then to consider it as proved that the limits of the third book remained as before, a glance back to the comparison may help to answer, although not conclusively. The first three books have a certain unity, and the rescue of Oriana might furnish a natural close. But the portions which are inserted looking forward to the continuation and the changes which such a continuation would naturally demand must be taken into account. And in order to do this we must first consider fully what other indications we have of Montalvo's work. We have his expressed purpose in thus remodelling the fictitious history. What profit in such tales, he asks; none save as they furnish good examples and doctrines, and further than this they should conform with the teachings of Holy Church. Following this indication, the attribution of the admonitions and moralizing, and the emphasis laid upon adherence to church teachings, may with some degree of certainty be fixed. The whole book, it is true, is permeated by this. The « amonestaciones » found here and there and addressed especially to rulers have no parallel in the sources considered, and might well form part of the Regimiento de los Principes and its later form : Los Castigos del rey Don Sancho [1].

So much it would seem safe to ascribe to Montalvo in accord with his preliminary statement and beyond that on internal evidence much more. The story of Esplandian, whose introduction into the third book has as its evident function to prepare for Las Sergas, brings us to an interesting feature in Montalvo's method. He might have introduced Esplandian in the fourth book and so kept to the original division, but that would have made of it an entirely separate work. Instead he intercalated the story of Esplandian in that of Amadis. And this brings up an interesting question as to Montalvo's original plan, and one which gives rise to a conjecture not possible to prove absolutely. Not only does he prepare at this point for the whole story of Esplandian but throughout the first three books by definite allusions to it he prepares the way for the fourth, and, once Esplandian has entered, for Las Sergas. We have such definite references as these : « assi como en el cuarto libro de esta historia os sera contado, — como el cuarto libro cuenta », and in one chapter of the third book three references to « un ramo que destos libros sale, llamado las Sergas de Esplandian ». These evidence that Montalvo had his plan for his continuation and for Las Sergas either very clearly outlined in his mind at this period or already executed [1].

Other than these additions and changes in external form attributed to Montalvo, his hand seems clearly to be seen in several of the important episodes. It will be remembered that in various incidents we had the combination of several stories and seeming evidence of their having passed through more than one hand. Noticeable among them are the Briolanja incident and that of the Endriago. In the latter were found elements of adventures from the Round Table and Tristan, and a likeness so close as to leave no doubt of its having some relation to La Gran Conquista. While it has unity as an adventure, still, judged by the light of the whole series of comparisons, it separates itself in order of development into at least two periodes : — the first, that in which the Round Table elements entered, where an adventure of Amadis is composed possibly of adventures of two or three of his known models; the second that in which picturesque details were added to it. In other words the portion containing similarities to La Gran Conquista would be a layer superposed at a late period. Indeed, if we look back to all the incidents where similarities have been noted in the Amadis and that work, in no one instance is the portion from that necessarily one inspiring the story. We have combats with resemblances but they are those for which we have in the other sources sufficient basis, and it is but in detail that this seems to have enriched us. Further than that on inherent grounds it seems impossible to go, for each portion of the Gran Conquista with which we have to do might have been known to an early compiler even before it was brought over into the Spanish form in which we know it. For each one of these incidents, even to the description of the Sierpe with which Baldovin fights, we have in existence an earlier French version [1]. From this it might be argued that nothing absolutely proves to us that these portions were not there before the romance reached Montalvo, and that is true. Even more characters in the Gran Conquista are mentioned by the same early poets who mention Amadis [2]. But one thing in defense of the theory of these originating with Montalvo may still be urged. In his prologue speaking of different histories and the great deeds recounted Montalvo mentions that of « aquel señalado duque Godofre de Bullon enel golpe de espada que enla puente de Antiocho dió, y del Turco armado que quasi dos pedaços fizo, seyendo la (sic) rey de Jherusalem ». The incident to which he refers may be found in the Gran Conquista. (L. II, cap. CLXV.) It must be admitted, however, that he might have known this story from any of numerous accounts, for it is found in the Latin chronicles and the French poem [3]. While not then furnishing conclusive evidence, taken with the other it may have some weight.

The Briolanja incident also, it will be remembered, has a few lines which correspond exactly with a passage in La Gran Conquista which it has been suggested inspired this. The contrary cannot be proved but it is, as the study of it showed, no uncommon story and occurs here at the beginning of the very passage which has aroused so much discussion. The whole passage, which may be said to be Montalvo's summing up of previous versions, is so handled by him as to render it an uncertain foundation for any theory. In the combats, however, which in both are in close connection with this offer of lands and heart, the Amadis and Gran Conquista show great similarity.

Venturing then to consider these as contributions of Montalvo with the saving clause that in these as well some earlier redactor may have levied upon the Gran Conquista or its sources for these incidents, let us now consider what enlightenment the remainder of the Briolanja incident may furnish as to the growth of the romance and what part is definitely Montalvo's. The story in his résumé stands thus: 1. Briolanja having recovered her lands and loving Amadis offers herself to him, but he, faithful to Oriana, refuses. — 2. That upon the demand of el señor infante don Alfonso de Portugal who pitied the maiden this was changed. — 3. That in another way this story is told which seems more credible; one of Briolanja's maidens to whom Amadis had promised a don seeing Briolanja's distress demanded of him that he enter a tower and not come forth until he should have a son or daugther by Briolanja and that in this tower he was wasting away when Oriana hearing of it sent word that he should do as the maiden asked. — 4. But neither of these changed versions was true (i. e. the one demanded by Alfonso not recounted here, and this other), but that Briolanja seeing Amadis in danger of death told the maiden to free him from the don on condition that he remain until Don Galaor should arrive, which Montalvo adds bears more reason for being believed because the beautiful queen was later married to Don Galaor as the fourth book recounts. There can be no question as to what is Montalvo's — and we may well consider here the growth of the story as a whole. No need to go back of the change asked for by Don Alfonso — whether there was merely a note to that effect added and Montalvo did not know the nature of the change or, what seems more probable, he has confused it with the third, nothing shows. In the former case that note may have inspired some other redactor to explain it and thus we have the story, whose sources we have before treated, summed up for us by Montalvo in a very clumsy way.

The prophecies and the allusions to the Round Table also give evidence of having passed trough more than one stage. The one best illustrating this is in an early part of the story where a maiden sent by Urganda to Perion explains a prophecy just fulfilled and ends it thus: « Y ahun mas te digo, que le nunca cobrara por señor que ay haya ; hasta que venga el buen hermano de la señora que hará ay venir por fuerça de armas párias de otra tierra, y este morirá por mano de aquel que será muerto por la cosa del mundo que él mas amará. Este fué Morlote de Yrlanda, hermano de la reyna de Yrlanda, aquel que mató Tristan de Leonis sobre las párias que al rey Mares de Cornualla su tio demandaua y Tristan murió despues por causa de la reyna Yseo que era la cosa del mundo que él mas amaua ; y esto te embia á decir Urganda mi señora. » The portion beginning with « Este » and ending « amaua » seems a later interpolation and one which Montalvo's later mentions of Arthurian romance, as in the fourth book, lead one to consider his.

And finally the question must be considered what traits if any are to be found here which are distinctly Spanish and what allusions are made to Spain ? The moralizing already considered might be so classed and proverbs cannot but come to one's mind. Of these in the four books I find but two : one spoken by Gandalin : « Quien buen tiempo tiene e lo pierde, tarde lo cobra [1] », the other by Mabilia seems rathers to hold two proverbs in a sentence : « Para todo habrá buen remedio, y siempre me tuve por dicho que de tales juegos habriades tal ganancia. »

1. This bears close resemblance to a well known proverb : « Quien tienpo ha e tienpo atyende, tienpo viene que tienpo pierde ».

The allusions to Spain are few : the first, found at the end of the second book where « Brian de Monjaste, hijo del rey Ladasin de España » first appears ; the second to him and his knights (a thousand whom his father sent) ; in an account of the battle in which they took part they are spoken of as « los sus españoles que era fuerte gente y bien cabalgada, » a compliment not paid to those of any other race. But nothing in this affects the story other than superficially and with the mention of one allusion to Spain upon the return voyage of Amadis from Constantinople where they come to « el mar Oceano que es en derecho de la costa de España, » the list is complete.

With this must close the attributions of authorship to Montalvo, since carried further it could but be concerned with the literary qualities and would be out of the province of this study. Two incidents however must here be touched upon which seem late and for which one is tempted to consider Montalvo responsible. The first is the oft cited one of Leonoreta which certainly forms no intrinsic part of the story as it now stands and which I cannot believe ever did. But how it entered and when it is hard to explain. That for his continuation Montalvo should have found it useful to introduce a sister of Oriana his comment here would indicate : « y fué á tiempo, como adelante se dirá, emperatriz de Roma. » That, knowing the little poem, through it the suggestion of both the name and the pretty incident should have come to him, may stand as pure speculation. The treatment of this only important appearance of Leonoreta is that of « la niña hermosa » Briolanja as she first appears in our story and to be grouped with it and the Leonorina episode of the third book. We may class with these the early appearances of Esplandian which, although lacking in the charm these hold, are undoubtedly the work of the same hand. As to the introduction of the song into the romance, whether it was influenced by the lay Amadis composed which finds its explanation, as we have seen, in a Tristan episode, it would be hard to say.

The addressing it to the little sister of the beloved is, as has been suggested, in accordance with the teaching of the troubadours — and certainly so far removed from the early romances so largely followed as to be manifestly later than the portions directly imitated from them. It was thus it may be remembered that Dante guarded his secret through months and years and « per più fare credente altrui, feci per lei certe cosette per rima ». The very altering of the Leonoreta song by the addition of the final strophe and the explanation following indicate a conscious desire to make the purpose clear.

Following upon this naturally comes the consideration of the remaining episode : the one which furnishes so close a parallel with the beginning of La Vita Nuova. That here we have the source upon which our story drew is manifest. But how this entered in, why if the Vita Nuova were known we have no further trace cannot be explained.This portion may in its turn explain the idealism which has been much dwelt upon as distinguishing Amadis from its forerunners.

All aside then which can either definitely or conjecturally be ascribed to Montalvo there still remains no slight body of romance. Largely artificial in nature, what it possessed of original is a puzzling question. Something there must have been before this imitative romance. That it should have been planned as a moralized Lancelot no one who has followed the story could admit. That, all the like episodes removed, a slender poem or lay might well have furnished the outline is evident. Whether it did, only the finding of that or some definite reference to it, could prove. And yet perhaps it does exist in some poem — perhaps. Beyond that we cannot go.

LA SELVA CONFUSA

DON PEDRO CALDERON DE LA BARCA [1]

More fortunate than the other dramatists of the siglo de oro, Calderon did not suffer their temporary eclipse. Thanks to his faithful friend Vera Tassis, his works were at an early date edited with some degree of completeness. Subsequent editors such as Keil and Hartzenbusch have continued the task of making the poet's works easily accessible. However, in recent years, such facts as the reaction against German romanticism, the rehabilitation of Lope de Vega, Tirso de Molina, Moreto, Alarcon, de Castro, and others, and the greater need for complete and scholarly editions of these authors, have all tended to divert attention from Calderon. Yet there are in existence several of this author's works, which, if not absolutely inedited, are inaccessible owing to the rarity of the editions and which, both for their intrinsic interest, and because they contribute to a fuller knowledge of the poet, deserve to be rescued from the obscurity into which they have fallen [2].

I propose to publish the two most interesting of these plays;

1. I wish to offer grateful acknowledgment to Professors Karl Pietsch, H. A. Rennert, M. A. Buchanan, and F. L. Critchlow for many suggestions which I have utilized in the editing of this play.

2. Menéndez y Pelayo, Calderón y su teatro (Madrid, 1884), p. 56, stated his belief that another inedited play of Calderon would never be found. This remark was made 28 years ago during the Calderon bicentennial celebration, at a time when the plays to which I refer were unknown to bibliographers. He would hardly venture to make the same statement at the present day. I do not feel that the genuineness of La selva confusa need be debated.

on the present occasion, La selva confusa, and later, Troya abrasada. The first of these is a courtly comedy of intrigue (comedia palaciega de enredo); the second is a historical tragi-comedy of a spectacular nature. The one appears to be a production of the poet's youth, the other of his prime. The first was probably published in the so-called Parte XXVII of Lope de Vega's plays, a work now apparently inaccessible [1]. The only edition of the second which I have been able to discover is an obscure anonymous suelta of the year 1791 [2]. Both are of unquestionable authenticity. The former is an autograph throughout; and though the latter is partly written in the poet's own hand, partly by two other scribes, it is probable that the whole work was composed by Calderon alone. Both manuscripts formed part of the Osuna collection. Neither comedia was included in the list of plays which Calderon compiled for the Duke of Veragua. This and the fact that they were overlooked by Barrera have caused them to be lost sight of. They are listed by Paz y Melia and Breymann [3].

La selva confusa of Calderon is commonly stated to be a reworking of a like-named play by Lope de Vega [4]. In my opinion, there is little evidence that Lope de Vega or any other author than Calderon ever wrote a play of this name. It has been ascribed to Lope because a play called La selva confusa was one of the collection said to have been published in the Comedias de Lope de Vega Carpio, Parte XXVII (Barcelona, 1633). This volume was one of the so-called partes extravagantes of Lope's plays. Even the existence of these partes is a mooted question. Our sole knowledge of them is the description given by Fajardo in his manuscript bibliography. Chorley doubted their existence, while Rennert, who has recently discussed the matter, believes that they did exist [1]. Evidence corroborative of Fajardo appears to have been afforded by three volumes (tomos colecticios) once in the Osuna library, and apparently made up of fragments of at least two of these partes. Unfortunately these books, now in the Biblioteca Nacional in Madrid, are inaccessible to the public. During two successive summers, I have made repeated efforts to consult these books, but without success. Professor Rennert and other scholars have been equally unfortunate. That the books are not lost is evidenced by the fact that Menéndez y Pelayo has recently used them [2]. The opinions I here express are made reservedly. I may have occasion to correct them if I am later allowed to consult the volumes in question.

2. This suelta is to be found in the British Museum. Professor M. A. Buchanan has another copy. I possess another.

Not having, then, personally consulted the Osuna tomos colecticios, I am forced to rely upon the statement of Schack who records having read La selva confusa in « a very queer old print » found in the Osuna library [3]. Schack saw at once that the play, though ascribed to Lope, was wrongly attributed to him. Luckily he copied the play's first seven verses which agree word for word with the first seven verses of the Calderon autograph.

2. Cf. Obras de Lope de Vega publicadas por la real academia española, Vol. IX, (Madrid, 1899), pp. CV and CXXIV; Vol. X (Madrid, 1899), p. CVII.

3. Schack, Nachträge zur Geschichte der dramatischen Literatur und Kunst in Spanien (Frankfurt, 1854), pp. 86-7. It is not necessary to dwell upon Schack's supposition that La selva confusa is the same play as Calderon's lost Certamen de amor y celos, a play which Barrera has shown (Nueva biografía, Madrid, 1890, p. 457), was not written until 1640. I do not feel that Chorley's skepticism with regard to this point is justified. Cf. Rennert, Life of Lope, p. 532.

Now, if we have a right to assume that the « alter sehr seltener Druck » which Schack found in the Osuna library is identical with the Osuna volume 133 (and there is every reason to think that such was the case), which was supposedly made up of fragments of Parte XXVII, we have the strongest reasons for doubting that Lope wrote the play which Fajardo says was attributed to him in that parte. This doubt becomes the stronger when we consider the contents of Parte XXVII. It contained plays by other authors, though six of the plays are undoubtedly from Lope's pen. Besides La selva confusa, there is one other which may fairly be classed as doubtful : Allá darás, rayo. Those by other authors are : El sastre de Campillo by Belmonte ; El gran cardenal de España, Don Gil de Albornoz by Enrique Gómez; and Celos con celos se curan by Tirso de Molina. A play by Calderon, included in this miscellaneous collection, might easily have been attributed erroneously to Lope. This somewhat complicated statement of the evidence may be briefly summarized as follows :

1. A play called La selva confusa was attributed to Lope de Vega in Parte XXVII which we know only from Fajardo's description and the very existence of which has been questioned.

2. Three volumes, once in the Osuna collection containing many of the same plays said to have been printed in the partes extravagantes, are alleged to be fragments of these partes. One of the volumes contains a play called La selva confusa as well as other plays which Fajardo mentions as included in Parte XXVII.

3. Schack read the play in a book (probably the one in question) and satisfied himself that the play was not written by Lope. The seven lines copied by Schack are the same as the first seven of the Calderon autograph. Hence it appears probable that we have to do with only one Selva confusa, that of Calderon. At all events, it remains to be shown that Lope or another author wrote a play of that name.

Schack further mentions having seen in the Osuna library what purported to be an autograph copy of La selva confusa

bearing the signature Don Pedro Calderon, whereupon he conceived the suspicion that the writing was not genuine but an imitation. Why this doubt arose in his mind, it is difficult to understand. So far as I know, he is the only authority to doubt the genuineness of the Calderon autograph. Paz y Melia and the other experts of the Biblioteca Nacional have no doubt but that it is written throughout in Calderon's own hand. I have compared this play with other unquestioned Calderon autographs and the signature with other signatures of undoubted genuineness and cannot detect the slightest difference of hand. But even if it were found that the play had been copied by another hand, there could remain no reasonable doubt as to its authorship. Schack's doubts appear to have been occasioned only by the chirography. The play is so characteristically Calderonian from beginning to end that no other author could have written it [1].

Having expressed the opinion that the play called La selva confusa published in Parte XXVII was the same as the one with which we are concerned, I conclude that is was probably written before 1633. But there is reason to think that it was written at least ten years earlier. On July 21, 1623, a play called La selva confusa was produced privately before the court of Philip IV in Madrid. It was played by the troupe of Juan de Acacio [2]. This fact has been made known by Sr. Cruzada Villaamil [3]. As before

1. Not only most of the incidents in the plot but nearly every poetical image, almost every trick of style could be paralled from Calderon's other writings. Many of these parallels I have indicated in the notes but many more have been left without notice. No imitator could have caught Calderon's style successfully enough to write a work like La selva confusa.

3. Datos inéditos que dan á conocer la cronologia de las comedias representadas en el reinado de Felipe IV en los sitios reales, el Alcázar de Madrid, Buen Retiro y otras partes, sacados de los libros de gastos y cuadernos de nóminas de aquella época que se conservan en el archivo del palacio en Madrid. These articles appeared in stated, there is no conclusive evidence that anybody else ever wrote a play of this title. The natural presumption, then, is that the comedy in question was written by Calderon. The date is not too early. Vera Tassis would have us believe that Calderon wrote El carro del cielo ó San Elías in 1613. Hartzenbusch gives 1622 as the date of En esta vida todo es verdad y todo mentira, and conjectures that La virgen de los remedios was written in 1623. We are on firmer ground with respect to El privilegio de las mugeres which Calderon wrote in collaboration with Montalban and Coello when the pragmática of February 8, 1623, was fresh in the public mind. It is known that Calderon took part in the literary fiestas held in honor of St. Isidore during the years 1620-22. The consensus of opinion is that he was making his literary début at about this time. My conclusion is that La selva confusa was probably one of his early productions, written before July 21, 1623. This opinion is, of course, not susceptible of demonstration but it seems to be a reasonable interpretation of the slender available evidence. I do not, of course, deny that it is possible that the play acted in 1623 was the work of another author. In that event, the author was probably Tirso.

Internal allusions help but little in determining the date. An allusion to Tirso (2075) seems to indicate that the play was written before the death of Téllez in 1648. In verse 675, there is an apparent allusion to Lope's Amar sin saber á quién, a play probably written between 1618 and 1630, as it was printed at the latter date and is not mentioned in the second Peregrino list.

the Averiguador during the year 1871. They have recently been reprinted by Rennert. Cf. Mod. Lang. Rev., Vol. II, pp. 331-341; Vol. III, pp. 43-55. For the allusion to La selva confusa, cf. Vol. III, p. 52. The original documents give only names of plays, not those of the authors. Rennert follows custom in ascribing this play to Lope de Vega but agrees with me now that it may more probably be Calderon's. Cf. Averiguador, Vol. I, 1871, p. 9: En 21 de julio de 1623, se le dieron [á Juan de Acacio] 200 rs. por un particular que hizo á S. M. intitulado: La Selva Confusa.

In verse 2441, occurs the sentence : Con quien vengo, vengo. This saying, so proverbial in nature and expressive of one of the most binding obligations of the Spanish code of honor, must not be taken as referring to Calderon's play of the same name [1].

My contention that the play is not a reworking of one by Lope is strengthened by the fact that the poet seems to have been only very slightly influenced by Lope in writing it. On the other hand, the influence exerted upon him by Tirso is marked. Numerous incidents in the plot are almost certainly taken from the works of Fray Téllez. Even the jokes of the gracioso oftentimes come from the same source. The poetic style is very different and the enredo seems to be Calderon's own, yet the work fairly teems with reminiscences of Tirso's comedy. Most of these I shall point out in the footnotes. Menéndez y Pelayo has already shown that in this particular kind of play Calderon was most strongly influenced by Tirso [2]. The courtly comedy was a genre in which that author especially excelled. If, then, Calderon's play is a reworking of a lost original, I believe that that original was written by Tirso de Molina. Yet it is by no means necessary to posit such a lost original. Nearly all the motives found in the plot of La selva confusa may be found in other plays, especially in those of Tirso.

The play has already been termed a courtly drama of intrigue (comedia palaciega de enredo [3]). Calderon wrote many such plays, among which might be mentioned : El secreto á voces ; El acaso y el error ; La señora y la criada ; La banda y la flor ; Con quien vengo, vengo ; El alcaide de sí mismo ; Amigo, amante y leal ; Para vencer á amor, querer vencerle ; Las manos blancas no ofenden ; Dicha y desdicha del nombre ; Nadie fie su secreto ; De una causa dos efectos ;

1. Calderon makes frequent use of this sentence. Cf. F. W. V. Schmidt, Die Schauspiele Calderons (Elberfeld, 1857), p. 79.

2. Cf. Menéndez y Pelayo, Calderón y su teatro, p. 338.

3. Some authorities such as Schmidt and Günther prefer the term heroic comedy (comedia heróica).

Enfermar con el remedio (with Guevara and Cancer); La fingida Arcadia (with Moreto and Coello). As a rule, these plays of polite life had an Italian setting, for Italy was par excellence the land of culture and courtly refinement. Occasionally the poet's fancy roamed free in Hungary, Bohemia, Russia, the islands of the sea, or some other corner of the earth, remote enough to inspire romantic interest and sufficiently unknown to serve as the background for an idealized form of life.

Plays of this sort were rarely if ever based upon historic fact. In general, the Dukes and Duchesses of Mantua, Milan, Naples, Ferrara, etc. are only so many conventional figures, speaking in estilo culto and with manners patterned on those of Castiglione's perfect courtier. It is idle, then, to seek a historical source for a play like La selva confusa. No duke of the Sforza dynasty named Fabricio ever reigned. Filipo and Fadrique are purely fictitious characters. In all the annals of the house of Sforza, bloody as they are, one may look in vain for a fratricide like that attempted by Filipo. The Gonzaga line, also, produced no duke who could have been a prototype for the Gonzaga of this play. The Gonzagas did not receive the title of duke until 1530, only five years before the Sforza line ceased to rule; but any such attempt to fix the chronology of the plot would be as futile as similar attempts to work out a chronology for the Don Quijote. In writing La selva confusa, the author has respected historical fact no more than he has respected the facts of geography. Italy to Calderon was a no-man's-land wherein he felt at liberty to give his fancy free rein. We may rest assured that in this as in similar plays of his the characters are purely fictitious.

Neither do I detect in La selva confusa the atmosphere of the Italian novella. I have examined the works of the novellieri with no other result than to arrive at the negative conclusion which I had anticipated before beginning the search.

Calderon's sources seem to have been nearer at hand. He has drawn freely from other plays and some of the incidents are so common that it would be impossible to say from which one of many he took the idea. Tirso's Quien habló, pagó offers a striking parallel. A prince, after an attempt has been made upon his life, escapes to another court, takes service as a gardener, and wins favor in the eyes of a princess who penetrates his disguise. The lover disguised as gardener is, of course, a device of which the Spanish dramatists never tired. Cf. Tirso's Huerta de Juan Fernández, to mention one well known instance. The prince who in disguise goes as his own ambassador in order to see his enamorata is another familiar figure. Confusions resulting from mistaken identity are as old as comedy itself. The character of Jacinta may be a copy of any one of a large number of Tirso's heroines. She is the resourceful and somewhat virile woman who sets forth in disguise to seek a lost or faithless lover, and who is herself faithful or vindictive as occasion demands. This type, generally regarded as typical of Tirso, is found also in Lope. Cf. Porfiando vence amor. A heroine falling in love by reason of the good report of a man whom she has never seen suggests the influence of the romances of chivalry where the motive is of frequent occurence, just as it had earlier been in the literature of the middle ages. One recalls Jaufre Rudel and his « distant love. » It will be seen that most of the motives which Calderon wove into his plot are hackneyed and trite in the extreme. His originality is shown in his skilful use of such commonplace material.

There is, however, one motive employed in La selva confusa which is not so commonplace as the others. I refer to the use made of insanity or rather supposed insanity as a comic device. Insanity, real, feigned, or supposed, is, to be sure, not an uncommon theme in the Spanish drama. An interesting monograph might be written on the subject; but common as it is, I have been unable to find an exact parallel to its use by Calderon in the present play [1].

1. There are a great many plays such as Los locos de Valencia, La fuerza lastimosa, El maestro de danzar, etc., in which insanity is an incidental motive but

One thinks at once of Cervantes and the influence he exerted. In verse cdv, there is an allusion which shows direct influence. Calderon's admiration for him is well known. The novelist influenced the dramatist profoundly in many of his works. Allusions to Cervantes and his works abound in the writings of Calderon [1]. It would be interesting to know the plot of his lost play, Don Quijote de la Mancha. In La selva confusa, the treatment recommended for the insane is always that employed in Cervantes's novel, the method of non est irritandum [2]. Other characters always fall in with the whimsies of the supposed madman and never contradict his caprices no matter how absurd. But while there is discernible a trace of Cervantes's influence, Calderon owed much more, in my opinion, to Tirso's Fingida Arcadia.

This work contains an allusion to Parte XVII of Lope's Comedias which it mentions as the last volume that had then been published. It must have been written, then, after the publication of this parte in 1621 and before that of XVIII which appeared in 1622, in other words, a little before the time in which I have tried to show that La selva confusa was probably produced. I am confident that there is a close connection between these two plays. To the objection that La selva confusa may have been written before La fingida Arcadia, I may say that the latter was reworked by Calderon, Moreto, and Coello and produ-the resemblances are so remote as to make comparison valueless. La selva confusa is the most clever and elaborate of any Spanish play I know making use of the insanity motive. Even Echegaray's Ó locura ó santidad does not equal it in cleverness.

1. Cf. Rius, Bibliografía crítica de las obras de Miguel de Cervantes Saavedra (Villanueva y Geltrú, 1904), Vol. III, pp. 8-10. This list of references might easily be extended.

ced under the same name. Now, if Calderon had thought that Tirso had borrowed ideas from him in writing La fingida Arcadia, he would scarcely have imitated the latter play in his turn. In my opinion, Tirso's piece not only inspired the very inferior production written jointly by Moreto, Calderon, and Coello, but gave Calderon some suggestions which he utilized in writing La selva confusa.

In each there is a heroine, perfectly sane, but who is supposed to be insane. Tirso's Lucrecia feigns madness as a means of escape from a distasteful marriage. Calderon's Flora does not feign madness but is the victim of circumstances which make her appear bereft of reason. This idea of a sane person thought to be insane, Calderon may have derived from Tirso. But all he needed was a hint. Once supplied with this motive, he had discovered the means of constructing a very elaborate plot. Not only is Flora thought to be insane, but the whole game of cross-purposes is carried on in such a way that one character after another is placed in a position which makes him seem a lunatic to others. The whole forest has become « confused ».

If there were no other resemblances between these two plays, there would be more reason for doubting their source relationship; but in several matters of detail the similarity of the two works seems too close to be accounted for by accident. The scene of both is the Po valley. An out-of-door setting was a necessity for La fingida Arcadia on account of its burlesque pastoral scenes. The same setting was retained in La selva confusa, which suggests that it may have been acted in the Buen Retiro gardens. Felipe in the one play when in disguise, takes the name of Tirso just as Marcial does in the other. The scene where Alejandra penetrates Felipe's disguise suggests the other scene where Flora and Celia argue with respect to Fadrique's station. (Cf. note to vs. 735.)

It has now been shown that Calderon borrowed a great many of the elements of his plot, and that he seems to have drawn more freely from the writings of Tirso than from any other source. But these borrowings are matters of detail. The plot as a whole is as typical a Calderon enredo as could be found. It is true that Calderon was not the only dramatist of his day who could construct involved intrigues. Lope, Tirso and Alarcon, were all masters of the art. Witness La noche toledana, Don Gil de las calzas verdes, and, El semejante á sí mismo. But with other dramatists the intricate argument was used with less frequency. With Calderon it was the rule. The plot of La selva confusa is so typical of Calderon's manner that I believe it to be in the main original with him. My final conclusion with regard to sources is that the enredo considered as a whole is of Calderon's invention. However, the whole work considered in detail is a patchwork of incidents and motives taken from other plays. The influence exerted by Tirso is very apparent, and if this play is a reworking of a lost original, Tirso rather than Lope is its probable author. Yet even in that case there remains in Calderon's play a great deal which must have originated with himself.

Considered from the aesthetic point of view, La selva confusa is a work of mediocre importance. It will not be numbered among the poet's masterpieces. But if it be unworthy to rank with La vida es sueño, El mágico prodigioso, El alcalde de Zalamea, and El príncipe constante; if it lacks the dash and vigor of the cloak and sword plays and the elevation of the autos, nevertheless it far exceeds in merit dozens of the plays printed in the standard editions of Calderon. It compares very favorably with other plays of the same class of courtly dramas of intrigue. It greatly surpasses in interest any one of the numerous mythological dramas.

La selva confusa has the same faults that are inherent in most of Calderon's writings. The plot is more than ingenious; it is over ingenious. Verisimilitude is sacrificed to complexity; but the work is characterized throughout by a naïveté such as could hardly be surpassed by a mediaeval writer. Furthermore, there is the same sacrifice of the delineation of character to plot which one observes in most of Calderon's dramas. The style is pure culteranismo and affords many examples of the extravagancies and bad taste which are commonly associated with that form of poetry. Absurd conceits and strained metaphors abound.

But when all is said, the play contains much that pleases. Absurd as the plot is, it is never dull. The reader follows its complicated course with ever increasing curiosity and interest. If the play contains not a single well developed character, the rapid movement of the action makes one lose sight of that in the interest to see what will happen next. And if the play in passages exhibits culteranismo at its worst, in other spots there are lyric outbursts of real beauty and power. La selva confusa, in other words, has the qualities and the defects of an average Calderon play. To a modern reader, its chief charm is its very lack of modernity. He will not find here that realistic portrayal of life which he admires in so much of Spanish literature. On the contrary, he will find himself transported to a world of romance, a « valley safe in fancy's land » as Lowell expressed it, a region pervaded with that fantastic charm and rich poetic atmosphere which Calderon alone among Spanish dramatists knew how to create.

It is not my intention to make a detailed study of the versification of La selva confusa. Such a study would offer little not already noticed by the editors of other plays. A comparative study of the metrics of this and other Calderon plays would offer irrefutable proof of the authorship, were such proof considered necessary. The following metrical forms appear in the play :

1-81 (i-v) recitativo or silva de consonantes [1]
82-367 (vi-xxxiii) romance in e-a

1. Cf. Rengifo, Arte poética española (Barcelona, 1703), p. 58. This form admitted of the utmost freedom of rhyme. It was even admissible to intersperse verses which did not rhyme with the others. These verses must not be taken as indicating careless composition.

There is but one known manuscript of La selvã confusa, that formerly belonging to the Osuna collection and now preserved in the Biblioteca Nacional, Madrid. It consist of 58 paper folios measuring 211 by 145 millimeters. The handwriting is Calderon's throughout. The hand is exceptionally clear and easy to read but the entire absence of punctuation and the arbitrary division of words often make the exact sense difficult to determine. The manuscript is either a first draft or an early copy. Calderon himself would have called it a borrador. Apparently it never came into the hands of actors but served as the basis for a later copy. It has neither reparto nor censuras. There is no indication that this copy passed through the censor's hands. On the contrary, all corrections appear to have been made by the poet himself. These alterations were made on two different occasions. The first were made at the time of composition and in the same black ink which the author used in writing the greater part of the play. Later he made still more excisions and corrections, using a light brown ink. The reader will take it for granted that the erasures and corrections were made at the time of composition unless it is indicated in the notes that the correction was made in brown ink.

The excisions amount to one sixth of the whole play. They are usually indicated by a line drawn around the passage to be omitted. Sometimes each verse is separately crossed out. These omissions were sometimes made because the author changed the plot as he wrote, sometimes because the verse was infelicitous, other times merely to quicken the action. It appears to have been Calderon's custom to write more than the necessary number of lines in each act and afterwards to equalize the different acts and bring the play down to the right length by cutting out the unessential.

In this edition, I propose to print the omitted portions in connection with the main text, indicating them by the use of another type. It must be remembered, though, that the punctuation of the preceding and the succeeding lines is independent of these extraneous passages. In the footnotes, I shall indicate the author's corrections and my own deviations from his text. I have considered it of value thus to indicate the poet's tâtonnements. I have scrupulously followed the original orthography. The punctuation, capitalization and accentuation are my own. To avoid confusion, I have adopted a uniform spelling for the name of each of the characters in the play, and have not followed the author's variations. I have also written out the full names instead of adopting the author's inconsistent abbreviations. The introductory list of personas does not exist in the original.

21. These words recall those of the duke in Don Quijote, Part II, Chap. XXXIV (ed. Clemencín, Madrid, 1836), Vol. V, p. 201. Clemencín has an elaborate note on the subject. Eulogies of the chase and designations of it as an « image of war » abound not only in Calderon but in other contemporary dramatists. The expression was so trite that Tirso makes ones of his characters thus ridicule it :

No me digas que es imagen de la guerra :
que es vieja civilidad
y me cansa.

Cf. Comedias de Tirso de Molina (ed. Cotarelo y Mori, Madrid, 1906), Vol. I, p. 290. Tirso's La mujer que manda en casa begins very much like this with a eulogy of the chase. Cf. the very similar passage from Luis Pérez el Gallego (ed. Hartzenbusch), Vol. II, p. 446c :

ALMIRANTE.

Tienes, sobrina, razón,
Que es gallarda imitación
De la guerra belicosa.
¿ Qué es mirar de canes mil
Cercado un espín valiente, Defenderse diestramente
Con navajas de marfil ?
Á éste hiere, á aquél derriba,

cuello, quando derechas
de las puas que bibra forma flechas, siendo en batalla esquiba de su misma defensa aljaba viba;
y quando más cercado en el monte se mira de los ambrientos perros acosado,

Y sacudiendo derechas
Sus puntas, de humanas flechas Parece una aljaba viva.
¿ Qué es mirar luego un lebrel,
Que cuando la presa pierde,
De rabia sus manos muerde,
Y vuelve á cerrar con él,
Y los dos con más fiereza
Herir los bizarros cuellos,
Ley del duelo, que hasta en ellos
Puso la naturaleza ?

DOÑA LEONOR.

¿ Á quién no causa alegría,
Esta lucha imaginada ?
Si bien á mí más me agrada
Del viento la cetrería.
¿ Qué es ver sin mortal desmayo,
Una garza, cuyo aliento
Átomo es de pluma al viento, Al fuego es de pluma rayo,
Y de una y otra suprema
Región el término errante
Escala, que en un instante
Ya se hiela, ó ya se quema ?
Porque con medida tanta
Bate las alas, si vuela
Que si las baja, las hiela,
Las quema, si las levanta. etc.

Edward Fitzgerald has made a very spirited translation of this passage. Cf. Six Dramas of Calderon Freely Translated (London, 1903), p. 202. Cf. also El mayor encanto amor (ed. Hartzenbusch), Vol. I, p. 402a ; Hija del aire, primera parte, Vol. III, p. 30c ; La estatua de Prometeo, Vol. III, p. 704c.

la presteza con que á uno y otro tira, rreparo haciendo del subtil colmillo
cuyo marfil de Adonis fue cuchillo!
Y quando más cobarde se rretira, ¡ qué es de ver un lebrel que, fatigado, más veloz se proboca,
rrendido y no cansado, haciendose mordaza de la boca, pues la lengua se muerde quando las presas en el bruto pierde;
y al fin que, perseguido,
rreparar se pretende,
aunque seguro mal, bien defendido, mirar como antes muerto que vencido con ánimo y sin fuerças se defiende, matiçando las flores con la sangre y espuma de colores;
pues por boca y eridas de una suerte derrama copos y corales bierte!

FADRIQUE.

¿ Á quién no le dibierte
su lucha ymaginada?
¿ Á quién no da alegria? (2 r.) Pero á mí más me agrada en el ayre veloz la cetreria.
¿ Qué yguala al ber la garça que altanera al cielo se lebanta, siendo en conquista tanta término fijo de vna y otra esfera?
que entre el fuego y el viento corre sin alterar el mouimiento, quando del ayre en la rrejion suprema bate las alas que en el fuego quema, haciendo de su pluma al ayre esmalte.
¡ Qué es ver vn generoso girifalte, nuebamente á la luz rrestituydo,

31. Calderon seems to be confusing the porcupine and the boar. Adonis was said to have been killed by a boar. Cf. Calderon's La púrpura de la rosa.

conducirse atreuido á la garça y hacer en su porfia noble campaña la estacion vacia ; quando en admiracion, grandeza suma, abrasada la pluma,
los dos con buelo ciego rrayos de pluma son, abes de fuego, hasta que al suelo bajan,
abatiendo á la tiera el buelo altibo, dos rrayos, vno muerto y otro vibo !
¡ Y qué es ber de los vientos superiores abatida la esfera, viendo en ella volar la primabera !
pues abes que la pueblan de colores flores de pluma son, abes de flores, llenandole confuso
de alcotanes barios ! (2 v.)

LEONELO.

Ya es tiempo.

FILIPO.

¿ Es tiempo, conde ?

CARLOS.

Si. ¿ Qué esperas ?

FADRIQUE.

¿ Para qué es tiempo ya ?

FILIPO.

Para que mueras.
[Desenbaynan sus espadas.]

FADRIQUE.

¡ Hermano, Carlos, Leonelo !
¿ Qué tirana furia es ésta ?

81. The punctuation here and in other places is made without reference to the intervening passage which the author has rejected.

Pues ¡ para mí las espadas !
¿ Qué ynjusta colera os ciega que ynbidioso me persigue para que desta manera tomeis benganças, no siendo vuestro agravio mi ynociencia ?
¿ En qué os ofende mi vida ?
¿ Qué ynjusto traydor os fuerça ?

FILIPO.

Pues as de morir, escucha para que la cosa sepas.
Hijos del duque Fabricio, que los estados gobierna de Milan, somos y es bien que nuestra distancia adviertas.
Vn mismo padre nos dio vn ser mismo, aunque en dibersas madres, con tanta distancia como va de mala á buena.

No es mucho que siendo hermanos yo noble y tú ynfame seas, pues no es mucho que vna causa tan barios efetos tenga. (3 r.)

Ni en las mismas flores hay Que no dén, rojas ó azules, Tósigo á la araña amargo
Y miel á la abeja dulce.
Y pues virtudes y vicios
De una causa se producen, ¿ Qué mucho que de una misma Voz ser la lengua resulte
Víbora para los vicios
Y flor para las virtudes ?

blando barro y dura cera,
berás éste endurecerse;
verás ablandarse ésta.
¡ Qué mucho, pues, que en los dos XV inprima vna causa mesma, en barro humilde tu ynfamia,
y en la cera mi nobleza !

Hijo natural del duque eres, que en una francesa dama te tubo mi padre 105 sin ser casado con ella.
Muy noble dicen que fue;
mas ¿ qué ymporta que lo sea, si facilidad ynfame
disculpa mal la nobleza?
110 Antes la descubre más, que la mancha más afea que en un paño muy humilde en una muy rrica tela.
Despues de tenerte á ti, de Ferrara, madre mia,

noble por él y por ella.

Murio en fin y nuestro padre quiere que á la corte vengas, que te dio una pobre aldea.

Juntos nos emos criado
y con la misma grandeza, llamandote yo mi hermano
XXV como si en todo lo fueras. (3 v.)

El bulgo siempre ynconstante, que nobedades desea,

XVIII. The envy felt by Filipo toward his natural brother, Fadrique, suggests that entertained by Philip II toward Don Juan de Austria. The rural education of Don Juan and his subsequent introduction to the court afford a striking historical analogy to this passage.

a dado en quererte tanto que es en tu alabança lengua, y no por grandezas tuyas como porque alguna estrella te ayuda, porque algo bueno en tu nacimiento tengas.
Si haces mal á algun caballo, te aplaude de tal manera que el hacer mal lo haces bien.
Si sales á la carrera, tú solo eres á sus ojos ayroso y galan en ella;
y en máscaras difraçadas siempre es la mejor tu empresa.
En los justos y torneos
tu dibisa está más vella;
en los festines, tus galas;
en la corte, tus libreas.
Admitido de las damas,
y aun sé que alguna deseas,
sabiendo que tengo puestos
los ojos en su belleza.
Esa sortija en que yo estoy esculpido muestra mis celos y mis agrabios.
Yo la dí á Jacinta vella.

XXVI Y á tanto extremo as llegado que la fama nobelera el gallardo milanes
te llama por excelencia. (4 r.)

126. Hacer mal á un caballo signified to break a horse. The same pun may be found in Tirso's La muger por fuerza (ed. Cotarelo y Mori), Vol. I, p. 240:

Salió bizarro cuando el sol salía una mañana en un caballo airoso que á hacerle mal dijeron que venía;
mas él lo hizo tan bien, que fué forzoso mudar este lenguaje en quien miraba brío tan alentado y animoso.

Cf. also Lope's El saber puede dañar (ed. Hartzenbusch), Vol. III, p. 115c.

De aqueste aplauso a nacido, en mí ynbidia, en ti soberbia.
Vn soberbio, vn ynbidioso, ¿ adónde quieres que quepan ?
Estrecho es Milan y el mundo es estrecho ; y ansi es fuerça que el vno de los dos falte y éste quiero que tú seas.
Nuestro padre está cansado
y engendrar su muerte engendra en mí vn temor que an de hacerte el Duque de Milan.

FADRIQUE.

Cesa,
cesa de hablar en mi agrabio
y permitele á mi lengua nobles disculpas, si acaso la misma voz no se niega.
Hermanos somos y yo concedo la diferencia ;
pero el caballo castiço
echura es de quien le engendra.
No disculpo yo á mi madre, que vna libiana flaqueza tan aborescible es que aun un hijo la condena ;
pero si como tú dices fue muy noble, mal conciertan nobleza y facilidad.
No es posible que esto sea, que si es la vnion de dos almas matrimonio en la conciencia, solos saben él y el cielo si fue casado con ella. (4 v.) Mas biniendo á aberiguar tu mal nacida sospecha, que, enjendrada de vn temor, es cobardia por fuerça, ¿ qué ambiciones biste en mí de adquirir ynfame hazienda ?
¿ Qué principes conjurados tengo para mi defensa ?

¿ Con quién traté de tu agrabio ?
ó qué rraçones soberbias
as oydo en tu desprecio ?
¿ Qué armas prebine en tu ofensa ?
Todos mis delitos son ser bien quisto. ¿ Quién creyera que, porque me quieran todos, vn hermano me aborrezca ?
Pero oy el mundo, tú mismo, mis desdichos considera,
pues de los merecimientos hago agrabios, formo ofensas.
Como hermano te e querido
y si oy el duque muriera, oy jurara yo el primero en tus manos la obediencia.
Esto e dicho por dejar tu presuncion satisfecha
y por bolber por mi onor, mi lealtad y mi ynociencia, mas no para que presumas que es el temor quien me fuerça á darte satisfaciones, porque no es rraçon que tema (5 r.) traydores tan destarados, antes de agora pudiera ;
pues de qualquiera fiara mill vidas, si mill tubiera.
¡ Mirad de quién ! ¡ O felice mill beces aquel que llega á conocer su enemigo !
Mas la natural defensa me obliga á que de los tres, como puedo, me defienda.
Tres sois y para traydores sois muy pocos.

CARLOS.

¡ Muera !

FILIPO.

¡ Espera !
¿ Qué mayor testigo quieres de tu arrogancia y soberbia, pues solo y en este monte de tres defenderte piensas ?
Pero porque mi intencion declaradamente veas que no es matarte mas sólo asegurar mi sospecha,
la vida que no te quito, te doy. No quiero que mueras sino que dentro de vn dia dejes de Milan la tierra.
Pasa á otros rreynos adonde tan grande ventura tengas que vengas á ser señor por tus armas ó tus letras ;
que mi palabra te doy
de darte ayuda en las guerras, darte credito en las paces,
y para todas mi hacienda. (5 v.)
Dejame en Milan seguro.

FADRIQUE.

Mejor, Filipo, dijeras : Parte siguro, que yo lo yre pues que tú quedas.
Mas ¿ quién a visto que pida seguridad tan yncierta el traydor al que es leal, la malicia á la ynociencia ?
Yo me yre no porque pienses no ejecuto tu obediencia sino por huir de ti.
¡ Y plegue al cielo que pueda !
que de un traydor poderoso mal podré tener defensa desde los braços del sol hasta el centro de la tierra.

Mas sólo el que es bien nacido quiero que en los dos se sepa,
yo que no busco benganças,
tú que trayciones engendras.
El que por sí mismo es noble solo este nombre merezca, que no excede la eredada á la adquerida nobleza.
Vn dia me das de plaço.
No le quiero porque adbiertas que no e de bibir vn dia volbiendo atras la cabeza, pues que vibiendo á tu lado era ya, Filipo, fuerça vibir mirando tus manos, morir guardando tu lengua. (6 r.) Desde aqui me tengo de yr
no cargado de rriquezas, que las del propio valor son más estimadas prendas
y tanto que este vestido no e de llebar, porque veas que avn vn bestido no llebo adquirido de tu tierra.
Sólo aquesta espada elijo por mi amparo y mi defensa;
mas, no yendo tú tras mí,
aun boy siguro sin ella.
¡ Adios, Jacinta ! (Vase.)

CELIA.

¿No te dibierte este prado, que, matiçado de flores en variedad de colores,

plantas forman deleytosas vn laberinto de rrosas como en el cielo de estrellas?

¿No te alegran estas fuentes, dulces por lo lisongeras,
suabes por lo parleras,
y yngratas por sus corrientes?
¿No te da gusto este monte á quien el sol de sus lumbres corona las altas cumbres, terminos deste oriçonte?
pues al descubrir su coche
y al venir la noche fria, es atalaya del dia
y sepulchro de la noche.

¿Aquesta voca, por donde dibidiendose á pedazos el Po dilata sus braços
y en esas peñas se esconde, no te causa alegria?

FLORA.

Antes, pensar en su gusto (7 v.)

CELIA.

¡Estraña melancolia!
Desde la corte veniste

¿De qué procede el rrigor que te aflije y si no fuera atrevimiento, dijera, Flora, que tienes amor?
que vn continuo suspirar, vn abrasado sentir,
vn siempre mudo decir con un parlero callar efetos son de quien ama;
sin duda que quieres bien.
Dime, por tu bida, á quién.

FLORA.

Escuchame, pues la fama,
Celia, que ocupa veloz los ecos más escondidos tal vez toca á mis oydos con acentos de su boz, porque por dibersos modos,

DUQUE.

440 ¡Gran desdicha! ¡Ynfeliz suerte!
¡Socorrelde, pescadores,

LXIII. Calderon probably omitted this redondilla so as not further to blacken the character of Filipo. From this point on, Filipo is represented as weak rather than cruel. It was necessary to rehabilitate the character of the man who was to receive Jacinta's hand in the third act. Calderon can hardly be said to have been successful in this attempt.

440. Calderon was much given to the representation of rescues from fire, water, runaway steeds, overturned coaches, etc. In Las manos blancas no ofenden, he caps the climax by representing simultaneous rescues of two different characters, one from shipwreck, the other from a runaway horse. These stage devices afforded opportunity for noisy and sensational entrances. In the last named play, Cesar, when rescued from a watery grave in the Po, offers a fanciful story similar to that told by Fadrique in the present instance. In Luis Pérez el Gallego, there is a half-naked prince in disguise who also gives a fictitious account of himself.

Humildes padres me dieron limpio orijen si no noble, en cuyo amparo vibi en tanto que en areboles rrenovandose en su fuego, fenix de sus rresplandores, doce veces coronó
el sol á los signos doce.
Sin padre entonces quedé, eredando sólo entonces vn barco pobre, aun de rremos, de dichas y de fabores.
Con éste mi padre andaba entre otros pescadores que, labradores del agua, la labran quando la rrompen ;
pues en mal formados sulcos que dejan, si en ella corren, sembrando engañosas rredes, escamado el fruto cojen. (10 r.)

Al tiempo, pues, que este rrio segunda vez se rrecoje, dejando llena la arena

de conchas y caracoles, un ignorado rraudal me arrebató en sus disformes corrientes sin que los rremos rresistieran sus rrigores.
Dejéme llebar del curso, trocando el esfuerço en voces;
mas voces de El Desdichado aun el viento no las oye.
Arrojé al agua el vestido
y de mis humildes dones sólo rreserbi esta espada, propia ynclinación del hombre. (10 v.) Á discrecion de las aguas llegué á unos peñascos donde en brebes pedaços vi dibidido el barco pobre.
¡O rrigurosa fortuna!
¿Qué trofeos te propones?
¿Qué vitorias te prometes?
¿Te adjudicas qué blasones?
¡En vn rrendido te bengas!
Ynfame es tu accion, no noble.
Pero ¡ay, qué humildes rruynos ensayos son de tus golpes!
Luchando con la corriente, quedé vibo barco entonces, haciendo rremos los braços
y los ojos dos faroles.
Montes de agua eran las olas, siendo ya mis miembros torpes, apenas falda de vno quando cumbre de otro monte.
¡Quántas veces, ya rrendido,

572. Calderon's works abound in comparisons of swimming men, horses, etc. to ships. Cf. Lances de amor y fortuna (ed. Hartzenbusch), Vol. I, p. 44b, and Los tres mayores prodigios, Ibid., p. 286a.

dí á la muerte mis acciones
y el deseo de vibir me otorgó fuerças mayores!
Nadando, pues, en veneno, (que bien merece este nombre quien dio, bebida, la muerte) llegué á aquesta orilla donde allé en tu piedad asilo, en tu nobleza fabores, amparo en tus nobles manos
y vida en tus plantas nobles.

FLORA.

¿Á quién no le a enternecido (11 r.) tu rrelacion lastimosa?
¡O fortuna rrigurosa,
qué con vn pobre lo as sido!
¡Vn barquillo no perdonas!
Mas golpes ejecùtados en tan humildes estados amagos son de coronas.

FADRIQUE.

Antes pienso que asigura su misma ynconstancia ansi pues, quebrando el golpe en mí, la corona está segura.

FLORA.

¿Piensas otra vez bolber á vibir la espuma fiera?

FADRIQUE.

No, señora, hasta que adquiera más fuerças y más poder.
Madre del hombre es la tierra
y huir el peligro combiene, pues el que madre no tiene en asegurarse yerra;
porque al fin está violento
y sujeto á una traycion.

DUQUE.

Pues ¿quién los traydores son en el rrio ?

FADRIQUE.

El agua y viento.

DUQUE.

¿Traydores son?

FADRIQUE.

¿Qué mayores que los mios ? pues se pagan de hacer mal y quando alagan son sus entrañas peores.
El dia más claro es
el de mayor tempestad ;
que llaman con amistad para vengarse despues. (11 v.)

DUQUE.

Ó tu término ó tu estado de suerte me a enternecido que con piedad me a mobido
y con valor me a obligado.
Aqui entre el Rrin y el Po tengo,

628. As is well known, Calderon's errors in geography are frequent and profound. Shakespeare's « coast of Bohemia » finds many parallels in the works of our author. Thus, in El mayor monstruo los celos, Memphis and Jerusalem are seaports. In Con quien vengo, vengo, Verona is a seaport. El castillo de Linddbridis is filled with fantastic geography. The same is true of Duelos de amor y lealtad, where the island of Ceylon is mentioned as being in close proximity to Tyre and the coast of Africa. In El hado y divisa de Leonido y Marfisa, the Peloponeso is a mountain on the island of Mitylene. In El Conde Lucanor, the islands of Toscana are situated close to the mouth of the Nile. Calderon seems to have fancied that the Rhine had its source close to the Po in northern Italy. Cf. La puente de Mantible (ed. Hartzenbusch), Vol. I, p. 206b :

Pues queriendo resistir Carlo Magno sus intentos, murados de agua y jazmines,

vnos hermosos jardines,
donde á dibertirme vengo;
y si, en tanto que destierra el pecho el temor que fragua, cansado de labrar agua,
quisieres labrar la tierra,
porque más seguro estes, en este ameno lugar
te puedes aora quedar.

FADRIQUE.

Dame, gran señor, tus pies, que aqui esperaré que amanse, á sombra de tu fabor,
de la fortuna el rrigor.

DUQUE.

Llebalde dónde descanse. (Vanse todos y quedan Flora y Celia.)

Le esperaba en el confín
De aquesta parte de Italia, Donde ese Olimpo gentil, Valla de esmeralda y flores,
Tiene por espejo al Rin.

I know of no similarly named river in Italy with which the author could have confused the Rhine. Calderon had an equally vague idea of the course of the river Po. For example, in Las manos blancas no ofenden, the Po is made to flow through Milan, Orbitelo, and Ursino. In this play, we are told (353) that it divides the states of Milan and Mantua, whereas both cities are located north of the river. Near Milan, it is described as a mountain torrent (301). Near Mantua, the current is still furious, the river has divided into several branches (378), and nevertheless is affected by the tides (544). Enough examples have been given to prove that Calderon's geography was often purely imaginary. Even if there were not other reasons for doubting Vera Tassis's statement that Calderon saw military service in Milan, his own writings would cause one to doubt it. Contrast with this the generally accurate knowledge of Italy shown in the writings of Cervantes and Mateo Aleman.

CELIA.

¿En qué estás ymaginando?
¿De qué estás tan dibertida?
Ese sentimiento olbida.

FLORA.

¿No sabes que estoy pensando, Celia, que no es este hombre como él dice pescador sino hombre de más onor, de más calidad y nombre?
En Fadrique hablando estaba Amor, que en mi pecho a sido antes muerto que nacido, quando la desdicha braba puesto en esta orilla alló deste hombre desdichado (12 r.) y el rretrato ymaginado de mi memoria borró la su presencia mudado;
mill veces me parecia que era el mismo tenia en la ydea dibujado;
y consultando el rrigor que en tan grande extremo ves, éste es Fadrique ó es á quien yo e tenido amor.

CELIA.

¿Eso dices? pues es bien que acredites tal sospecha.

FLORA.

Sí, Celia, pues ya estoy hecha á amar sin saber á quién.

671. A possible allusion to Lope de Vega's Amar sin saber á quién. If my contention that La selva confusa was written prior to July 21, 1623 be accepted, this allusion affords a terminus ad quem, enabling us more nearly to determine the date of Lope's play. It is not mentioned in the second Peregrino list. Therefore its probable date is between 1618 and 1623.

CELIA.

Tu grande melancolia casi en locura a parado.

FLORA.

Tú, Celia, ¿no as rreparado su lenguaje y cortesia?
¿Tú no adbertiste que quando elado y muerto salio lo primero preguntó
quién era al que estaba hablando?
y esto viendo el modo en todo que á lenguaje le conbiene, pues el rrustico no tiene diferencias, que de vn modo habla siempre.

CELIA.

Á tu argumento
está, Flora, rrespondido.
Un bruto es agradecido
y del agradecimiento fue esa pregunta engendrada.

FLORA.

Sí, pero en tan gran tormenta no hacer de otra cosa cuenta sino de sólo la espada. (12 v.)
No es humilde inclinacion sino de pecho brioso más noble y más generoso.

CELIA.

¡O qué barbara opinion!
pues la ynclinacion no fue de la sangre procedida, que es negada ó concedida de la estrella. ¿No se bee al más honrroso ejercicio tal bez vn pobre ynclinado, como el más noble y honrrado tal vez entregado al vicio?

¿Qué mucho que se ynclinase á la espada, que es accion propria del hombre?

FLORA.

Rraçon
tienes en aquesto. Pase.
con vn estremado engaste?

CELIA.

¡Qué despacio le miraste!
Pero disculparlo puedo con decir que la compró por cosa menos pesada;
que quien siempre el agua nada tales prendas procuró.

FLORA.

¡Y tan dulces las rraçones!
¡Las penas tan declaradas!
¡Las palabras tan cortadas!
¡Tan corteses las acciones!
¡Aquel callando decir!
¡Aquel con balor llorar!
¡Tan á tiempo el suspirar
vi simulando el sentir!
Quejarse de la fortuna ningun hombre humilde sabe, porque en su pecho no cabe sino una queja ynportuna (13 r.) llorada rrusticamente.

CELIA.

Con el viento el mar se altera.
Con causa brama vna fiera que todo su pena siente.
El agua vna piedra ablanda.

FLORA.

¿No sabes lo que sospecho ?

CELIA.

¿Qué ?

FLORA.

Para rrustico pecho muy delgada era la olanda. (Vanse y sale el Duque de Milan, Fabricio, Oton y acompañamiento.)

FABRICIO.

Dirasle, Oton, al duque quánto estimo esta eleccion que de Filipo a hecho
y que en el alma su memoria ymprimo;
y porque quede en todo satisfecho,

735. Compare with this scene a very similar one in Calderon's Saber del mal y del bien (ed. Hartzenbusch), Vol. I, pp. 23 f. Doña Laura and Doña Hipolita while hunting meet Don Alvaro, who, attacked by his enemies, has jumped down from a cliff to save his life. Although he is dressed like a peasant, Laura is struck with his noble bearing, and maintains that he is noble. Hipolita upholds the contrary, saying :

Con el viento el mar se altera,
Con celos brama una fiera,
Y un monte con causa siente, etc.

The resemblance is very striking. In Tirso's Quien habló, pagó, the Conde de Urgel escapes from Aragon where an attempt has been made to murder him and takes refuge in the court of Navarra. Bon sang ne sait mentir and, although the count is disguised as a rustic, the Infanta Doña Blanca instantly penetrates his disguise. Again, in Tirso's Fingida Arcadia (ed. Cotarelo y Mori), Vol. I, p. 442, Alejandra suspects that Felipe is noble in spite of the fact that he is masquerading as a gardener :

¿dicen bien cambray y randa con el buriel y el sayal?

And again :

Llámeos el que os considera dentro holanda, y sayal fuera Tirso hipócrita de amor.

que con la ejecucion del casamiento
e de decir lo oculto de mi pecho.
No muestro en las palabras el contento
y Filipo en extremos le mostrara, si de la caza el fin siempre sangriento para acciones tan propias le dejara.
En ella ocioso se dibierte aora, ynadvertido de merced tan rrara, con Fadrique su hermano, porque ygnora la ventura de bien tan soberano.
Mas en su nombre á la dibina Flora,
o noble Oton, le vesareis la mano.

OTON.

Y aora en el mio de vesar la tuya, pues en esta ocasion tanto onor gano.
Esta vnion quiera el cielo se concluya. (Salen Filipo, Carlos, Leonelo.)

FILIPO.

¡Ay, mi señor el duque!

FABRICIO.

Quando adbierto
tu turbacion no sé qué es lo que arguya.
¿Qué a sucedido? que del daño cierto,
y yncierto de la causa, estoy dudoso.
Habla, prosigue pues.

FILIPO.

Fadrique es muerto. (13 v.)
por quitar de tu duda el fin penoso.

FABRICIO.

¡Ay, Filipo, tu lengua no callara!
¿Dejarasme dudar el rriguroso suceso que temi? pues que no hallara más tirano rrigor ymaginado ni dolor que más pena me causara.
¿Cómo murio, Filipo, El Desdichado?

FILIPO.

Vn caballo corria que violento era en la tierra un ypogrifo alado
y un aguila sin plumas en el viento.
Á aquéste, pues, Fadrique presumia fatigar, apurandole el aliento, y tan firme la espalda le oprimia que, discurriendo por la berde estancia, medio caballo y hombre parecia.
La presuncion, la barbara arrogancia, á la alta cumbre le subio de donde midio de su eminencia la distancia.
El Po en sus ondas funebres le esconde, que aun el cuerpo no goça de la tierra.
Y aqui el silencio á mi dolor rresponde.

FABRICIO.

¡Qué bien te dan el nombre de la guerra!
¡O quánto, caça, á su rrigor combienes!
mas porque veas lo que el mundo encierra, quando á darme esas tristes nuebas bienes, tu pena e de pagarte con contento
y tus pesames oy con parabienes.
El de Mantua me ofrece en casamiento para ti su dibina Flora. Yngrato rrespondes á su noble ofrecimiento. (14 r.)
A aquesto bino Oton con tal rrecato que sin berte oy á Mantua se bolbia.
Es Flora de veldad vibo rretrato donde verás sin sol lucir el dia, donde vibe cifrada la hermosura.
Con ella Amor á Apolo desafia.
Al duque le diras la desbentura de Fadrique que al alma me a llegado y que el amor satisfacer procura quanto estoy á sus onrras obligado.

OTON.

Direle tu desdicha y tu deseo
y tanto su trajedia me a pesado que no menos dolor en mi alma creo.

FABRICIO.

¡Ay, hijo, con rraçon El Desdichado!
De tu mismo valor fuiste troſeo. (Vanse el Duque y Oton.)

CARLOS.

Pareceme que as sentido
las nuebas del casamiento.

FILIPO.

De Fadrique el fin violento causa de mi pena a sido.

LEONELO.

Bien fingiste la cayda
y el llanto á tu falsa fee.

FILIPO.

La cayda sí lo fue,
mas la pena no es fingida.

CARLOS.

Si tu ymbidia pretendio su muerte, ¿qué estás ansi?

FILIPO.

Su destierro pretendi,
Carlos, que su muerte no.
Nunca pense yo que hiciera tan grande temeridad sino que su boluntad al temor obedeciera
y de Milan se ausentara.
Siempre fue nuestro concierto tenerle ausente y no muerto; (14 v.) porque despues se acabara

815. Filipo's statements do not agree with what has gone before. Calderon is continuing his unsuccessful attempt to excuse Filipo's conduct.

mi temor y libremente conmigo á Milan viniera donde alma y vida le diera.

CARLOS.

Presto vn traydor se arrepiente, mas bolbiendo á lo tratado,
señor, deste casamiento,
¿ qué sientes de Flora ?

FILIPO.

Siento,
Carlos, vn nuebo cuydado;
pero yelame tambien
el llegar á ymaginar que me tengo de casar sin ver primero con quién.
Fuerte cosa es que sin vella á ser su esposo me obligo y sin consultar conmigo si podre vibir con ella.
Mi rresolucion ignoro
y más quando en mi deseo turbados los ojos veo de Jacinta á quien adoro. (Salen Jacinta con vn pañuelo en los ojos y Marcial.)

CARLOS.

¿ Quién duda que por la muerte de Fadrique será el llanto ?
¡ Tanto amor le tubo !

FILIPO.

¡ Y tanto
beneno mis ojos bierten, buelto en fuego por los ojos, como lágrimas los suyos !

CARLOS.

Bien an mostrado los tuyos que son celosos enojos.
Hablala.

FILIPO.

No sera bien que pague en estremo tal culpas de quien quiere mal llanto de quien quiso bien. (Vanse los tres.) (15 r.)

JACINTA.

Buelbe, Marcial, á decirme las nuebas de penas llenas, porque ya sólo con penas
as de poder dibertirme.
¿ Fadrique se despeñó ?

MARCIAL.

Cuentase de muchos modos
y aunque ansi lo bieron todos, diferente lo bi yo.

JACINTA.

Pues ¿ cómo con tristes llantos, quando la nueba me diste,
deste modo lo dijiste ?

MARCIAL.

Por no desmentir á tantos.
Vn hombre, señora, abia con tal opinion y nombre de que no era para hombre mas para mujer seria.
Y vien claro lo mostro, pues vn dia su mujer,
como suele suceder,
vn hijo muerto pario,
y, no haciendo desto espantos,
dijo como agora puedo :
Sin duda murio de miedo
de auer desmentido á tantos.

JACINTA.

Pues ¿ Fadrique no cayó ?

MARCIAL.

No me aprietes tanto aora,
si tú no quieres, señora, que muera de miedo yo.

JACINTA.

Cómo su desdicha fue
fiate, Marcial, de mi.
¿ Corrio ?

MARCIAL.

No.

JACINTA.

¿ No cayó ?

MARCIAL.

Si.

JACINTA.

LXX ¿ Y murio al fin ?

MARCIAL.

No lo sé. (15 v.)

JACINTA.

Su infelice muerte dudas
y, quando mi pensamiento de tan creydo tormento á la contingencia mudas, LXXV callas tanto. Si no a muerto, ¿ por qué me quieres negar este gusto de dudar ?
Haz mi cierto llanto yncierto.

JACINTA.

885 Es secreto te prometo.

MARCIAL.

Es guardar en caso tal joya en caja de cristal fiarle á mujer secreto.

Pero ¿ sabes lo que creo ?
que en mujer me e transformado, porque vna vez me an rrogado lo mismo que yo deseo ;
pues, si quisieras tener vengança de mi tardança, fuera la mayor vengança
el no quererlo saber.
Sabras, pues, que las rraçones deste suceso no oy, porque solamente vi
desde lejos las acciones.
Yo que siempre me anticipo
fui donde desenbaynadas tenian las tres espadas Carlos, Leonelo y Filipo
y Fadrique. Un poco andube solo, porque se quedaban todos ; y, biendo que estaban suspensos, tambien lo estube.
Mucho ablaron y despues Fadrique se desnudó (16 r.) y á las ondas se arrojó.
Aquésta la verdad es.
Sus bestidos por el rrio luego los tres arrojaron
y aquesta voz publicaron del caballo y confio que el cielo dara fabor á su ynociencia en tan grabes desdichas. Tú acaso sabes si él era buen nadador, que yo no le vi nadar en mi vida ; que con eso

903. The poet here expresses himself badly. He means to say that Carlos, Leonelo, and Filipo had drawn their swords and that Fadrique was also with them.

920. A coarse allusion to the proverb : La gala del buen nadador es guardar su ropa.

pudo, aunque estraño suceso,
de esotra parte llegar, ó por ventura ayudado de algun pescador seria.

JACINTA.

¡ Que tan grande tirania aya un principe engendrado !
¿ Quién podra, Marcial, sufrillo ?
Mi llanto, mi pena crece.

MARCIAL.

Calla, que ya me parece que rrebientas por decillo.

JACINTA.

Pues yo, Fadrique, e de ir á saber de ti y buscarte.
Pasaré de esotra parte.
Yo tengo de descubrir
si bibo ó si muerto estás ya que en mi suerte a allado el primero bien dudado.
Tú, ¿ no me acompañarás para que pase adelante mi yntento ? (16 v.)

MARCIAL.

En qualquier rrigor yo buscaré á mi señor.

JACINTA.

Y yo buscaré á mi amante.

MARCIAL.

Pero tú...

JACINTA.

Nada bere.

MARCIAL.

Ni yo pienso decir nada,
si estás ya determinada.

JACINTA.

¿ Cómo más oculta yre á este amoroso suceso ?

MARCIAL.

¿ Bestiraste de hombre ?

JACINTA.

No.
No me aplico al traje yo y es muy de comedias eso.

MARCIAL.

Pues ponte de labradora;
que encubre mucho su traje, mudando sólo el lenguaje.

JACINTA.

Aquesta noche á desora saldre. ¡ Ay cielos, lo que intenta con amor vna mujer !

MARCIAL.

Pues, si pretendes saber mi temor, estáme atenta :
Vn tuerto á compar venia

961. The tuerto, the cojo, and the corcovado were favorite butts with the wits of Calderon's time. The stories in which they figure are legion. Cf. Buchanan, Short Stories and Anecdotes in Spanish Plays, Mod. Lang. Rev., Jan. 1909, p. 180, where a story involving the same pun on the word cargado is quoted from the Floresta española of Melchor de la Cruz. The same author tells many similar stories but no other very closely resembling the one now under consideration. In the present instance, Calderon has probably worked into one several stories. Cf. Tirso, En Madrid y en una casa (ed. Hartzenbusch), p. 539a :

Así dijo un hombre tuerto,
Que en la guerra le dejaron Viudo de un ojo : pedía pan á la plaça y tomó vn cojo que preguntó á cómo aquel pan valia.

Auia hambre entonces cara,
y encareciendo su afan,
le rrespondio : Cada pan
cuesta vn ojo de la cara.
Dijole el cojo inportuno :
¿ Cómo bais tan afanado, tuerto, si no abeis comprado sino solamente vno ? (17 r.) El tuerto dijo : No sé pero, cojo mentecato,
no compareis más barato,
pues no bais en mejor pie.
Vno y otro se amoynó
y, andando los dos al morro, al pacifico socorro
un corcobado llegó ;
y, aviendose apaciguado
aquella pendencia braba, se alló que cargado estaba solamente el corcobado.

Á un príncipe, á quien servía,
Una bandera : pasaron
Meses y años sin que dél
Se doliese, aunque premiaban
Otros muchos, que llevaban
Más favores que papel :
Gastó su pobre caudal,
Y á vueltas dél la paciencia :
Alcanzó una vez licencia,
Y dándole un memorial,
Dijo : Señor, ¿ quién pensara Que á venderse la bandera Que pido, no se me diera
Por un ojo de la cara ? etc.

compar for comprar, an example of dissimilation followed by elimination. Cf. Menéndez Pidal, Gramática (Madrid, 1905), p. 115. Cf. compareis (975) but comprado (971).

Aplico. Filipo es
cojo, que anda sin sosiego ;
y tú el tuerto y aun el ciego, pues tu peligro no bes ;
y yo soy en estas fiestas medianero entre los dos.
¡ Ay, Jacinta, plegue á dios no saque ajuar á cuestas ! (Vanse y sale Fadrique solo en auito de billano con vn açadon.)

FADRIQUE.

Siempre ynconstante fortuna pára el curso á un Desdichado, pues á tan humilde estado no se bio llegar ninguno.
Si tu mudança ynportuna para humillarme a de ser, no tengo ya que temer,
que si tu tirana guerra me a abatido hasta la tierra, ¿ adónde podre caer ?

Antes, te quiero pedir que te buelbas á mudar ; (17 v.), pues si no ay donde bajar, por fuerça sera á subir ;
pero si llego á adbertir
la pena que el alma alcança, tu mudança es mi esperança
y tal mal mis ojos ven que para hacerme á mi bien aun faltará tu mudanza.

Regid, humildes deseos, en el campo no vn baston
sino un rrustico azadon ;
que aquéstos son mis empleos;

992. Compare the similar expressions casa á cuestas and bastos á cuestas : cf. Tirso, La peña de Francia (ed. Cotarelo y Mori), Vol. I, p. 645, and La Santa Juana. Segunda parte, Ibid., Vol. II, p. 287.

las flores son mis trofeos;
su numero, mis rrigores;
mis desdichas, sus colores;
y asi el haçadon desbele, que es baston que regir suele vn exercito de flores. (Sale Flora sola.)

FLORA. [Ap.]

(Al alçadon arrimado se a quedado dibertido
y el mobimiento y sentido tiene á la memoria atado.
Quiero hablarle.) ¡ A Desdichado !
¿ qué pensamiento penoso te tiene en el campo ocioso ?

FADRIQUE.

Al nombre no rrespondi,
que si en tu boca le oy,
serlo en ella es ser dichoso, goçando venturas tantas.
Mal ese nombre me toca, que no lo es quien la voca pone donde tú las plantas.
Si de oir menos te espantas, oye lo que eres aora : (18 r.) Anunciando el sol, Aurora; Venus en la caza eres;
en aquesos campos, Ceres;
y en estos jardines, Flora.
Aquesta tierra no tiene ya que cultibar en ella, si á berte, su copia vella, Flora entre sus rrosas biene;
el viento el curso detiene, las fuentes el blando acento,
las aves el mobimiento,
y el sol tiempla sus rrigores;
que, por diosa de las flores, todo está á tu voz atento.

FLORA.

¿ Vate en la tierra mejor que en el agua ?

FADRIQUE.

No lo sé, puesto que en la tierra allé otra tormenta mayor.

FLORA.

¿ Tormenta ?

FADRIQUE.

Y con tal rrigor que en mis lágrimas anego, aunque abrasado nabego ;
pues en olas de agua alli me bi abrasado y aqui lo estoy en ondas de fuego.
Alli me dieron desmayos agua y viento contra mí ;
y entre tierra y fuego aqui me anego bebiendo rrayos.
¿ Son de la fortuna ensayos ó pruebas del sufrimiento ?
Sin duda vibo violento,
pues en qualquiera ocasion siempre mis contrarios son agua y tierra, fuego y viento. (18 v.)

FLORA.

Tus rraçones e escuchado
y presumo que ese traje buscó prestado el lenguaje ó él es vestido prestado.
¿ Dónde vn pescador a allado esos modos de decir que en tu entendimiento veo ?

FADRIQUE.

Pudo darlos el deseo
con que te pienso serbir.

FLORA.

Á creer lo que sospecho, el alma se determina que aquese sayal es mina del oro que está en el pecho.

FADRIQUE.

¡ Quién dejara satisfecho, vella Flora, ese temor con tener tanto valor como en tu sospecha está !
pero ¿ quién, Flora creera á un humilde pescador ?

FLORA.

Yo te creere.

FADRIQUE.

Si tú das
credito á la humildad mia, algun secreto algun dia
del jardinero sabras, que más no te dire mas...

FLORA.

Tus rraçones considero
y por entenderlas quiero venir mill veces á oirte.

FADRIQUE.

Y yo sere por serbirte desde oy tu jardinero.

This speech was first given to the duke. — 604. These words are given to the duke in the original. The poet here neglected to make the correction which he made in other places. The word señora in 606 shows that the lines are supposed to have been uttered by Flora. — 616. After T. s. was written : ¿ Qué mayores ? The poet crossed them out and wrote them in another line. — 659. borró, a correction for quitó. — 662. el mismo, a correction for la que yo. — 680. viendo, a correction for por saber. — 694. noble, a correction for fuerte. — 786. tus, a correction for mis. — 789. After this verse were written 792, 794, 793, 794 again, and 795. They were all stricken out. — 848. A faulty rhyme. — 885. Originally : que el secreto te p. — 890. e, a correction for an. — 966. Originally : y rrespondiendo á su. The present line was substituted for this. — 970. Pues crossed out at beginning of verse. — 996. A faulty rhyme. — 1042. The verse originally read : todo á tu bista está atento. — 1082. s. t. d. crossed out and rewritten in another line.

(19 r.) LA SELBA CONFUSA

ACTO SEGUNDO

(Flora y Celia.)

CELIA.

En notable extremo das en que su nobleza ves.

FLORA.

En que es cierto que lo es
y [yo] no lo sé de más.

CELIA.

¡ Vn hombre no conocido que muerto el agua arrojó en estas arenas dio tal echiço á tu sentido !

¿ Qué trofeo te asigura su calidad y nobleza ?
Plegue á dios que tu tristeza
no aya parado en locura.

Deja el loco pensamiento
y adbierte que ya a benido Oton y que te a traydo nuebas de tu casamiento ;

Deja ciegas ylusiones de Fadrique á quien no viste y de vn hombre á quien viste da no rrusticas rraçones.

pues de Fadrique ya estás con justa causa oluidada ;
y luego desengañada del pescador lo estaras. (19 v.)

[FLORA.]

Celia, Celia, nunca a sido tan facil mi voluntad que dé con facilidad
aqui credito, alli olbido.
Las alabanças oy
de ese Fadrique y mi fee por rrelacion incliné á quien en mi bida vi ;

Ymagine que era vn hombre discreto, galan, baliente, cortés, afable, prudente, generoso y gentil hombre ;

y como le ymaginé
desta manera le vi en el pescador y asi á su vmildad me yncliné;

y si en mi concepto á él
ó á Fadrique hice fabor, á éste como á pescador,
y como príncipe á aquél,
CV si el casarme yo sentia, era porque en pena braba á Fadrique me ynclinaba y á Filipo aborrecia;

1120 y si mi confuso amor á mi concepto conbiene, El Desdichado le tiene, pues no le falta el valor.

CELIA.

Aquésa es tu locura. (20 r.) (El D[uque de Mantua y] Oton salen.)

DUQUE.

¿En fin rresponde
1125 el de Milan que estima mi deseo?

OTON.

Noblemente á tu gusto corresponde, agradecido á tan ygual empleo.

DUQUE.

Flora mia, ¿aqui estás?

FLORA.

Señor, ¿adónde
puedo mejor quando á tus pies me beo?

DUQUE.

1130 Parece que te trujo el pensamiento, llamada de tu gusto y mi contento.
Ya estás casada, Flora, y es...

FLORA.

Detenga
tu lengua agora el pensamiento ynjusto, que, para que yo eterno gusto tenga,
basta sauer que a sido con tu gusto.

DUQUE.

Grande obediencia al punto se prebenga comun aplauso á mi grandeza justo.

OTON.

Con no menor el de Milan viniera, si vna tragedia no le tubiera.
Fue la mayor que el sol rresplandeciente vio, presidiendo en trono luminoso desde la cuna que le da el Oriente hasta el Ocaso que es sepulchro onrroso.

DUQUE.

¿ Y qué fue ?

OTON.

Que murio ynfelizmente Fadrique, hijo del duque, que animoso de vn caballo veloz domaba el brio y desde el monte le despeña al rrio, hecho pedaços en él ; agua encierra su cuerpo desdichado, que procura tiraniçar los guesos á la tierra, (30 v.)
[d]andole en ondas fria sepultura.

[DUQUE.]

El gusto más cabal más pena encierra.
Sigue el pesar á la mayor bentura.
Vente conmigo, Oton, para que escriba el pesame que es bien que yo rreciba. (Vanse los tres y quedan Celia y Flora.)

FLORA.

Celia, ¿ es verdad lo que e oydo ?
¿ Es berdad lo que e escuchado ?
¿ Qué es lo que por mí a pasado ?
¿ Qué es lo que me a sucedido ?

Estas nuebas me a traydo Oton. De mi daño yncierto, dos penas en él advierto quando sus nuebas rrecibo, pues trav mi tormento vibo
y mi pensamiento muerto.

Y el vno y otro es tan fuerte que no sé, á los dos rrendida entre la muerte y la vida, quál es la vida ó la muerte.
Si en la de Fadrique adbierte mi amoroso pensamiento, morir en su muerte intento
ó llorando otro rrigor, porque no es muerte menor vn forçado casamiento.

CELIA.

Si das en tan grande extremo, la ymaginacion ó el llanto pueden en tu pecho tanto que tu bida ó tu juycio temo.

FLORA.

Celia, en vn fuego me quemo
y en lo que pensando estoy (21 r.) yo misma la llama doy, porque más mi daño adbierta.

CELIA.

Á llamar quien te dibierta con musica ó juegos voy. (Vase Celia y sale Fadrique.)

FLORA. [Ap.]

(Sólo mi tormento olbida, noble Desdichado, el verte,

1176. Compare with this the somewhat similar scene in Tirso's Vergonzoso en palacio, in which Magdalena tells her bashful lover of her love for him, pues de Fadrique la muerte oy rresucita en tu vida.

Quiero fingirme dormida por notar con atencion las palabras ó la accion que tiene en tantos enojos, pues que, fingidos, mis ojos linces vigilantes son.)

FADRIQUE. [Ap.]

(¡ Ay, Fadrique Desdichado!
¿ Á qué termino as venido ?
¡ de vn pobre sayal vestido !
¡ de vn rrico sol abrasado !
¿ Qué atrebimiento te a dado tan altibo pensamiento ?
pues aunque merecimiento tienes, ¿ quién creera tu onor ?
pero prueba del balor
fue siempre el atreuimiento.
Yo me quiero declarar, diciendo á Flora quién soy y por qué causas estoy en tan vmilde lugar.
Mas ¿ quién á mí me a de dar credito ? pero ¿ qué veo ?
ó la finge mi deseo (21 v.)
ó Flora es por quien dormida es ya ymagen de la vida quien de la muerte es trofeo.

¿ Quién podra ygualarte aora, quadro en hermosas colores,
si sobre tus bellas flores

while she pretends to be talking in her sleep (ed. Hartzenbusch), p. 220.

A closer analogy in offered by Tirso's La muger que manda en casa (ed. Cotarelo y Mori), Vol. I, p. 465. Jezabel learns Nabot's secret while feigning sleep.

1206. Calderon makes use of the Pygmalion and Galatea story in La fiera, el rayo y la piedra.

dormida tienes á Flora ?
Aves, que duerme el Aurora,
aumentad vuestro placer,
CXXV que si siempre suele ser
haciendo al dia la salba, cantad, que pues duerme el alba, forçoso es amanecer.

Vn escultor que labró
vna diosa en estremado mármol quedó enamorado de lo que perficionó.
1210 Á Jupiter le pidio alma para la pintura
y él se la dio gran ventura y lo mismo ymaginara si á este instante despertara 1215 con alma tanta hermosura.
¡ Ay, Flora ! si tú supieras quién soy, aunque te espantaras, ni mi llanto despreciaras ni de mi amor te ofendieras.
1220 Fingir pretendo las veras.
Aqui me quiero ensayar (22 r.) como tengo de llegar
y, haciendo cuenta que estoy con Flora, decir quién soy, 1225 pues no me puede escuchar.)
Flora, envido te rrendi mi vida. [Ap.] (Mal e empezado, que claro está que abrasado estoy despues que te bi.) 1230 Por fuerça mal voy ansi, pues aunque fuerça no fuera,
por voluntad te quisiera, porque á tener libertad
hiciera la voluntad 1235 lo que la fuerça no hiciera.
No te espantes si te doy admiracion que en tal traje hablo con este lenguaje, que aunque en este estado estoy,

Don Fadrique Esforcia soy que de vn monte despeñado llegué á tus plantas aogado
y no sé si rrio pasé, puesto que en ellas me hallé
más que mojado abrasado.

Tu yncredulidad, sospecho CXXX que como llegué desnudo...
pero que fuese no dudo porque tú bieras del pecho el fuego en que está desecho.
Desnudo, Flora, llegué
CXXXV y la causa desto fue (22 v.) porque, vyendo de vn rrigor, en las manos de vn traydor todo el vestido dejé.

¡ Bien aya el traydor hermano que tanto mal me causó para que goçasse yo vn sabor tan soberano !
Oy más que e perdido gano, que en la desdicha que vi sólo á Jacinta perdi pero ya me causa enojos despues que en tus vellos ojos dos claros jacintos vi.
Mi trajedia te e contado.
Mi ystoria te e dicho aqui ;
y en aberla dicho asi
parece que e descansado, pues con esto me e escusado de que tú la ayas sabido ;
con esto el deseo e rrompido
y ya no te la dire.

FLORA.

Ya no tienes para qué.
Todo, Fadrique, lo e oydo
y no me e marabillado que nada se adelantó tu onor para lo que yo te tenia ymaginado.

FADRIQUE.

¿ Qué es, Flora, lo que as soñado ?

FLORA.

Que eres Fadrique.

FADRIQUE.

¿ Ése es
tu sueño ? (23 r.)

FLORA.

Que aqui te ves
por vn traydor perseguido.

FADRIQUE.

Notable tu sueño a sido.

FLORA.

Y que en esse traje estes...

¿ pero el traje qué ynportaba
CXL si el alma se descubria
y diamante parecia que engastado en plomo estaba ?
Quien ausente te adoraba presente a benido á berte.
CXLV Quien creyo tu infeliz suerte
mira su dicha crecida
y al fin te mira con vida quien a llorado tu muerte.

ya, Fadrique, lo e sabido todo, todo lo e escuchado.
Los oydos an belado,
si los ojos an dormido.
Falso el disimulo a sido.

FADRIQUE.

Señora, lo que yo hablaba de Fadrique era y estaba dibertido en su castigo.

FLORA.

No disimules conmigo.

FADRIQUE. [Ap.]

(¿ Quién vio confusion más braba ?
Si aqui quien soy concedo, que se sabra luego es llano en Milan y de mi hermano vibir siguro no puedo.
Acobardame este miedo ;
pero á Flora no quisiera que el negarme yo ofendiera.
Esto me detiene luego ; (23 v.) mas nada concedo ó niego con yrme.)

[Hace que se va].

FLORA.

Fadrique, espera.

FADRIQUE.

No soy Fadrique. ¡ Ay de mí !

FLORA.

Pues pescador.

FADRIQUE.

¿ Soy lo yo ?

FLORA.

¿ No eres pescador ?

FARIQUE.

Sí y no.

FLORA.

¿ Y eres Fadrique ?

FADRIQUE.

No y sí.

FLORA.

Pues Desdichado, oye.

FADRIQUE.

Asi
el mejor nombre as allado, pues huyo lo que e deseado. (Vase.)

FLORA.

Adbierte á tanto rrigor, desdichado pescador
ó Fadrique Desdichado. (Sale Celia.)

CELIA.

¿ De qué tantas voces das ?

FLORA.

Tú llegas, Celia, á ocasion, que de mi ymaginacion oy el efeto verás.
¡ Quántas vezes te decia que el fingido pescador más calidad, más onor
y más nobleza tenia !
Pues, Celia, para que estes de mi verdad satisfecha
y acredites mi sospecha, Don Fadrique Esforcia es.
Estás ya desengañada de las voces que me cuesta el que tú lo creas.

CELIA. [Ap.]

(Ésta (24 r.)
ya es locura declarada.
Como siempre ymaginó que era noble y supo cierto que ya Fadrique era muerto, los dos hombres confundio
y hiço vno de los dos, creyendole á su cuydado que es Fadrique El Desdichado.

¡ Loca está ! ¡ Balgate dios !
¿ Quién a de negarlo ? ¿ Quién a de ponerse en rraçon con tal ymaginacion ?)

FLORA.

¿ Qué te parece ?

CELIA.

Muy bien.

y si yo te lo negaba,
CL era porque te temia,
no porque no conocia
el balor que oculto estaba.

FLORA.

Como ves que ya es berdad
y que negarlo no puedes, CLV por fuerça me lo concedes.

CELIA.

Pues su mucha calidad, ¿ cómo pudiera negarte ?
Mill vezes el alma vio
que éste era Fadrique.

FLORA.

Y yo
CLX mill veces quiero habraçarte.

FLORA.

Al duque quiero decir quién es, porque claro está que encubierto se dira que por mí pudo venir.

CELIA.

Dices bien y se asegura con decirlo tu temor. (24 v.)

FLORA.

¿ Quién vio ventura mayor ? (Vase.)

CELIA.

¿ Y quién vio mayor locura ?

¿ Ay lástima semejante ?
¡ En esta loca porfia paró tu melancolia !
¡ A ! ¿ quién abrá que no espante CLXV y no le enternezca verte con tanta hermosura loca ?
¿ Y á qué llanto no proboca el mirarte de esa suerte ?

Al duque quiero abisar
de lo que le a sucedido, para que le halle adbertido quando le llegare á hablar.
Mas ¿ qué jente es ésta ? (Salen Filipo, Carlos y Leonelo.)

CARLOS.

Aora ¿ qué es lo que piensas hacer, solo y disfraçado ?

1348. Filipo's eagerness to catch a glimpse of his future wife unbeknownst to her was in keeping with the adventurous spirit of the age. Cf. Prescott, Philip the Second (Boston, 1855), Vol. I, p. 42, where we are told how Philip, a boy of sixteen, went in disguise to catch a first glimpse of his fiancée, the Infanta María of Portugal : « Impatient to see his destined bride, the young prince had sallied out, with a few attendants, to the distance of five or six miles from the city, all in the disguise of huntsmen. He wore a slouched velvet hat on his head, and his face was effectually concealed under a gauze mask, so that he could mingle in the crowd by the side of the infanta, and make his own scrutiny, unmarked by any one. » Later in life, a sedate statesman of forty-three, he repeated the exploit on the occasion of his marriage to Anne of Austria. Cf. Ibid., Vol. III, p. 473. Passing from history to fiction, cf. the opening scenes of Lope's La corona merecida. I could add scores of similar instances from nearly all the contemporary dramatic authors. The prince his own ambassador was one of the commonest dramatic motives of the century.

FILIPO.

Ver,
sin que me conozca á Flora ;
saber si podre vibir con ella, que á la mujer la a de confirmar el ver pero eligirla el oir.

LEONELO.

Dicen que es Flora muy vella.

FILIPO.

No es, Leonelo, la hermosura la que más gusto asigura sino la fuerça de estrella.
¿ Qué ynporta que hermosa sea, si bemos feas queridas
y ermosas aborrecidas ?

CARLOS.

Es más dichosa la fea.

LEONELO.

No lo sera la que viene alli.

CARLOS.

¡ Qué rrara velleza ! (25 r.)

FILIPO.

Como la grande tristeza
de Flora aqui se entretiene, aunque á su gusto no ynporte, á este efeto se an mudado estas selbas en poblado, esta pobre aldea en corte.

CARLOS.

Hablala.

FILIPO.

La libertad
del campo y de forastero dan licencia á un caballero para que á vuestra veldad se atreba...

CELIA.

¿ Qué pretendeis ?

FILIPO.

Á hablar al duque venia desde la corte y querria, si desto no os ofendeis, preguntando dónde está...

CELIA.

En esa apacible casa de la siesta el rrigor pasa ;
y si quereis yr allá,
yo os guiaré.

FILIPO.

Si el arrebol
de vuestros ojos me guia, siendo rrayos la luz mia,
yre al palacio del sol.
No os canseis, que yo sabre yr solo, que no se ignora el camino.

CARLOS. [Ap. á Filipo.]

(Si ésta es Flora,
¿ qué te parece ?)

FILIPO. [Ap. á Carlos.]

(No sé.)

CARLOS. [Ap. á Filipo.]

(¿ No es hermosa ?)

FILIPO. [Ap. á Carlos.]

(Hermosa es.)

CARLOS. [Ap. á Filipo.]

(¿ Qué te ofende de ella ?) (25 v.)

FILIPO. [Ap. á Carlos.]

(Nada.)

CARLOS. [Ap. á Filipo.]

(Pues ¿ qué tiene ?)

FILIPO. (Ap. á Carlos.]

(No me agrada.)

CARLOS. [Ap. á Filipo.]

(¿ Por qué ?)

FILIPO. [Ap. á Carlos.]

(Sabraslo despues.)

CELIA. [Ap.]

(Este galan forastero hace en mí vn efeto hablando que se ba en el alma entrando.
Aquí entretenerle quiero por goçar vn dia de espacio, del campo la libertad sin la gran puntualidad de la corte y el palacio.)

FILIPO.

¿ La hermosa Flora no está con él ?

CELIA.

Pues ¿ buscaisla á ella ?

FILIPO.

Dicen que es Flora muy vella
y deseo berla.

CELIA. [Ap.]

(Ya, para entretenerle aquí allé ocasion.) No ignoreis que yo sé que conoceis á Flora.

FILIPO.

Nunca la vi.

CELIA.

Yo sé que ya la abeis visto.

FILIPO.

¿ Antes de aora ?

CELIA.

Y despues
de aber venido.

FILIPO. [Ap.]

¡ Qué mal mi dolor rresisto !)
Si sois sol que el campo dora, viendo en vos la primabera, escusado agrabio fuera preguntaros si sois Flora. (26 r.)

CELIA.

Pues ¿ soy tan hermosa yo como vos la encareceis ?

FILIPO.

No, por cierto, y la excedeis.
¿ Sois Flora ? Decid que no.

CELIA.

Fuera hacerme ofensa á mi confesarlo, abiendo oydo lo que aueis encarecido.

FILIPO.

¿ No lo sois ? Decid que si.
Quien hace la ofensa soy,
señora, en aber quedado corto en lo que e ymaginado.
[Ap. á Carlos.] (Carlos.)

CARLOS. [Ap. á Filipo.]

(¿ Señor ?)

FILIPO. [Ap. á Carlos.]

(Muerto estoy

CELIA.

En obligacion quedara, si fuera Flora, á seruiros.

FILIPO.

Y yo me quedara oyros,
si tanto no me ynportara la brebedad. Guardeos dios, que no puedo esperar más.

CARLOS. [Ap. á Filipo.]

(¡ Qué estraño con ella estás !)

CELIA.

Y guardeos el cielo á vos.
[Ap.] (Por donde pense entablar se acabó la ficcion mia.
¿ Qué rrespeto ó cortesia le an suspendido el hablar ?
¡ Ay, gallardo forastero !
¿ qué es lo que el alma procura ?
Mas de Flora la locura al duque abisarle quiero.) (Vase.)

CARLOS.

Ya se a ydo Flora.

FILIPO.

Y yo á Milan e de bolber.

CARLOS.

Ella nos lo dio á entender pero no se declaró. (26 v.)

no te bayas, pues, sin vella.

LEONELO

Si te conocen...

FILIPO.

Ya estoy rresuelto á decir quién soy CLXXX y aun á casarme con ella, ya que Jacinta á mi amor
tan mal a correspondido, poniendo á un tiempo en olbido mis deseos y su onor.
CLXXXV ¡ Plubiera al cielo supiera
dónde se a ydo, Leonelo!

LEONELO.

Pues ¿ casasla ?

FILIPO.

Sabel cielo
que vida y alma la diera ;
que con celosa pasion, CXC siempre, Leonelo, verás que el amor viene á ser más.

CARLOS.

Y menos la estimacion.

FILIPO.

Hablemos agora aqui
de lo que auemos de hacer.

LEONELO.

Yo no sé cómo a de ser.

CARLOS.

1445 Lo que me parece á mí es, pues descubrirte esperas, y esto sera lo mejor, que tú como enbajador
de parte tuya vinieras.

FILIPO.

Dices bien. Ansi estare más seguro y, disfraçado, con esto disimulado
mejor del duque sabre.

CARLOS.

de dónde saldra el si ó no.
Ó á Milan te volveras
ó el concierto efetuaras.

FILIPO.

Y descubrireme yo entonces si es Flora.

si es Flora.

CARLOS.

Pues ansi sea.

FILIPO.

¿ Quién vio sucesos mayores ? (Salen Marcial y Jacinta en abito de villanos.)

LEONELO.

¿ Quién son éstos ? (27 r.)

CARLOS.

Labradores
de aquesta pequeña aldea.

CXCVIII. Archbishop Trench, Calderon his life and genius (New York, 1856), p. 70, pays Calderon high praise for the absence of obscenity and coarseness in his plays. Calderon has received more of this praise than he deserves. Those who have studied the original Calderon borradores know that a great deal of his reputation for decency is due to the kindly offices of the censor and the modern editor. In some instances, like the present, he owed something to his own sober second thought. Calderon was not on the whole a licentious author, but he was not the Puritan that his Anglican biographer would have one believe.

LEONELO.

Dejalos y enpiece aora
el engaño.

FILIPO.

¿ Ay más rrigor ?
¡ Quién de Jacinta el amor pudiera pasar á Flora ! (Vanse.)

MARCIAL.

No ay hombre que diga de él.
Sin duda el Po le sepulta en sus ondas.

JACINTA.

Él le oculta.
¡ Quánto abariento cruel !
¿ Qué es lo que auemos de hacer ?

MARCIAL.

No sabes qué estoy pensando.

JACINTA.

¿ Qué ?

MARCIAL.

Que le bamos buscando como vn hombre á su mujer.
Vn hombre pobre tenia
vna mujer que, si hablaba, contra todo porfiaba
y todo al rrebes lo hacía.

1470. This very common story has been thoroughly studied by Köhler and Bolte, Kleinere Schriften, Vol. I, (Weimar, 1898), p. 506 n. Cf. also Jacques de Vitry (ed. Crane, London, 1890), p. 225. Buchanan, Mod. Lang. Notes, Vol. XXI, p. 169, mentions the principal Spanish variants. The story is to be found in the Arcipreste de Talavera, Sebastian Mey's Fabulario, and in Timoneda's Sobremesa. Calderon's direct source is not plain. I may add that there is an evident allusion to the tale in Tirso's Pretendiente al revés (ed. Hartzenbusch), p. 42c.

Aogóse sin tener
rremedio y los que se allaron presentes le aconsejaron que buscase a su mujer.
Él el trabajo tomó que allarla fuera el trabajo, yendo el cuerpo rrio abajo.
Rrio arriba la buscó
y si alguno condenaba por ynociencia, ¡ qué es llano la malicia del villano !
Esta rrespuesta le daba :
No os dé aquesto pesadumbre, que, si es muerta como viba, abrá nadado hacia arriba por yr contra la costumbre. (27 v.) Ansi pienso que buscamos á Fadrique, pues los dos, qual ves debajo de dios,
contra la corriente vamos,
que en tal tiempo no le a allado, puedo jurar con berdad,
con amor y con lealtad,
vna dama y un criado.
Y tú misma considera,
si su nombre preguntamos,
el escandolo que damos ;
y no menos rrisa fuera que, vestidos desta suerte, preguntaramos por él.

JACINTA.

¿ Ay confusion más cruel ?
En alguna traça adbierte.

MARCIAL.

Quando la justicia quiere

1506. This same ruse is mentioned by Lope, El hombre de bien (ed. Hartzenbusch), Vol. IV, p. 195b :

saber quién es algun hombre, le prende con otro nombre.
Él entonces se prefiere á decir su nombre mismo;
y esto podemos acer aora para tener
luz en tan obscuro abismo.
Preguntemos por vn hombre, pobre, humilde y desdichado, que conbenga á nuestro estado y Anton ó Jil sea su nombre;
y rrespondera qualquiera hombre: Destas señas, no, porque vno que aqui aportó destas y estas señas era.
Veremos si bienen bien.

TANSILO.

De la justicia aprendí
Esta treta.

CLAVELA.

¿Cómo así?

TANSILO.

Cuando va á prender un reo
Por algun delito feo,
Y no le conoce allí,
Pregúntanle si es un hombre
De otro nombre del que tiene,
Para que él mismo se nombre:
Piensa que por otro viene,
Y dice él mismo su nombre.
Así que nombres espero
A Lucinda un caballero
Que el nombre apenas supiese, Para que ella te confiese
Que sólo quiere á Rugero.

JACINTA.

Tú lo dices. Esto agamos, (28 r.) pues ansi con rraçon vamos
y más seguro tambien.

MARCIAL.

Jente viene, disimula.

JACINTA.

¡ Vestia ! ¡ Aquello auias de ser !

MARCIAL.

¡ Llebe el diabro la mujer !

JACINTA.

¡ O llebe el diabro la mula !

MARCIAL.

¡ Yo so mula con enpacho!
Ya mi tontada adebino, pues en tan largo camino
no te é dicho si soy macho.
(Salen el duque y Oton y Otabio.)

OTON.

Gran desdicha fue.

DUQUE.

De suerte me a enternecido Fadrique que no sé con qué publique lo que e sentido su muerte.

OTON.

Tú tienes justa rraçon.

DUQUE.

Que no sé si lo sintiera más quando Filipo fuera.

MARCIAL. [Ap. á Jacinta.]

(Llega, que es buena ocasion.)

JACINTA. [Ap. á Marcial.]

(Pues que yo sabre mejor, dejame á mí pescudar.
¿ Por quién e de preguntar ?)

MARCIAL. [Ap. á Jacinta.]

(Di que vn pobre pescador.)

JACINTA.

¿ Sabra decir su merce, señor, si acaso a llegado á esta orilla vn desdichado ?
que otro nombre no le sé, mire, era pescador
y se a perdido en el rrio.

DUQUE.

¿ Que era vuestro...

JACINTA.

hermano mio.

MARCIAL.

Y era mi amo, señor.
Yo tambien le voy buscando con ella, porque cabales me debia veinte vn rreales. (28 v.)

OTABIO.

¿ Y por eso bais llorando ?

1549. This same delight in multiplication is a characteristic of Tirso's gracioso. Cf. Amar por arte mayor (ed. Hartzenbusch), p. 430a and Cautela contra cautela (ed. Hartzenbusch), p. 506b. In the latter instance, the lackey calculates that he has served his master 86,000 hours. In the present instance, Calderon probably got his idea from Tirso's Amor y celos hacen discretos (ed. Hartzenbusch), p. 156 c. A lady there promises the clown as many beatings as a doubloon has blancas. Very much terrified, the gracioso proceeds to make the computation.

MARCIAL.

Pues sí. No tengo rremedios para aberlos de cobrar y me tengo de quedar yo sin quarenta y dos medios.

OTABIO.

¿ De eso llorais ?

MARCIAL.

¡ Ay ! ¿ Quién llebe con paciencia tan gran tiro ?
pues, si sus quartillas miro, ochenta y quatro me debe.

JACINTA.

Mi seeñor.

MARCIAL.

¿ No son artos
los trabajos que yo os cuento ?
pues, si los mirais, son ciento
y sesenta y ocho quartos ;
y como bos los teneis,
no sentis mis llantos brabos.

JACINTA.

¡ Calla !

MARCIAL.

Eran sus ochabos doscientos y treinta y seis
y éstos no los perdeis vos, por eso no lo sentis, pues quatrocientos mais son y más setenta y dos.
Mis manos no son tan francas que me ayan dado más rrentas.

JACINTA.

¡ Calla, ya !

MARCIAL.

Son nobecientas
y quarenta y quatro blancas.

JACINTA.

¡Deja! ¡Acaba esos cuydados!

MARCIAL.

Pues, si contais mis tormentos, hallareis mill y doscientos
y ochenta y ocho cornados;
y en dos años no los gano. (29 r.)

JACINTA.

¿Sabra su merce decir si acaso hacertó á benir por esta tierra mi hermano?

OTABIO.

Señor, yo pienso sin duda que á quien busca esta mujer debe aquel hombre de ser...

JACINTA. [Ap.]

(¡El cielo mi yntento ayuda!)

OTON.

que salio á este campo aogado;
y lo confirma mejor
el trato de pescador
y el nombre de Desdichado.

DUQUE.

Dices bien. Aqui llegó, labradora, perseguido,
sin aliento y sin bestido, vn hombre á quien arrojó
ese rrio ayrado y fiero, bengando en él su porfia;
y el que pescador vibia
aqui vibe jardinero,

rreparado del agrauio
en que ese monstruo se emplea.
Yo me olgaré de que sea
el que tú buscas. Otabio, con ella le buscarás.
Ydos, pues, con él los dos.

JACINTA.

¡ Guardete mill años dios !

MARCIAL.

¡ Y dos mill, señor, San Blas !

[Ap. á Jacinta.] (Jacinta.)

JACINTA. [Ap. á Marcial.]
(¿ Qué ?)

MARCIAL. [Ap. á Jacinta.]
(¿ As adbertido, por si acaso fuere él,
que la fortuna cruel CCV en pescador le a fingido
y sirbe de jardinero, porque todo lo concedas
y á su lado bibir puedas ?)

JACINTA. [Ap. á Marcial.]
(Ya todo lo considero.) (29 v.)

OTABIO.

¿ No benis ?

JACINTA. [Ap.]
(¡ Ay, confusiones !
¡ Mi laberinto mayor !
Obidio se a buelto Amor con tantas trasformaciones.) (Vanse y sale Celia.)

1609. San Blas was supposed to aid those afflicted with diseases of the throat and hence was the patron saint of the picaros whom they invoked to save them from the halter.

CELIA.

Ya que llego á hablarte, escucha.
Oyras la mayor desdicha que jamas a sido dicha.

DUQUE.

Ya conmigo vn temor lucha que á sentimiento proboca.
Habla.

CELIA.

Señor.

DUQUE.

Dilo, pues.
No me hagas dudar qué es.

CELIA.

Flora, señor, está loca.

DUQUE.

¿ Qué dices ?

CELIA.

Lo que as oydo.

DUQUE.

¿ Quién su locura causo ?

CELIA.

En este punto perdio
de todo el punto el sentido, porque vieras su velleza rrendida á un notable exceso despues de muchos.

DUQUE.

Que en eso
a parado su tristeza !

CELIA.

Ella estaba enamorada de Fadrique, esto es verdad, ó tubo la voluntad á su opinion inclinada.

Como despues se trató casar con Filipo fue la causa mayor por qué tan gran tristeza la dio;
y quando aquel pescador
sacaron á esta rribera, dio en decir entonces que era hombre de fama y valor. (30 r.) Oy que supo que era muerto Fadrique y que al otro vio, con mill boces afirmó que era aquél Fadrique cierto, haciendo, ¡ o caso ynportuno !
vna por más confusiones
las dos ymaginaciones, haciendo de los dos vno.
A dado en decir que es él Fadrique, como lo hiciera de otro qualquiera que viera.

DUQUE.

¡ Ay, desdicha más cruel !
En este punto llegó
aqui una humilde mujer que hermana debe de ser
y señas y nombre dio.
Y por otra parte Oton á Fadrique muerto biera, si el rrio no le escondiera. (Sale Flora.)

OTON.

¡ Notable ymaginacion !

FLORA.

Mucho me pesa de allarte, señor, con· [C]elia á tu lado, pues las nuebas te abrá dado que yo sola quise darte.

Ya te abrá dicho que vienes á un bien de que estás ajeno, pues vibo en tu tierra y vueño á Fadrique Esforcia tienes.
Dame albricias desta dicha, que por el don que te ofrece bien el alma las merece.

OTON. [Ap. al Duque.]

(¡ Qué lástima !

DUQUE. [Ap. á Oton.]

¡ Qué desdicha !)

FLORA.

CCX En traje está que le encubre ;
mas como entre nubes vi (30 v.)
los rrayos del sol, ansi por el vestido descubre
él de el alma el rresplandor.
CCXV Que es Fadri[que,] ¿ quién lo ignora
el que es jardinero aora
y antes era pescador.
Dame de tanta ventura
albricias y habla á Fadrique CCXX porque tus hechos publique.

OTON. [Ap. al Duque.]

(Qué lástima.)

DUQUE. [Ap. á Oton.]

¡ Qué locura !

¿ Qué abemos de hacer ?)

CELIA. [Ap. al Duque.]

(No sé,
porque en denantes la dije que no lo era y contradije su pensamiento. Tal fue la colera que conmigo tomó que ya por mejor tube seguirla el vmor.)

DUQUE. [Ap. á Celia.]

(Y ese mismo intento sigo.
Al pescador buscarás, que á esto su salud me obliga,
y que disimule y siga
su pensamiento diras.
Dirasle que diga que es
Fadrique.)

CELIA. [Ap. al Duque.]

(Yo lo hare ansi.) (Vase Celia.)

OTON. [Ap. al Duque.]

(Mill veces sanar oy con esta industria que ves, porque vn loco se enfurece, negandole su locura.)

DUQUE. [Ap. á Oton.]

(¡ Qué pena !)

OTON. [Ap. al duque.]

(¡ Qué desbentura !)

FLORA.

¡ Cómo señor ! ¿ No merece rrespuesta la nueba mia ? (31 r.)

DUQUE.

Que oculto Fadrique estaba, aunque lo disimulaba,
yo, Flora, bien lo sabía.
Pero no quise decir
su nombre, porque no fuera bien que yo le descubriera, queriendose él encubrir.

FLORA.

¿ Pues no fue mucho que yo, de sólo que ymaginara que era noble, adibinara que era Fadrique ?

DUQUE.

¿ Pues no ?

FLORA.

Él que yo dormia pensaba
y la verdad muy desnuda me dijo entonces.

DUQUE. (Ap. á Oton.)

(Sin duda, Oton, que ella lo soñaba.)

FLORA.

Él quiso vn engaño hacerme,
pero, aunque lo parecia, bien sé yo que no dormia.

OTON. [Ap. al Duque.]

(El que está loco no duerme pero al fin como mortal se suspende. Esto seria quando penso que dormia.)

DUQUE. [Ap. á Oton.]

(¿ Quién vio desbentura ygual ?
Ella está loca. Ya creo mi desdicha.)

FLORA.

Deste rrio
salio aogado, muerto y frio, que parece que le veo que como se despeñó. (31 v.)

DUQUE. [Ap. á Oton.]

(Mas ¡ cómo pasa tan presto
del vno al otro ! ¿ Qué es esto ?
¿ Quién mayor locura vio ?

Apenas del vno hablaba
y contandonos su ystoria, se le vino á la memoria

que el otro se despeñaba 1730 . y juntos los dos procura.
¿ Ay más pena ? ¿ Ay más rrigor ?)

OTON. [Ap. al Duque.]

(¡ Qué lástima !)

DUQUE. [Ap. á Oton.]

(¡ Qué dolor !)

OTON. [Ap. al Duque.]

(¡ Qué tristeza !)

DUQUE (Ap. á Oton.)

(¡ Qué locura !)
(Sale Fadrique.)

FADRIQUE. [Ap.]

(! Qué confuso pensamiento 1735 me da vno y otro camino !
que, si el vno determino,
el otro seguir yntento.
Ya Flora me a conocido
y, si aqui me a descubierto 1740 al Duque de Mantua, es cierto que mi secreto a ofendido ;

y asi en confusion tan grabe
le tengo al duque engañado, pues lo que le e callado CCXXV de ajena boca lo sabe ;

pues si mi nombre le digo,
si ella no le a dicho ya, descubierto, claro está 1745 que á desterrarme me obligo.

CCXXVI Flora, donde no te vea ;
porque no podre vibir
cerca de quien e de vir
y que mi muerte destierra.

Pero al fin el menor daño (32 r.) es huir y padecer

tu ausencia que no ofender al duque con tal engaño.
En esto me determino
y el duque es éste. Yo quiero llegar y decir quién soy, puesto que es del mal el menos.) Señor, si no marabillan por estraños los sucesos, (y muchos casi ymposibles an llegado á berdaderos) si el mayor puede obligarte, escuchame vn rrato atento.

OTON. [Ap. al Duque.]

(De Celia viene adbertido.)

DUQUE. [Ap. á Oton.]

(Y lo finge y por estremo.)

FADRIQUE.

CCXXX Sabras, pues, que esta corteza vn coraçon tiene dentro que decir sin arrogancia el más jeneroso puedo.

FLORA. [Ap.]

(Ya dice á boces quién es.
CCXXXV Aun lo escucho y no lo creo, pues con esto mi bentura ni la dudo ni la temo.)

FADRIQUE.

Ynbidias de la jortuna á este estado me trujeron, CCXL porque en este traje sea
de su bariedad exemplo.
Este rrustico buriel que agora me cubre el pecho más al pecho me ajustara, CCXLV si fuera bruñido acero. (32 v.)
Aqueste azadon que rrijo

baston fuera en algun tienpo que en numero, no de flores, de hombres pusiera gobierno.

OTON. [Ap. al Duque.]

CCL (¡ O qué bien se disimula !)

DUQUE. [Ap. á Oton.]

(Con saber quién es, confieso que me engaña.)

OTON. [Ap. al Duque.]

(Está verdad.)

FLORA. [Ap.]

(De aqui mi bentura espero.)

FADRIQUE.

Sabras, pues, que soy...

DUQUE.

Fadrique,
esperate, que no quiero que pienses que yo e dudado 1765 el valor que en ti contemplo.

FADRIQUE. [Ap.]

(¡ Ya el duque sabía mi nombre !
¡ Qué mucho, si considero que no ay en mujer valor para guardar vn secreto !
1770 Si yo quisiera callarle, ¿ cómo pudiera ? que presto se supo.)

FLORA.

Pues él lo afirma,
aqui berás que no miento.

DUQUE.

Dame, Fadrique, tus braços, 1775 que á mayor ventura tengo

aberte en mi tierra allado que si me ofreciera el rreyno de Napoles su corona.
¡ Qué gran dicha !

FADRIQUE.

Sabe el cielo
con la verguença, señor, (33 r.) que á besar tus plantas llego, pues en ellas...

DUQUE.

¿ Eso haces ?
Fadrique, halçate del suelo, si no es que quieres tanbien mirarme á las tuyas puesto.

FADRIQUE.

Si desta suerte, señor,
as de tratarme, no quiero ser más de lo que antes era;
pues de ser Fadrique pierdo lo que de serbirte gano.
Criado soy.

DUQUE.

Aunque de eso te balgas, Fadrique, basta el agrabio que me as echo de auer callado tu nombre, estando aqui tanto tiempo.
sin hacerme otro mayor.

FADRIQUE. [Ap.]

CCLV (Bien temi su sentimiento.)
Señor, yo callé quién era...

DUQUE.

Yo lo perdono.

FADRIQUE.

temiendo
el credito, porque apenas de pescador le merezco.

DUQUE.

Pero yo te lo perdono.

FADRIQUE. [Ap.]

(¿ Quién vio más feliz suceso ?
Ya el duque sabe quién soy y no está ofendido de esto.)

OTON. [Ap. al Duque.]

CCLX (No sé cómo no te rries de verle.)

DUQUE. [Ap. á Oton.]

(Ya lo estoy viendo
y no sé entre tanto llanto cómo la rrisa detengo.)

DUQUE.

1800 Vesalde á Flora la mano. (33 v.)

FADRIQUE.

Mill veces la tierra veso que para tus pies labré ó que me labraron ellos para mis manos ; pues sólo 1805 de pisarla, agradeciendo el contacto de tus plantas, brotaba berdes rrenuebos,
escusandome el cuydado ;
que más á tus pies les debo 1810 que al haçadon que es su noble aunque rrustico instrumento.

FLORA.

Fadrique, como del sol se conocen los rreflejos

quando el cristal de vna fuente baría los rrubios cabellos
y, aunque entre silbestres ojas, no pierde el balor por eso y de vna manera alumbra los edeficios soberbios que á coronarse de nubes suben estrechando el viento como las casas pajiças donde él entra por los techos...

DUQUE. [Ap. á Oton.]

(Mira, ¡ qué en juycio la habla !)

OTON. [Ap. al Duque.]

(Sosegaráse con esto, biendo que la aprueban todos tan notable pensamiento.)

FLORA.

ansi por los ojos tú
descubres el sol del pecho, porque echas fuentes los vi,
de tu rresplandor espejos.
No te desprecies del traje, que aunque fuera limpio acero, (34 r.) el sol que le ve no diera mayor rresplandor por eso.

FADRIQUE.

¡ O qué bien sabes onrrar á quien te sirbe, poniendo en nuebas obligaciones !

OTON. [Ap. al Duque.]

(¿ Qué dices ?)

DUQUE. [Ap. á Oton.]

(Que está fingiendo lo fingido ó berdadero.)

OTON. [Ap. al Duque.]

(¿ Dónde otro hombre se hallara CCLXV que asi lo fingiera ?)

DUQUE. [Ap. á Oton.]

(Entiendo que, á no estar tan adbertido, fuera facil el creerlo.)

FLORA.

¡ Bien aya el veloz caballo que se arrojó ! pues, no siendo causa de tu muerte, a sido de nuestros gustos efeto, quando arrojandote el rrio á aquesta orilla...

DUQUE. [Ap. á Oton.]

(¡ Qué presto
buelbe á desbariar, Oton !)

FADRIQUE.

Lo del caballo no entiendo.

FLORA.

¿ No te despeñó vn caballo ?

DUQUE. [Ap. á Oton.]

(Él no está adbertido de esto
y ella, en biendo que lo niegan, buelbe á enfurecerse luego.)

FADRIQUE.

¿ Caballo ?

FLORA.

Sí, quando á caça
saliste. (34 v.)

FADRIQUE.

Ó yo no me acuerdo
ó no me arrojó caballo en mi bida.

DUQUE. [Ap. á Oton.]

(¡ Bueno es esto !
Agora a echado á perder
todo quanto tenia hecho.
Hazle señas de que diga que sí.)

OTON. [Ap. al Duque.]

(Ya las hago y menos me entiende.)

DUQUE.

Pues ¿ vn caballo
no te despeñó ?

FADRIQUE.

Es enrredo.

DUQUE. [Ap. á Oton.]

(Hazle señas.)

OTON. [Ap. al Duque.]

(No aprobecha.)

FLORA.

Pues ¿ cómo fue tu suceso ?

FADRIQUE.

CCLXX Si quieres saberlo, escucha ;
y tú, señor, está atento.

OTON. [Ap. al Duque.]

(Sin duda quiere enmendarlo.)

DUQUE. [Ap. á Oton.]

(Y si no lo hace, ¿ qué haremos ?)

FADRIQUE.

Yo soy Don Fadrique Esforcia CCLXXV del duque el hijo primero
como todos saben.

DUQUE.

Ya
como tu lo eres sabemos.

FADRIQUE.

Verdad es que sali á caça
y allé en vn monte desierto, con máscaras de leales, tres traydores encubiertos.

No quiero decir quién son, mas basta decir que fueron CCLXXX aun en la traycion piadosos, pues que la vida me dieron.

1870. Otorgaronme la vida.
Por el ausencia vyendo
su traycion más que mi muerte, el noble partido aceto. (35 r.)
Yo desnudo al rrio me arrojo.

Y asta aquesta orilla llego donde allé en tu estado vida
y en tus piedades consuelo.
CCLXXXV Callé mi nombre por verme
pobre, desnudo y enfermo, aunque en El Desdichado
te dije el más verdadero.
Ésta es la verdad y no...

1875 No me despeñé corriendo caballo, que no llegara

tan desnudo, pues es cierto que desnudo no corria.

DUQUE. [Ap. á Oton.]

(Él lo emmendo por estremo.)

OTON. [Ap. al Duque.]

(Adbertir él que llegase desnudo es vn pensamiento extremado.)

DUQUE. [Ap. á Oton.]

(El pescador tiene lindos entendimientos.)

OTON. [Ap. al Duque.]

(Rrespondele.)

DUQUE. [Ap. á Oton.]

No sé cómo,

FLORA.

¿ Qué enemigos tienes ?

FADRIQUE.

Nobles
y poderosos.

FLORA.

¿ Qué fueron
las causas de perseguirte ?

FADRIQUE.

Solos mis merecimientos.

FLORA.

¿ Por merecimientos pierdes ?

FADRIQUE.

Sí, Flora, por ellos pierdo.

FLORA.

Pues ¿ qué pretendes ganar?

FADRIQUE.

Sólo lo que no merezco.

OTON. [Ap. al Duque.]

(¿ No la ves que, entretenida con él, en rraçon se a puesto?) (35 v.)

DUQUE. [Ap. á Oton.]

(Y con las veras que él la ba á todo rrespondiendo.) (Salen Otabio, Jacinta y Marcial.)

OTABIO.

¿ Es aquél el que buscais?

JACINTA.

Es él, Tirso.

MARCIAL.

Y yo lo apruebo.

JACINTA.

¡ Par diez que le emos allado!
Guarde á su merced el cielo.
[Ap.] (¡ Ay, Fadrique, de mi bida!
¿ Es posible que te veo?)

pues llegamos, concediendo 1910 lo mismo que él a fingido y haciendo verdad su enrredo!
antes en esta ocasion le serbimos de terceros á su engaño !)

MARCIAL. [Ap. á Jacinta.]

(Dices bien.)

JACINTA. [Ap. á Marcial.]

1915 (Pues disimula y lleguemos.)
¡ Hermano mio !

MARCIAL.

¡ Amo mio !
¿ Es posible que te abemos allado ?

JACINTA.

Más a de vn año que en tu busca, hermano, vengo.

FADRIQUE. [Ap.]

1920 (¿ No es Marcial éste que miro ?
¿ No es Jacinta ésta que veo ?
¡ Cielos !)

JACINTA.

Pues ¿ de qué as quedado tan enbobado y suspenso ? (36 r.)

DUQUE. [Ap. á Oton.]

(En aqueste punto, Oton, acabó todo el enrredo, que aquésta es su hermana y ya está todo descubierto.)

FLORA.

¿Qué loca mujer es ésta que ansi le trata, sabiendo ya todos quién es Fadrique?

DUQUE. [Ap. á Oton.]

(Ya Flora á su tema a buelto.)

FADRIQUE. [Ap.]

(Si aqui descubro á Jacinta
y digo quién es, oy pierdo á Flora, porque no es bien empezar á darla celos.
Si á Jacinta desconozco,
su mucha lealtad ofendo,
porque al fin me a allado vibo, aunque me a buscado muerto.
¿Qué e de hacer?)

JACINTA.

No tenga enpacho.
Dame vn abraso.

FLORA.

¿Qué es esto?

DUQUE. [Ap. á Oton.]

(¿Cómo saldremos de aqui?)

OTON. [Ap. al Duque.]

(Todo confuso lo veo.)

FLORA.

¿Qué mujer es ésta?

FADRIQUE.

Espera
y sabraslo.

FLORA.

Dilo presto.

OTON. [Ap. al duque.]

(Sin duda quiere enmendarlo
y si no lo hace, ¿qué haremos?)

FADRIQUE. [Ap.]

(Entre obligacion y amor estoy dudando y temiendo.
Mas benca la obligacion, porque es de cobardes pechos rrendirse al amor y hacer de obligaciones desprecios.) Ésta, señora, es Jacinta, vna dama que sabiendo
mi desdicha me a buscado, que tanto á su amor le debo. (36 v.) Éste es vn criado mio, aunque le juzgas grosero,
el más bueno, el más leal.
Marcial es su nombre mesmo.
Ésta es la berdad.

DUQUE. [Ap. á Oton.]

(¡Qué bien lo a enmendado!)

OTON. [Ap. al Duque.]

(Por estremo.)

DUQUE. [Ap. á Oton.]

(¡Qué presto alló la mentira á proposito!)

OTON. [Ap. al Duque.]

(¡Qué presto!
Él es lirondo socorron.) (Sale Celia.)

CELIA. [Ap.]

(En todo el campo no puedo hallar á este pescador

Pero hablando con el duque está y con Flora. Yo creo que otro se lo abrá avisado.)

FLORA. [Ap.]

(¡De rrabia, ay, de celos muero!) (Sale Otabio.)

OTABIO.

Carlos, Conde de la Flor, á efetuar los conciertos que ay entre Mantua y Milan del tratado casamiento,
en este punto llegó
á estas selbas; que, sabiendo que aqui estabas, a benido con poco acompañamiento.

DUQUE.

Salgamos á rrecebirlo.
Vamos, Flora.

FADRIQUE.

Si yo puedo
pedirte, señor, tras tantas, aquesta merced, te rruego que ansi me dejes bibir disfraçado y encubierto

1974. The name Flor was probably not an accidental choice. Flor meant in gamblers' slang a trick or swindling device. Carlos suggests crime and stratagems to his master throughout the play, hence the name. In Lope de Vega's ¿ De cudndo acá nos vino ? the Alférez Leonardo, seeking to pass himself off as another person, assumes the name of Flor. La flor debió de ser el engañaros, remarked one of his victims when the truth became known. We have to do with a similar pun here.

mientras mi abara fortuna
va mejorando los tienpos.
[Ap.] (Defensa al conde traydor en este trage prebengo.) (37 r.)

CCXCVIII Este conde es el mayor enemigo que yo tengo.

Ésta por mayor merced
te suplico.

DUQUE.

Y yo la aceto.
Tray ese traje.

FADRIQUE.

Mill años
vibas.

DUQUE. [Ap. á Oton.]

(Oton, ¿qué dices desto?
Por no hacer que yo le trate en público con rrespeto hace su enemigo al conde.)

OTON. [Ap. al Duque.]

(El tiene subtil ingenio.)

FADRIQUE.

Como asta aqui as de tratarme, señor, como á jardinero.

DUQUE.

Eso en público sí hare
y como amigo en secreto.

CELIA. [Ap.]

(¡Qué bien finge el picaron!)

FLORA.

Es justo agradecimiento, Fadrique, el que le debeis á esa dama.

DUQUE. [Ap. á Oton.]

(¡Que tan ciego tenga su discurso Flora, tan falto el entendimiento que todo lo aya creydo!)

FADRIQUE.

Aunque pienso agradecerlo, vna cosa es la que digo
y otra cosa es la que siento.

FLORA.

Pagalda tan gran fineça, pues en tal traje se a puesto por bos.

FADRIQUE.

Yo lo pagaré,
que vno pago y otro debo.

FLORA.

Agradecedselo mucho.

FADRIQUE.

Mucho, Flora, lo agradezco.

JACINTA. [Ap. á Marcial.]

(Marcial.)

MARCIAL. [Ap. á Jacinta.]

(¿Qué quieres?)

JACINTA. [Ap. á Marcial.]

(No sé.
Muero de inbidia y de celos.)

DUQUE.

¿Cómo te sientes?

FLORA.

Mejor,
porque vn desengaño veo (37 v.) que pudo darme la vida ó la muerte.

OTON. [Ap. al Duque.]

(Dice esto CCCX porque ya á Fadrique a bisto.)

DUQUE.

¿Dónde vas?

FADRIQUE.

Boy te sirbiendo.

DUQUE.

Quedese tu alteza.

FADRIQUE.

Yo
soy, señor, tu jardinero
y si ansi me tratas, faltas á la merced que me as hecho de tratarme como á tal.

DUQUE.

Ni la palabra te quiebro
y como amigo en secreto.
ni falto á lo prometido, porque aqui todos sabemos quién eres, porque presentes estubieron al concierto.

FADRIQUE.

Veso mill veces tus pies.

DUQUE.

¡Guardete, Fadrique, el cielo!
¡Qué bien tu estado as fingido!
y tanto que agora pienso que eres pescador, Fadrique.

FADRIQUE.

El tienpo es mejor, maestro;
y como enseñó á mandar,
enseñó á serbir el tienpo.

DUQUE.

No. ¿ No as de pasar de aquì ?

FADRIQUE.

Porque no mè bean me quedo.

DUQUE.

Y porque finges tan bien
de verte fingir me guelgo.

FADRIQUE.

Pues, si con eso te agrada, bolbere á fingir de nuebo.

DUQUE.

Pues, mira qué as de fingir.

FADRIQUE.

Á mí me está vien hacerlo.

CELIA. [Ap. á Flora.]

CCCXI (¿ Què es, señora, lo que llèbas ?)

FLORA. [Ap. á Celia.]

(No sé, Celia, lo que llebo.
El alma te rrespondiera, si preguntaras qué dejo.)

OTON. [Ap. al Duque.]

(¡ Qué sosegada ba Flora!) (38 r.)

DUQUE. [Ap. á Oton.]

(Costoso a sido el rremedio, porque de curar vn loco enloquecen muchos cuerdos.) (Vanse todos. Quedan Jacinta, Marcial y Fadrique.)

FADRIQUE.

Dame, Jacinta, tus braços mill veces.

JACINTA.

¿Quándo con celos
pudiera hacerte pedazos, yngrato? pues quando vengo atropellando á mi onor, obligacion y rrespeto,
enamorado te allo
y tan rrendido te veo que delante de mis ojos de mí te an pedido celos.

CCCXV ¿ Qué no pudiste sufrir callar quién eras? ¡ Tan presto lo dijiste por mostrar con eso el merecimiento !

Por villana me an tenido.
Villana e de ser, haciendo de suerte que no te crean, pues tan facilmente puedo.

FADRIQUE.

¡ Jacinta !

JACINTA.

No soy Jacinta.
Cintia soy. (Vase.)

FADRIQUE.

¡ Marcial ! ¿ qué es esto?

MARCIAL.

Jacinta dice muy bien, porque a sido muy mal echo hallarte desta manera enamorado, viniendo
ella á buscarte.

FADRIQUE.

¡ Marcial !
¡ escuchame !

MARCIAL.

No te entiendo.
No soy Marcial sino Tirso;

el padre Fray Tirso soy,
pues á predicarte vengo. (Vase.)

EL DUQUE DE MILAN.

¿Qué Tirso?

TIRSO.

Pues ¿hay más Tirsos?
Porque yo más Tirsos no hallo
Que yo y Tirso el molinero, Y Tirso el hijo del Chato,
Y un Tirso que en la barriga
Trae Laureta, que son cuatro.

Ser lo del perro de Olías,
Que por hallarse en dos bodas,
Fué á Cabañas con gran prisa,
Y en llegando habían comido,
Y volviéndose á su villa,
Habían comido también.

LA SELBA CONFUSA

ACTO TERCERO

(Salen el Principe Filipo, Leonelo y Carlos, el Duque, Oton, Otabio, Celia y Flora.)

FILIPO.

El Duque de Milan, agradecido al deseo, Gonçaga, que as mostrado de ver con los conciertos conbenido el de Milan á tu dichoso estado, vbiera antes de aora rrespondido, si no hubiera su gusto dilatado de Fadrique la muerte rrigurosa.

DUQUE.

Trajedia a sido á todos lastimosa.

FILIPO.

Ésta me dio de quien sabras más cierto
lo que en este concierto se procura. (Dale vna carta.)

CARLOS. [Ap. á Filipo.]

(¿ Qué te parece Flora ?)

FILIPO. [Ap. á Carlos.]

(Estoy yncierto
si es Flora la que el duque me asegura, que, si en lo que la otra dijo adbierto, es Flora la de menos hermosura.)

DUQUE.

Yo lo vere despacio. Hablad aora, mientras que voy á rresponder, con Flora. (Vanse el duque, Oton y Otabio.)

FILIPO.

Si mi humilde deseo a merecido, por el onor que de seruiros gano, gloriosamente á aquesos pies rrendido, admirar fuego y niebe en vna mano.

vella Flora, la vuestra humilde os pido.
Y si digno de bien tan soberano (40 v.) me miro á vuestros pies, desde este suelo pienso tocar el sol de vuestro cielo, aunque quede en mi barbara osadia desecho al fuego y á la niebe elado.

FLORA. [Ap. d Celia.]

(Este casamentero, Celia mia, las rreberendas tray de desposado.
Escusarme de hablar con él querria
y un excelente disimulo e hallado.)

FILIPO.

Pues ¿ no me rrespondeis ?

FLORA.

Hablad con Flora.

FILIPO.

¿ Quién es Flora ?

FLORA.

La ynfanta, mi señora.

CELIA.

¡ Señora !

FLORA.

No rreplique vuestra alteza, que es bien que logre el alto pensamiento de goçar de Milan honrra y grandeza.

CELIA.

Nunca tan grande fue mi atrevimiento.

FLORA.

¿ Su fama, su hermosura, su nobleza, no conoceis ?

CELIA. [Ap.]

(Vengó mi fingimiento.)

FILIPO. [Ap. á Carlos.]

(Confuso estoy entre vna y otra Flora;
mas es la noche vna, otra la aurora.
Carlos.)

CARLOS. [Ap. á Filipo.]

(¿ Señor ?)

FILIPO. [Ap. á Leonelo.]

(Leonelo, ¿ qué os parece ?
¡ Cómo el Duque de Mantua se a bengado !
La que no es Flora por mujer me ofrece, ofendido de berme disfraçado.)

CARLOS. [Ap. á Filipo.]

(Vn engaño otro engaño se merece.)

LEONELO. [Ap. á Filipo.]

(Discreto el duque por estremo a andado.)

FILIPO. [Ap. á Carlos y Leonelo.]

(Quién era vio. Disimuló el estilo y, engañado, engañóme por el filo.)

FLORA.

Habre tu alteza.

CELIA. [Ap. á Flora.]

(¿ Qué es lo que pretendes ?
Ya sabes como siempre te e serbido en dar credito, Flora. ¿ Á ti te ofendes á un pensamiento sin traycion fingido?) (41 r.)

FLORA. [Ap. á Celia.]

(Engaña, Celia.)

CELIA. [Ap. á Flora.]

(¿ Yo?)

FLORA. [Ap. á Celia.]

(! Qué mal me entiendes !)

CARLOS [Ap. á Filipo.]

(Si el duque no se da por entendido, no lo estes tú tanpoco de su engaño;
calla hasta vno y otro desengaño
y prosigue.)

FILIPO. [Ap.]

(Eso ago.) Flora vella, ¿ de qué sirbe encubrir los rrayos rrojos, si de fuego de amor vna centella atomo es de vuestros dulces ojos ?
La más pura, más limpia y clara estrella sus luces os ofrece por despojos;

CCCXXXV porque á otra luz la vuestra se rreduce,
que en presencia del sol ninguña luze.
Flora ¿ no rrespondeis ?

FLORA.

Rresponded, Flora.

CELIA. [Ap. á Flora.]

(¿ Por qué ofenderme tu balor procura ?)

FLORA.

¿ No os a dicho que es ella (¿ Quién lo ignora ?)
CCCXL su gracia, su donayre, su hermosura ?

FILIPO.

Vuestra dibina luz el alma adora.
¿ Por qué quereis que quede en noche obscura quien vuestro claro dia está mirando ?

no los negueis al que os está mirando. (Sale Oton.)

OTON.

Su Excelencia, señor, queda esperando.
[Ap.] (Mas ¿ qué es esto ? ¡ Filipo es el que veo !
ó, cunfusa mi ciega fantasia, de la naturaleça varia creo que sacó dos estampas en vn dia.)

FÍLIPO.

Rrendido voy á manos de vn deseo.
[Ap.] (Si es Flora la fingida, sera mia.)

CARLOS. [Ap. á Filipo.]

(Con más industria no disimularas, señor, si con la misma Flora hablaras.) (Vanse.)

OTON. [Ap.]

(Él es. Direlo al duque y que a benido como su embajador disimulado.) [Vase.]

FLORA.

Celia, ¿ qué no me ayas entendido ?

CELIA.

¡ Bien vn pequeño yerro as castigado ! (41 v.)
Mas si en pensarlo sólo te e ofendido ...

FLORA.

¿ Luego ya lo tubiste ymaginado ?

CELIA.

Por engaño.

FLORA.

¿ Por qué no lo decias
agora ?

CELIA.

Porque tú ...

FLORA.

¡ Qué desconfias !

CELIA.

no te ofendieras más.

FLORA.

Si me entendiste,
lo que yo te mandaba, Celia, ycieras.

CELIA.

¿ Vengaráste con eso ? ¡ Ay de mí triste !

FLORA.

Pues es facil fingir, ¿ no lo fingieras ?

CELIA.

¿ Yo delante de ti ?

FLORA.

Aqui consiste mi gusto. Mayor, Celia, no pudieras darmele y, porque entiendas mi alma aora, yo quiero que tú digas que eres Flora.

CELIA.

¿ Aun eso ? Bien. Mas ¿ qué consigues de eso ?

FLORA.

Escusarme de hablar embajadores, que me ofende el mirarlos te confieso,
y escuchar por terceros los amores.
Confieso que perdido tengo el seso entre tantas desdichas y rrigores.
Hazte tú, Flora, mientras lloro, ¡ ay, cielos !
fuerça de vn padre y de vn amante celos.
Aquél mi libertad forçar pretende,
tratando el casamiento que me infama.
Éste mi pecho en fuego y rrabia enciende, viendole hablar la labradora dama.
Vno me fuerça, Celia, otro me ofende;
y entre el rrigor, entre la ardiente llama,
elado el cuerpo, el alma ya en los labios,
sufro rrigores y padezco agrabios. (Sale Fadrique.)

CELIA. [Ap.]

(Ya se buelbe á su locura.)

FADRIQUE.

Si se permite á quien muere (42 r.)
decir, Flora, sus desdichas, escuchame atentamente.

No ynporta que Celia esté á mis rraçones presente, que antes quiero hacer testigos de mis males ó mis vienes.

Oye rraçones de vn loco que suele ser cuerdo á beces; que el mal, si quita el sentido, el sentimiento le buelbe.
Con lengua torpe y voz muda hablarte el alma pretende
y, aunque sienta quanto dice, no te dira qudnto siente.

Desnudo llegué á esta orilla.
(No te espantes de que enpieze mi ystoria. Brebe sere, si en penas puedo ser brebe.)
Allé en tus manos piedad.
Acojisteme clemente.
¡Ya qué contento vibi!
Vibi en tu serbicio alegre.

Afrentado el coraçon estaba que le cubriese vn tosco sayal y el pecho quiso rromper ynpaciente;
por los ojos y la lengua
rrebentó; disculpa tiene, quel fuego, Flora, no es mucho, si está encerrado, rrebiente.
Salio á la boca en palabras;
mas como son viento lebe,
el viento al fuego mayor en humo y ceniças buelbe. (42 v.) Salio á los ojos (¿ quién vio liquido el fuego?) en ardientes ldgrimas, lenguas de agua, que hablar con más alma suelen.

La sangre que, avnque encubierta no es rraçon que se desprecie,

(que es la nobleza vn tesoro que tiene su precio siempre, es otra alma tan alma que glorias sólo apeteze ;
ni la finge el que le falta ni la encubre el que la tiene.)
No pude encubrirla yo,
forçado si no prudente,
y dijete al fin quién era ;
tú sabes si onestamente.

Pues si el que despierto vibe muerto le juzgan si duerme, CCCLXX muerta estabas, porque viba
no supiera yo atreberme.
¡ O inconstancia siempre instable !
que aun dormidas las mujeres
no saben decir verdad, CCCLXXV pues hasta en el sueño mienten.

Desengañada, dijiste quién era al duque y prudente me habló sin que yo le viera de mi silencio ofenderse.
Estando en esto, la nueba, ¡ ay de mí ! llegó ...

FLORA.

Detente,
que yo dire quien llegó.

CELIA. [Ap.]

(¿ Qué enrredo mayor es éste ?)

FADRIQUE.

Dejame hablar.

FLORA.

Hasta aqui
as dicho. Deja que enpieze (43 r.) y diga yo quién llegó, pues as dicho quanto quieres.

Llegó vna villana noble, que hablando rrusticamente por hermano te abrazó.

FADRIQUE.

Escucha, espera.

FLORA.

¿ Qué espere ?
¿ Qué tengo ya que esperar ?

FADRIQUE.

La sentencia de mi muerte.
Ese embajador fingido que á tratar tu boda viene es Filipo. Ése es mi hermano y si examinarlo quieres, mirale en esta sortija esculpido, que previene el cielo para mi bien
vnas señas tan patentes.
Aqui berás del buril
lo más primo y excelente, porque al más subtil pincel sin matices le desmiente.
Mirale, Celia, que él es.

CELIA.

Engañada estube siempre.
Aora creo que es Filipo
y aun que tú Fadrique eres.

FADRIQUE.

Ésta á Jacinta le dio
el principe.

2243. It seems to have been the custom for ladies to give a favored suitor presents received from one less in favor. Cf. Lope's La discreta venganza (ed. Hartzenbusch), Vol. III, p. 308c.

FLORA.

¿ Qué no tienes verguença para nombrarla en mi presencia ?

FADRIQUE.

Si quiere
decir la lengua verdades, no te espantes que las cuente;
porque solos desengaños son los que el alma pretende. (43 v.)

FLORA.

¿ No vino á buscarte ?

FADRIQUE.

Si.
Dijela yo que viniese;
pues ¿ por qué te a de ofender vna mujer que me quiere ?

¿ Quierola yo ? ¿ Qué rraçones la dije que te ofendiesen ?
¡ Plubiera á dios la quisiera !
que' tanto, Flora, me debes, CCCLXXX pues quando como te quiero
á Jacinta la quisiese, ¿ por tus desprecios dejara sus amorosos placeres ?

Bien conoces mi rraçon, mas como á Filipo adbiertes, con mi desprecio el venir disfraçado le agradeces.
Pagale tan gran fineza.

FLORA.

¡ Qué mal disculparte entiendes, echandome á mí la culpa que solo, Fadrique, tienes !
Por ti a benido Jacinta.

FADRIQUE.

¿ Y Filipo por quién viene ?

FLORA.

Paga le es á berse puesto por ti en tan humilde suerte.

FADRIQUE.

Agradecele el venir hecho embajador por verte.
Por ti a benido.

FLORA.

Es verdad.
Dijele yo que viniese.
Si vn hombre me quiere á mí,
con poca rraçon te ofende.

¿ Quierole yo? ¿ Que fabores

Espera, Flora, detente.
Detenla, Celia.

DUQUE.

No se efetuó el concierto, que dice el conde que tiene para abisar á Milan forçosos ynconbenientes.

FADRIQUE.

Dame tus pies.

DUQUE.

¿ Aqui estás ?

FADRIQUE.

Y deseoso de berte para darte de las bodas mill dichosos paravienes.

DUQUE.

Guardete dios. ¿ Cómo ba del fingimiento ?

FADRIQUE.

No puede
yrme mal en tu serbicio.

DUQUE.

Y ya de Flora, ¿ qué sientes ?

FADRIQUE.

Que Flora merece mucho pero Filipo merece
la merced que tú le haces, que es jeneroso y prudente.

DUQUE.

No te pregunto qué es ;
no quiero que me aconsejes.

FADRIQUE.

Señor, hablar de Filipo es honrra[r]me á mí que excede á mi deseo. Que él á darte contento azierte y plegue al cielo, señor, que te pague las mercedes que e rrescibido en tu casa.

DUQUE.

Pues ¿ cómo hablas de esa suerte ?

FADRIQUE.

Bien me acuerdo yo que tú me dijiste que fingiesse pero como solo Otabio, que siempre estubo presente, nos oye, á hablar ansi
pude, señor, atreberme ; no nos oye otro.

DUQUE.

Villano, (45 r.)
barbaro, loco, inprudente, ¿ á mí quieres engañarme ?

FADRIQUE.

¿ Quién engañarte pretende ?

DUQUE.

Si te dije que fingieras ....

FADRIQUE.

Yo te pedi que me hicieses esa merced de tratarme como á jardinero siempre.
Eso es lo que e fingido;
mas como nadie nos viese,
aqui hablé como Fadrique.

DUQUE. [Ap. d Otabio.]

(Otabio, otro loco es éste.)
Pues ¿ quién eres ?

FADRIQUE.

¿ Tú no sabes
quién soy, señor ? ¡ Quántas veces oy mi nombre en tu boca sólo para engrandezerme !
¡ Qué bien cumples tu palabra !
¡ Bien á encubrirme te ofreces
y qué bien por no trata[r]me mal desconocerme quieres !
Pero aqui solos estamos.
Dime lo que te parece de Filipo, que mi hermano es muy galan.

DUQUE. [Ap. d Otabio.]

(¡ Quánto puede,
Otabio, lo que en su abono la ymaginacion aprehende !

Sin duda que se a creydo que era Fadrique.)

OTABIO. [Ap. al Duque.]

(De berse tan estimado nacio vn pensamiento tan fuerte.)

FADRIQUE.

Pues, señor, ¿ no me diras qué causa pudo moberte (45 v.) á hablarme de aquella suerte?

DUQUE.

Ya no puedo sufrir más.
Hombre de ese rrio venido
y dél al campo arrojado, de sus ondas engendrado
y de sus fieras nacido, ¿ qué echiço, encanto ó veneno á aquesta selba trujiste ?
que despues que á ella veniste todo está de engaños lleno.

FADRIQUE. [Ap.]

(Sin duda alguna nos ben.) Bien asi me satisfaces.
Tratame mal, que bien haces.
CDV Finje, que finjes muy bien.

Miserable y abatido con vno y otro temor, tan fingido pescador
quanto Fadrique fingido, ¿ quiere matarme tu encanto ?

FADRIQUE.

Si no entendiera que estás fingiendo, ni hablaras más ni hubiera sufrido tanto.

CDVI Pues, porque se certifique
el mundo de mi balor, sufro como pescador
lo que oy como Fadrique.

Si jardinero me bias
y de serlo me sacaste, porque tanto me estimaste,
si ya no me conocias,
tratame como criado, que aqueso pretendo yo en público pero no quando estás tan retirado.
Fadrique aqui soy y alli sere humilde labrador.

OTABIO. [Ap. al Duque.]

(Él se lo creyo, señor.)

DUQUE. [Ap. á Otabio.]

(Él está fuera de sí (46 r.) y aun yo y todo.)

OTABIO. [Ap. al Duque.]

MARCIAL.

Señor, bamos.

DUQUE. [Ap. á Otabio.]

(¡ Á qué buen tiempo a llegado su hermana ! que puede ser que acordandole su ser, buelba de lo que a soñado.)

JACINTA.

Mira que quedó el pollino solo en casa sin tener que comer y que vever.

MARCIAL.

Ni mi projimo el cochino.

FADRIQUE.

Jacinta.

JACINTA.

¡ Qué bueno es eso !
¡ Jacinta ! ¡ Yo Cinta soy !

FADRIQUE.

Confieso que loco estoy.

JACINTA.

Él tiene perdido el seso.

FADRIQUE.

Marcial.

MARCIAL.

¡ Yo Marcial ! ¡ Ay tal !
De otra cara me ymagina, porque vn hombre tan gallina, ¿ cómo puede ser Marcial ?

JACINTA.

Aquesas locuras deja
tú, señor, de quando aca vamonos á casa ya.

DUQUE. [Ap. d Otabio.]

(Bien, Otabio, le aconseja.)

FADRIQUE. [Ap.]

(Á colera me proboco.
¡ Vive dios ! ¿ qué estoy sufriendo
y callando ? porque entiendo que an de decir que estoy loco.) (46 v.)

JACINTA.

Señor, dejele yr á casa,
que, ymaginando abenturas,

(¡ Qué bien que le contradice !)

CDX. Tirso, too, in his Amar por señas (ed. Hartzenbusch) p. 464c shows the influence of Cervantes. He represents one of his characters as having lost his mind reading romances of chivalry.

FADRIQUE.

Jacinta, si piensas hoy quitarme, fingida, el seso, que estoy loco confieso.
Dejame, pues loco estoy.
¿ Qué es lo que tu voz procura, hablando de aquesta suerte ?
¿ Buscas, Jacinta, mi muerte ?

JACINTA.

¡ Jacinta, yo ! ¡ Qué locura !

FADRIQUE. [Ap. á Marcial.]

(Marcial, ¿ tú eres contra mí ?
¿ Esto en tus lealtades tengo ?)

MARCIAL. [Ap. á Fadrique.]

(Señor, con quien bengo, vengo.)

FADRIQUE. [Ap. á Marcial.]

(¿ No soy yo Fadrique ?)

MARCIAL. [Ap. á Fadrique.]

(Sí.)

FADRIQUE. [Ap. á Marcial.]

(Dilo á voces quién soy yo, ya que á abonarme te ofreces.) ¿ Quién soy ?

MARCIAL.

Anton me pareces.

FADRIQUE.

¿ Y no soy Fadrique ?

MARCIAL.

No.

FADRIQUE. [Ap. á Jacinta.]

(Jacinta, si de mi llanto que tanto al amor agrada

estás acaso obligada, merezco yo fabor tanto que le digas quién soy yo al duque.)

JACINTA. [Ap. á Fadrique.]

(Fadrique eres.)

FADRIQUE.

Pues ya confesarlo quieres, (47 r
¿ no soy Fadrique?

JACINTA.

No.

FADRIQUE.

¡ Biben los cielos, villanos, que porque se satisfaga mi furor á los dos haga pedaços con estas manos !

OTABIO. [Ap. al Duque.]

(Más se enfurece de ber que le niegan su locura.)

DUQUE. [Ap. á Otabio.]

(Quiero hablarle con blandura y probar si puede ser rreducirle.)

FADRIQUE. [Ap.]

(¿ Ay confusion

DUQUE.

Oye.

FADRIQUE.

¿ Qué quieres ?

DUQUE.

Escucha.
¡ Quánto mejor sera, Anton, que te buelbas á tu tierra donde mejor estaras!

FADRIQUE.

Ya no puedo esperar más, que vn bolcan el pecho encierra.

DUQUE.

Deja esos discursos llenos de tan confuso bayben.

JACINTA.

Y dice, señor, muy bien.

MARCIAL.

Hazlo, que te rruegan buenos.

FADRIQUE.

Basta. Yo no soy Fadrique, pues se juntan en mi mal Jacinta, el duque y Marcial ; porque el rrigor multiplique, quieren que deje de ser lo que soy. Mi mal pretenden y, pues engañarme entienden, por dios que no lo an de hacer. (Vase.)

DUQUE.

OTABIO.

¿ Y ya de Flora qué haras ?

DUQUE.

Flora, como no le bea

DUQUE.

¿ Quién vio confusion más fiera ?
En el alma me a pesado 2485 aberle desengañado.
Mejor concederle fuera su locura ; pero á mí
tan gran colera me dió, como hablando me llegó 2490 en negocios, que no bi la ora de despedille. (Sale Celia.)

CELIA.

Pues ya estás echo á sentir lo que te quiero decir, señor, nó te maraville.
2495 Lo que el alma aseguró viene á desacer aora.

Nunca fue la loca Flora, porque siempre lo fuy yo y, porque se certifique la verdad de vn desengaño sin locura y sin engaño, (48 r.) el pescador es Fadrique.
Mira, señor, si tenia rraçon Flora en porfiar;
y quisimos condenar
por locura su porfia.

DUQUE. [Ap. á Otabio.]

(Otabio, ¿ qué dices desto ?
¿ Por quién esto abrá pasado ?)

OTABIO. [Ap. al Duque.]

(Flora su mal la a pegado.)

DUQUE. [Ap. á Otabio.]

CELIA.

Esa rrustica villana,
que lo es al parecer,

DUQUE. [Ap. á Otabio.]

(¿ Quién mayor lástima vio ?
Ella tambien lo creyo ó todos burlan de mí.) ¿ Pues tú, Celia, que antes eras quien á Flora aconsejaba
y quien de eso se burlaba, ¿ as creydo tan de veras (48 v.)
su engaño ? El intento muda.
No muestres facilidad.

CELIA.

Esto es, señor, la verdad.

DUQUE. [Ap. á Otabio.]

(Tengo, Otabio, por sin duda que este hombre ó pescador ó Fadrique ó jardinero es el mayor echicero
y mayor enrredador.
que se a bisto.) (Sale Flora.)

FLORA.

Siempre a sido
Celia, señor, quien á ti te tray las nuebas y asi no dudo que abrá traydo estas que te vengo á dar :
que es aqueste embajador
Filipo mismo, señor.

CELIA.

Pues ¿ quién lo puede dudar quando Fadrique, su hermano lo asigura ?

DUQUE. [Ap. á Otabio.]

(¡ Vibe dios !) que ya están locas las dos !)

OTABIO. [Ap. al Duque]

(Que es mal que se pega es llano.)

DUQUE.

Vien facil fuera creer que es y yo te confieso que éste es Filipo, que eso es cosa que puede ser;
pero querer que yo crea que es este hombre encubierto Fadrique, que está ya muerto, y que esta villana sea
dama, son cosas terribles y no me atrebo á creer lo que puede suceder por no creer inposibles. (49 r.)

FLORA.

Señor, ¿de qué estás prolijo?

CELIA.

¿Qué de creerme no acabes?

DUQUE.

Tú, Celia, ¿de qué lo sabes?

CELIA.

De que Fadrique lo dijo.
¿No basta que él lo dijesse?

DUQUE. [Ap. á Otabio.]

(¡Qué lástima! Otabio, ya más loca que Flora está.
Mejor es que lo confiesse.)

FLORA.

¿De qué dudas? (Sale Oton.)

OTON.

Yo quisiera
hablarte á solas.

DUQUE.

Oton,
no llegaras á ocasion
en que más gusto tubiera.
¿Qué es lo que me quieres? Di.

OTON.

Espero que tú prosigas, que es bien que primero digas lo que me quieres á mí
y en serbirte satisfecho, ya de mí no as de saber lo que quiero hasta tener lo que me mandares hecho.

DUQUE. [Ap. á Oton.]

(Ya tú sabes que despues llegó por gran marabilla vn pescador á esta orilla la selba confusa es.
Vbo Fadrique fingido,
dama que se transformó,

OTON. [Ap. al Duque.]

(¿ Y es mucha dificultad que yo diga la verdad ?)
Éste que está disfraçado es Filipo. Yo le vi en Milan y, por más señas, como cayó entre las peñas
Fadrique al mismo lo oy.
No te engaño. Flora, ¿ quién te lo dijo ?

FLORA.

Pues su hermano,
que a de conocerle es llano.

DUQUE. [Ap. á Oton.]

(Finge, que finges muy bien.)

OTON. [Ap. al Duque.]

(¡ Cómo fingir. ! ¡ Vibe dios ! que es el mismo y que en Milan le vi, señor.)

DUQUE. [Ap. á Otabio.]

(Buenos ban los engaños.)

OTABIO. [Ap. al Duque.]

(Y las dos se an sosegado.)

CELIA.

Aun aora
pienso que no lo creeras.

DUQUE.

¡ O qué bueno ba ! Di más.

OTON.

Quien les dijo á Celia y Flora (50 r.) que era Filipo decia bien. Esto es desengañarte á decirtelo venia.

DUQUE.

Flora, yo disimulaba el enojo que me a dado con venir él disfraçado ;
y porque rresuelto estaba,
hasta que él se descubriese,
no darme por entendido,
y que no lo estes te pido.

FLORA.

Y es muy justo que te pese
del engaño.

DUQUE. [Ap. á Oton.]

(Dime, Oton, ¿ qué es lo que decir querias ?)

OTON. [Ap. al Duque.]

(¿ Aun todavia porfias lo que en esta ocasion, señor, tú mismo as mandado ?)

DUQUE. [Ap. á Oton.]

DUQUE. [Ap. á Oton.]

OTON. [Ap. al Duque.]

(Que ¡ vibe dios ! que es él.)

DUQUE. [Ap. á Otabio.]

sin duda que es verdad.)

DUQUE. [Ap. á Otabio.]

(¿ Tanbien tú, Otabio ?)

OTABIO. [Ap. al Duque.]

CELIA.

¿ Quedate ya alguna duda (55 v.)
de que es Jacinta ?

FLORA.

Pues ¡ quando
el duque tubo ninguna !

OTON.

¿ Quién no cree que ésta es Jacinta ?

OTABIO.

¿ Quién niega verdad tan pura ?

DUQUE.

Tal estoy, que yo no sé salir de esta enigma obscura.
Ellos me lo haran creer
segun estoy ciego. (Sale Marcial.)

MARCIAL.

Acuda
vuexelencia, si no quiere ver la mayor desbentura.
Fadrique con la porfia...

DUQUE.

¿ Qué Fadrique ?

FLORA.

¿ Aqueso dudas ?

CELIA.

¿ Á Fadrique desconoces ?

DUQUE.

Aun me falta esta loçura.
Villano, ¡ viben los cielos !
que si la verdad desnuda
no me dices de quién eres, qué haces, qué quieres, qué buscas, quién es Cincia y quién Anton, que deste acero la punta
a de ser llabe del pecho que tantos daños oculta.

MARCIAL.

Cumpliose mi profecia.
Yo la dire, si me escuchas,
tan desnuda que vna Eba.
No aya andado más desnuda ;
más desnuda que vn mentis
de quien nada disimula ;
más desnuda que vn no quiero que vn abariento pronuncia ; más desnuda que mujer
de taur y más que vna dama de yjo de familias.
Mira si es desnudez suma.

DUQUE.

Dilo. Acaba.

MARCIAL.

Pues detenga
esa llaue, que se escusa para vn arca quando guardas no tiene la cerradura. (56 r.) Éste que aqui es jardinero es Fadrique. Esto es sin duda, porque huyendo de su hermano, que matarle vn dia procura,

2845. Marcial alludes to the fear expressed in verses 989-992.

desnudo se arrojó al agua y tan felizmente surca que á aquesta orilla salio.
Jacinta es la que le busca como Cintia, yo Marcial, aunque Tirso me presumas.
Esta es la verdad, señor, tersa, limpia, clara y pura,
y pues en vn cuero está,
claro está que está desnuda.
Lo que yo bengo á decirte es, señor, que al punto acudas á Fadrique, porque está loco.

FLORA.

¿ Ay mayor desbentura ?

MARCIAL.

Como Cintia le nego
quién era con tanta furia
y tú se lo confirmabas, a dado en esta locura de decir que es pescador
y que todos dél se burlan, si le dicen que es Fadrique.

CELIA.

¡ Gran lástima !

FLORA.

¡ Suerte ynjusta !

DUQUE.

Oton, ¿ qué es lo que veo ?

2873. The point of the joke here probably is to be found in a double allusion to the two expressions estar en cueros and mentir como un cuero.

2888. The very insignificant part played by honor in this play may furnish an additional reason for believing the piece to be one of Calderon's early efforts.

En este punto mi desonrra creo.
Fadrique está fingido en mi casa y de Flora conocido y ella en presencia mia fabores por instantes le decia
y la ynfame villana, dama de aquel que la trataba hermana me dice aquesto pasa, que los hombres encubre Flora en casa.
Ynportale á mi honrra vengar, casando á Flora, esta desonrra.

CELIA.

¿ Por qué te as alterado ?
Porque Fadrique en nada te a engañado. (56v.) Luego su nombre dijo
y el de Jacinta á voces.

DUQUE.

Yo me aflijo
con causa, Celia fiera.
Quando tú le dijiste que fingiera, ¿ por qué no me decia
quién era ? esto me aflige.

CELIA.

¡ Yo que fingiera ! Nun[c]a se lo dije, que quando le buscaba,
él ya contigo descubierto estaba
y pense que otro era quien le dijo á Fadrique que fingiera.

DUQUE.

Mia fue la locura.

OTON.

Rremedia tu sospecha con cordura, que al sabio más le agrada el consejo, señor, que no la espada.

DUQUE.

Casaréle con Flora.

OTON.

Vengate luego y disimula aora. (Sale Fadrique.)

FADRIQUE. [Ap.]

(Villano es bien me vea, pues quieren todos que villano sea.
Mi bengança es rraçon que ansi publique.
Villano soy, no quiero ser Fadrique ;
mas qué fortuna alcança á costa de su daño la vengança.)

OTON. [Ap. al Duque.]

(Alli Fadrique está.)

DUQUE. [Ap. á Oton.]

(Yo quiero hablarle, disimulando enojos, si, lenguas del dolor, no hablan los ojos.) Fadrique, que ya puedo decir tu nombre sin temor y miedo, deseoso de verte.

FADRIQUE.

Pues, señor, ¿ cómo me hablas de esa suerte ?
¿ Á un rrustico billano que la espuma produjo en vmor cano, á esta selba arrojado,
y de marinas fieras engendrado,
hablas de esa manera ?
Mi vmildad, mi vajeza, considera.

DUQUE.

Ya no es tiempo, Fadrique, de encubrirte, (57 r.) que yo tomo á mi cargo

2918. In Tirso's La mujer por fuerza, Federico, as a result of an elaborate enredo of which he is the victim, comes to believe himself insane. In the present instance, Fadrique's insanity is feigned for the purpose of avenging himself upon the duke.

ayudarte y serbirte
y de Filipo ese disgusto largo le tengo de ácabar con amistades.

FADRIQUE.

Á cosas imposibles me persuades.
Con tus onrras me ynfamo.
¡ Yo Fadrique, señor ! Anton me llamo.

FLORA.

Pues Fadrique ¿ qué es eso ?

CELIA. [Ap.]

(Sin duda que Fadrique perdio el seso.)

FADRIQUE.

Tirso.

MARCIAL.

Deja, señor, esa porfia.
¿ Á Marcial no conoces ? ¿ Por qué quieres encubrirte, señor ?

FADRIQUE.

¿ Tirso no eres ?
¿ En este punto ansi no te llamabas ?

MARCIAL.

Era por el peligro en que tú estabas ;
mas ya que el duque tu rrigor rremedia, di el nombre. Acabaráse la comedia.

2953. Calderon frequently ridicules the convention which made every play end with a marriage. Cf. Saber del mal y del bien (ed. Hartzenbusch), Vol. III, p. 35c :

Ya sabrán vuesas mercedes Que en el punto que se casan
Las damas de la comedia,
Es señal de que se acaba.

tos de odio y amor, Ibid., Vol. II, p. 102a, a gracioso explains his master's ill success in love by saying that the comedy would be too short if all went well. In Cada uno para si, Ibid., Vol. III, p. 450b, the servant comforts his master with the assurance that a marriage must result in the third act and asks to be remembered when the time comes. Such obtrusive remarks on the part of the gracioso are very common and many more might be cited.

MARCIAL.

(Á una tienen los dos por dos mujeres.)

FLORA: [Ap.]

¿ Qué pretendes, Fadrique ?

JACINTA.

Anton, ¿ qué quieres ?

FILIPO.

Celia, dejale aora.

OTON.

¿ Adónde vas tan arrogante, Flora ?

FLORA.

¿ Por qué el balor encubres en palabras, si en obras le descubres ?

CELIA.

Fadrique, ¿ por qué niegas
quién eres quando á tanta gloria llegas ? (57 v.)

DUQUE.

Fadrique, yo estoy ya desengañado.

JACINTA.

Fadrique, mis desbelos inbencion son de amor, furia, celos.
Señor, la burla baste.

FADRIQUE.

Señor, en este instante e despertado.
La merced que me hacias engendró vnas confusas fantasias de que Fadrique era.
Mas si el pecho su origen considera, yo conozco que soy Anton vn hombre de bajo estado y con humilde nombre.

FILIPO.

Agusto soberano, ¿ qué veo ? ¿ No es Fadrique ? ¡ Hermano ! ¡ Hermano !
Á tus plantas rrendido,
de mi tirano error perdon te pido.
Aqui tienes mi bida,
que, aunque ella eterna fuera,
oy en albricias de la tuya diera.

FADRIQUE.

¡ Pues para mí, Filipo, humildad tanta !

MARCIAL.

¡ Gracias á Dios !

FADRIQUE.

Del suelo te lebanta.

FILIPO.

Perdon te pido á aquesas plantas puesto.

MARCIAL. [Ap.]

(Casense ya, porque acabemos presto.)

FADRIQUE.

Dame, hermano, tus braços.

FILIPO.

Ya de eterna amistad an de ser laços.

DUQUE.

Fadrique, ¿ puedo ya sin que te asombre darte, mis braços y decir tu nombre ?

FADRIQUE.

Y por pagar, señor, lo que te debo,
para pedir á Flora no me atrebo.

FILIPO.

Y pues Fadrique tan dichoso a sido, á Celia, por mujer, señor, te pido.

DUQUE.

Yo las doy á los dos.

MARCIAL. [Ap.]

(Casense presto.)

FADRIQUE.

Humillado á tus pies...

FILIPO.

Á tus pies puesto...
¿ no es Celia ?

FADRIQUE.

Flora es.

MARCIAL. [Ap.]

(No estan casados.
Aun no estan los enrredos acabados.)

JACINTA.

¿ Aquesto a merecido el amor con que siempre le e seguido ?
¿ Y para esperar esto
los peligros an sido en que me e puesto ? (58 r.)

FADRIQUE.

Si yo á Flora e pedido,
a sido por mostrarme agradezido con Flora y con mi hermano.
Doyle á Flora, á Filipo, á ti, la mano.

FILIPO.

Aunque me vença aora, mia sera Jacinta, tuya Flora.

3012. In the first act of Tirso's La lealtad contra la envidia, there is a similar duel of generosity between two gallants, each eager to surrender the lady he loves to his rival.

DUQUE.

¡ Quánto es mejor, casados, dibidir en los dos, los dos estados !
Filipo de Milan [es] eredero
y, si á Jacinta adora, case con ella y con Fadrique, Flora que es la que á Mantua ereda.

MARCIAL.

Porque casados, acabarse pueda la confusion que en esta selba a abido, de cuyos yerros el perdon os pido.
Laus deo.

MACON, PROTAT FRÈRES, IMPRIMEURS

LA POLÉMICA ANTICRISTIANA DE MOHÁMED EL CAISÍ

Entre mis notas, tiempo ha recogidas, que se refieren á la literatura polémica de los musulmanes españoles contra la religión cristiana, existe una pequeña Cuestión (مسألة), no sólo inédita, sino del todo desconocida para los especialistas. Ni siquiera Steinschneider tuvo noticia de ella, cuando redactó su copioso repertorio Polemische und apologetische Literatur in arabischer Sprache zwischen Muslimen, Christen und Juden (Leipzig, Brockhaus, 1877). Esta omisión, por otra parte, no tiene nada de extraño, porque la Cuestión, además de brevísima y poco importante, no parece haberse divulgado mucho entre los mismos musulmanes, por lo cual no aparece catalogada en ninguno — que yo sepa — de los ricos fondos arábigos de las bibliotecas europeas y orientales.

Ya he dicho que el documento carece de un interés extraordinario, atendida su brevedad y lo vulgar de sus argumentos polémicos; es, sin embargo, digno de conocerse como índice de la vida polémica en los fines del siglo XVI en que debió ser redactada. A juzgar, en efecto, por este documento y por otros varios que tengo recogidos y estudiados, procedentes de los fondos de la B. N. de Madrid y de la colección particular de D. Pablo Gil (Zaragoza), parece que ya en dicha época algunos alfaquíes españoles, poco duchos en achaques de polémica, no creyéndose aptos para redactar escritos de este género con los que pudiesen mantener viva la fe islámica entre sus correligionarios, acudían en demanda de ayuda á los más ilustrados alfaquíes de la costa africana, los cuales les enviaban pequeños tratados de apología del islam y de polémica contra la fe cristiana, que redactados en árabe (como éste á que nos referimos) ó vertidos ya al castellano para divulgarlos más fácilmente, circulaban en secreto entre los moriscos de las aljamas aragonesas y castellanas. El autor de esta Cuestión es, en efecto, un alfaquí que debía residir lejos de los correligionarios para los cuales la redactó, puesto que al terminarla, y antes de firmarla, se excusa de no ser más prolijo porque el correo que había de llevarla á los destinatarios no podía detenerse más tiempo. Desgraciadamente no consigna el nombre y país de las personas para las cuales va destinada. Puede sin embargo conjeturarse fundadamente que serían moriscos españoles, ya que la Cuestión aparece formando parte de un códice manuscrito en el cual se contienen varios otros documentos, árabes y aljamiados, algunos de ellos con indicaciones evidentes de haber sido redactados ó utilizados en Aragón y por moriscos aragoneses. La identificación de la persona del autor ha de ser también sólo conjeturable : se firma Abulcásem Mohámed hijo de Sirach, de la tribu de Cáis; pero aun cuando sus nombres, su cúnia y su adjetivo patronímico sean vulgares entre los musulmanes de occidente, creo que cabe fijar algunos datos distintivos de su personalidad, aunque sólo por sospechas, sin certeza absoluta. Estudiando el códice de la B. N. de Madrid, Gg. 75 (nº actual 4944), que contiene varios textos aljamiados de polémica religiosa [1], encontré en el folio 59 rº el siguiente título y prólogo de un libro, que literalmente transcribo [2] :

« Elquiteb [el libro] que a en él la dexputa de Mohámmad Elcaiçi. Aquí comiença el libro que fizo el faquih Mohámmad Elcaiçi el cual era xabidor de la meçquida de Azeituna de Túneç y fué cativo en Lérida del reino de Catalunia [3] y depuéx quitóxe y

1. Cfr. Memorias de la R. Acad. Española, VI, 255, donde el Sr. Saavedra describió este códice, bajo el nº XXIII.

2. Aparte de conservar la x para el ش, la ç para el س, la ż para el ز y la g para el ج, he modernizado en todo lo posible la ortografía.

3. El texto dice (antes de Cataluña) Aragón, pero esta palabra fué borrada por el mismo copista, al advertir su error.

murió allí, y era muy çierto xabidor y todavía se dexputaba con lox crixtianox y xabíelex moxtrar todox lox puntox de lox avangeliox lox cualex había decogido dexte libro paxado que había fecho Abdalah el Cátib que fué cativo en Françia, y lo que dize en exte acabamiento de lo que dixo Elcaiçi, bien que no ex grande, max ex muy bueno, que ayuda á lax razonex del primero... »

Resulta de aquí : 1° que existió un Mohámed de la tribu de Cáis, docto alfaquí de la mezquita Azeituna de Túnez y autor de obras polémicas contra los cristianos, que puede ser identificado con el autor de la Cuestión. Huelga decir que ésta nada tiene de común con la Dexputa en aljamiado cuyo prólogo acabo de transcribir. 2° Dando por buena esta identificación, resulta que la Cuestión debió redactarla en Túnez después de su cautividad en Lérida ya que « todavía se dexputaba con lox crixtianox » después de rescatado y regresado al Africa.

El códice que contiene la Cuestión pertenece á la citada Colección particular de D. Pablo Gil de Zaragoza (ya difunto) y llevaba en el catálogo personal manuscrito de su propietario el n° 33[4]. Como el códice contiene varias piezas árabes y aljamiadas, cada una lleva además un número de orden; el de esta Cuestión es el 27. La pieza tiene dos solos folios, más 13 líneas, y cada folio consta de 27.

La Cuestión tiene como objeto preferente refutar las explicaciones varias, dadas por los teólogos cristianos, al dogma de la

4. Cfr. P. Gil, Los manuscritos aljamiados de mi colección apud Homenaje á D. Francisco Codera, Zaragoza, Escar, 1904, pág. 545) donde se describe parcialmente este códice, bajo el n° 22. Añadiré algunos pormenores que completen esa descripción : Códice de varios, bien conservado ; papel de hilo en su mayor parte; tamaño in-4°, de 0,17 × 0,10 mts. ; encuadernado en tapas (sueltas) de piel blanca de la época ; comienza por una pieza que se titula Recetas del Menescal del Sultán de Granada ; una de las piezas (folio 51) tiene colofón con le fecha 851 de la hég. (1447 de J. C.); el códice procede de Almonacid de la Sierra (Aragón) y creo que ya no forma parte de la colección de la Sra. Viuda de Gil.

unión hipostática de las dos naturalezas divina y humana en la persona de Cristo, para inferir de esta refutación que Cristo no es Dios, puesto que á su persona meramente humana no pudo unirse la naturaleza divina del Verbo. Jesús es pues un puro hombre, aunque profeta y santo, dotado por Dios con todos los dones y gracias sobrenaturales que los demás profetas, y especialmente con el don de hacer milagros y con la gracia de su concepción virginal. Ni esta gracia ni aquellos milagros demuestran que fuese Dios, porque también Adán y Eva nacieron preternaturalmente, y también los profetas de la Ley antigua hicieron milagros. La cuestión termina con los textos alcoránicos que niegan la divinidad de Cristo, así como principia con otro texto que niega la Trinidad. De esta manera, la Cuestión resume en breves páginas todos los capítulos de cargo contra el cristianismo, tradicionales en el islam (negación de la Trinidad y de la divinidad de Cristo) y alude además, de paso, á otros dogmas cristianos sin refutarlos de exprofeso (crucifixión y muerte de Cristo, carácter definitivo de la revelación cristiana).

Las fuentes inmediatas de información teológica, que el autor aprovechó, no son de fácil determinación. Como se verá en las notas que he puesto de comentario á varios pasajes del texto, algunas ideas de la Cuestión encuéntranse consignadas en libros de polémica anteriores y contemporáneos de Mohámed el Caisí. Tales son la Historia crítica de las religiones, heregías y escuelas [5] del cordobés Abenhazam († 456 hég. = 1063 de J. C.), el Libro de las sectas religiosas y filosóficas [6] del oriental Xahrastani († 548 = 1153), y el libro polémico titulado Obra maestra del autor hábil en refutación de los adoradores de la cruz del presbítero mallorquín, fray Ençelm Turmeda, que apostató de la fé católica en Túnez y que es conocido con el nombre musulmán de Abdalá el Tru-chimán [7]. No hay que olvidar que en el prólogo, arriba transcrito, de la Dexputa aljamiada se dice que Mohámed Elcaisí utilizó el libro « que había fecho Abdalah el Cátib » el cual pudiera muy bien ser el mismo fray Ençelm Turmeda [8] cuya obra de polémica se distingue cabalmente por ese perfecto conocimiento de los evangelios que también se atribuye al autor de la Dexputa (« xabíeles moxtrar todox lox puntox de lox avangeliox »).

La presente edición, aunque hecha sobre un solo manuscrito, no ha ofrecido dudas de lectura porque la letra del códice es muy clara y sus dos folios están perfectamente conservados. Me he permitido distribuir en párrafos el texto árabe, que en el original no ofrece solución alguna de continuidad. De esta manera he creído facilitar su lectura y estudio. He añadido una versión castellana, lo más literal posible, poniendo entre paréntesis [ ] aquellas frases ó palabras indispensables para el sentido y que no corresponden á la letra del texto árabe. Detrás van notas explicativas de los pasajes más interesantes.

7. تحفة الاريب فى الرد على اهل الصليب Edic. Cairo, 1904 de J. C. Existe también una traducción francesa, firmada M. N., inserta en la Revue de l'histoire des Religions, XII (1885), pgs. 68-89, 179-201, 278-301. Del mismo autor es El libre de bons amonestaments compost en Tuniç par Fra Ençelm Turmeda (en altra manera apellat Abdala) nadiu de Mallorca » publicado por D. Angel Aguiló en el Cançoneret d'obres vulgars.

8. La mayor dificultad está en que de Abdalá el Cátib se dice « que fué cativo en Francia », hecho que no consta en la autobiografía de Abdala el Truchimán (cfr. ob. cit., pág. 4-17).

TEXTO

الحمد لله * والصلاة والسلام على محمد رسول الله

مسئلة

زعم النصارى تعالى الله عن اعتقادهم الفاسد ان الله ثالث ثلاثة وان الاقانيم ثلاثة الوجود والعلم والحياة والاقانيم عندهم هى الالهة والعلم عندهم هو الكلمة ويسمونه بالابن ولا يعنون بالكلمة الكلام ويعبرون عن الوجود بالاب وعن الحياة بروح القدس واللاهوت عندهم العلم والناسوت جسد عيسى عليه السلام وعندهم ان اللاهوت تدرّع الناسوت بمعنى امتزاج واختلاط فمنهم من قال اختلط كما يختلط اللبن والخمر بالماء ومنهم من قال هو بمنزلة الطابع يظهر فى الشمع والطين اذا طبع فيهما ومنهم من قال هو بمنزلة التفاحة ونحوها نشم رايحتها ومنهم من قال لم يمازج اللاهوت الناسوت ولكن فاض عليه بمنزلة شعاع الشمس اذا اصاب ثوبا احمر او نحوه فان حمرته تنبعث الى ما ينصب مواجهته من ثوب وغيره

وهذه كلها اقاويل باطلة وسخافات ردية تشبه الخرافات لا يلتفت اليها عاقل ولا يعتمدها الا غبى جاهل او معاند

فان العلم صفة من الصفات ومعنى من المعانى لا يتصور فيه الانتقال لانه لا يجوز عقلا ولا حسا ان ينتقل علم احد الى احد وانما يتعلم من عليه ويبقى علم المعلم عنده لم ينتقل ولم يتبعض

واما قول من قال امتزج كالماء بالخمر ونحو ذلك فلا خفاء فى بطلانه فان الاختلاط والامتزاج من صفات المايعات والعلم وجسد عيسى عليه السلام ليسا كذلك والماء اذا امتزج بالخمر او الخل ونحو ذلك لا ينفصل احدهما من الاخر وهم يقولون اللاهوت انفصل من الناسوت بمعنى ان العلم انفصل من جسد عيسى حين صلب بزعمهم ومعاذ الله ان صلب بل رفعه الله الى السماء وهو هنالك وينزل فى اخر

الزمان فيقتل الدجال ويكسر الصليب ويقتل الخنزير حسبما اخبر الرسول الصادق المصدوق صلى الله عليه وسلم

واما قول من قال هو بمنزلة الطابع فى الشمع والتفاحة فى الشم فباطل وركاكة فى القول لان المعانى لا تنتقل وانما ذلك اثر الطابع والرايحة لا انهما انتقلا

واما قول من قال انه بمنزلة شعاع الشمس فباطل ايضا لا خفاء فيه لان الشعاع معنى وصفة فلا تنتقل والحمرة لم تنتقل وانما الذى يظهر شعاع

فحصل من هذا ان الذى يعول عليه ان عيسى عليه السلام مخلوق من مخلوقات الله تعالى اظهرته قدرة الله تعالى وظهر عليه اثر صنعه وقدرته كغيره من المخلوقات وما ظهر على يديه من احياء الموتى وابراء الاكمه والابرص ونزول المائدة وغير ذلك معجزات ظهرت على يديه كما ظهرت على يدى غيره من الرسل كموسى عليه السلام فى قلب العصا حية وابتلاعها الحبالات والعصى ثم رجوعها عصى كما كانت وكذلك ما ظهر على يدى رسولنا محمد صلى الله عليه وسلم من نبع الماء من بين اصابعه وتسبيح الحصا فى كفه وانشقاق القمر وتكثير الطعام القليل وشهادة الاحجار والاشجار والضب والغزالة برسالته الى غير ذلك مما عده الناس وبلغوا به الى الف معجزة وبقى لهم كثير مما لم يحفظوه وكفى بالقران لانه اعجز العرب عن معارضته بفصاحته وبلاغته وهم كانوا اهل الفصاحة والبلاغة فدل هذا على ان عيسى عليه السلام ليس مخالفا لغيره من البشر الا فى الصفات التى اشترك بها مع النبيين والمرسلين صلوات الله وسلامة على نبينا وعليه وعلى جميع النبيين والمرسلين وان خلقه من غير اب لا يستبعد فى قدرة الله فان الله قدير على كل شى فقد خلق ادم من غير اب ولا ام بل خلقه من تراب وعجن التراب فصار طينا وصوره الله صورة ادمية وبقى مدة حتى يبست تلك الصورة من الطين فصارت فخارا ثم قلب تلك الاجزاء لحما ودما وشحما وعظاما وعروقا واعصابا وشق له السمع والبصر وخلق الاعضاء وغير ذلك فسبحان العزيز القدير وكذلك خلق حوا من ضلع من اضلاع ادم القى الله عليه النوم وانسل ضلع من اضلاعه وهو لا يشعر بقدرة الله وخلق حوا من الضلع وكذلك بنو ادم من

نطفة من ماء ضعيف لو بقى للشمس ساعة ليبس ثم يخلق منه العظام والاعصاب واللحم والشحم وغير ذلك فكما تعلم وجود هذه الاشياء لا تستبعد خلق انسان من لام وحدها وحصل من هذا ان البشر على اقسام منه ما هو من غير اب ولا ام وهو ادم عليه السلام ومنه ما هو من اب دون ام وهى حوا عليها السلام ومنه ما هو من ام دون اب وهو عيسى عليه السلام ومنه ما هو من ام واب وهو ما عدا ذلك فكيف يستبعد حال عيسى حتى يعتقد انه ابن الله تعالى الله عن ذلك

وكذلك لا يجوز ولا يحل ان يعتقد فيه انه ابن الله لاجل ما ظهر على يديه فان ذلك خلقه الله له ليدل على صدقه فان الله تعالى يخلق المعجزات لرسله ليستدل الخلق بذلك على صدقهم لان المعجزة لا يقدر عليها بشر لا الله فهى بمنزلة ان لو قال الله هو صادق يقول الحق انا ارسلته فصدقه بفعله فيجب على الخلق كلهم الايمان والتصديق بما جاء به محمد صلى الله عليه وسلم لان ظهور المعجزات على يديه دلت على صدقه وجاء بالقران العزيز الذى هو من معجزاته واخبر فيه ان عيسى عبد الله ورسوله وقال الله تعالى فيما اخبر عن عيسى عليه السلام انه اول ما قال حين تكلم فى المهد انى عبد الله اتانى الكتاب وجعلنى نبيا وجعلنى مباركا اين ما كنت الاية * وقال تعالى لقد كفر الذين قالوا ان الله هو المسيح ابن مريم لقد كفر الذين قالوا ان الله ثالث ثلاثة وما من اله الا اله واحد ما المسيح ابن مريم الا رسول قد خلت من قبله الرسل وامه صديقة قل يا ايها الناس انى رسول الله اليكم جميعا الى غير ذلك * وقال رسول الله صلى الله عليه وسلم بعثت الى الناس عامة وقال بعثت الى كل احمر واسود وقال صلى الله عليه وسلم والذى نفس محمد بيده لا يسمع بى من هذه الامة احد ولا يهودى ولا نصرانى ثم يموت ولم يومن بالذى ارسلت به الا كان من اصحاب النار

¡ A Dios sea la gloria, y para Mahoma, el enviado de Dios, sea la oración y la salud !

Cuestión

Pretenden los cristianos (de cuyas erróneas creencias está Dios muy por encima) que Alá es el tercero de tres, pues son tres las personas : el Ser, la Ciencia, y la Vida, y todas tres son Dios, según ellos. La Ciencia, para ellos, es el Verbo, al cual denominan Hijo, pero no entienden por Verbo la palabra [como uno de los atributos de Dios]. Por Padre entienden el Ser, y por Espíritu Santo la Vida [1].

Según ellos, [refiriéndose á Cristo] la divinidad es la Ciencia, y la humanidad el cuerpo de Jesús (sobre él sea la paz) ; así es que, á juicio de ellos, la divinidad se revistió de la humanidad por modo de mezcla y de confusión [2]. Porque algunos de ellos dicen que [ambos elementos] se confundieron, como se confunden [al mezclarse] con el agua la leche y el vino.

Otros dicen que [se unieron] al modo del sello que aparece en la cera y en el barro, cuando es impreso en éstos. Otros dicen que al modo de la manzana ú otras [frutas] semejantes cuyo perfume se deja sentir. Otros [en cambio] dicen que no se mezcló la divinidad con la humanidad, sino que aquella se difundió sobre ésta á la manera de los rayos del sol cuando caen sobre un vestido rojo ó de otro color, pues el color rojo es como enviado [por los rayos del sol] á aquella parte de la superficie del vestido sobre la cual se aplican [3].

Pero todas éstas son locuciones vanas y necedades detestables, semejantes á cuentos fabulosos, de los que nadie, dotado de inteligencia, hace caso, y á los que sólo dan crédito los estúpidos necios ó los tercos.

En efecto : la ciencia es un atributo, una propiedad espiritual, cuyo tránsito [de un sujeto á otro] no puede concebirse, porque la razón y los sentidos declaran imposible que la ciencia de una [persona] pase á otra [persona]; [el saber del discípulo] procede sólo de su [personal] ciencia; la ciencia del maestro permanece en el maestro sin trasladarse ni dividirse.

Por lo que toca á la opinión de los que dicen que se mezclaron [la divinidad y la humanidad] como el agua con el vino ó cosa semejante, es bien evidente su absurdo, porque la confusión y la mezcla son propiedades de los flúidos, mientras que la Ciencia y el cuerpo de Jesús (sobre él sea la paz) no son tal cosa. El agua, una vez mezclada con el vino ó el vinagre ó con [líquidos] semejantes, no se separan ya el uno del otro; y ellos [los cristianos] dicen que la divinidad se separó de la humanidad, es decir, la Ciencia se separó del cuerpo de Jesús, cuando fué crucificado, según ellos pretenden; pero Dios nos libre [de decir] que fuese crucificado; al contrario: Dios lo subió al cielo, y allí está y bajará en el fin de los tiempos y matará al Antecristo y romperá la cruz y matará al cerdo, según refiere el Profeta veraz y digno de fe (Dios ruegue por él y le dé la salud)[4].

Por lo que toca á la opinión de los que dicen que [la unión se hizo] á la manera del sello en la cera y del aroma en el olfato, también es vana y endeble, porque las entidades inmateriales no se trasladan; y en el símil empleado se trata sólo de una huella impresa por el sello y el aroma. Y estas cosas no se trasladan.

Por lo que toca á la opinión de los que dicen que [la unión se hizo] á la manera de los rayos del sol, también es vana evidentemente, porque los rayos son una entidad inmaterial y un atributo, y [estas cosas] no se trasladan. El color rojo no se traslada tampoco: [el color] únicamente es aquello que los rayos hacen aparecer.

De esto se infiere que la única verdad de que se puede estar seguro [en esta materia] es la de que Jesús (sobre él sea la salud) fué una de tantas criaturas de Dios que su omnipotencia produjo, manifestando en ella, como en otras cosas criadas, una huella ó vestigio de su acción y poder; así también, los hechos todos que se manifestaron en manos de Jesús, tales como resucitar á los muertos, curar á los ciegos y leprosos, hacer bajar la mesa [5] y otros, fueron milagros manifestados en sus manos igualmente que se manifestaron en las manos de otros profetas, como Moisés (sobre él sea la salud), cuando transformó la vara en culebra, la cual se tragó los cables y las varas, volviendo después á su primitiva condición de vara [6]. Así también aparecieron hechos semejantes en manos de nuestro profeta Mahoma (Dios ruegue por él y le dé la salud), como cuando brotó el agua de entre sus dedos, ó cuando los guijarros alabaron á Dios en la palma de su mano, ó cuando dividió la luna, ó cuando multiplicó unos pocos manjares, ó cuando las piedras y árboles, un lagarto y una gazela dieron testimonio de su divina misión, y otros muchos [milagros] cuyo cómputo se hace llegar por algunos hasta mil, y aún quedan [fuera de la cuenta] muchos más, de los cuales se ha perdido la memoria, pero basta [por todos ellos] con el Alcorán, pues los árabes, á pesar de ser gentes que hablaban con elocuencia y facundia, no pudieron encontrar en él ni un solo defecto literario, como motivo para contradecirlo [7].

Todo esto demuestra que Jesús (sobre él sea la salud) no se diferencia de los demás hombres más que en aquellas propiedades que tuvo comunes con los profetas y enviados de Dios (El ruegue por nuestro profeta y por Jesús y por todos los otros y les dé la salud). Demuestra igualmente que no es inverosímil para el poder de Dios, el que Jesús fuese procreado sin padre, pues Dios es omnipotente, y creó á Adán sin padre ni madre; y, lo que es más, lo creó del polvo, el cual, hecho pasta, se convirtió en barro; Dios le dió la forma humana, permaneció así algún tiempo hasta que se secó aquella figura de barro y se convirtió en loza; luego, Dios transformó aquellas partes en carne, sangre, grasa, huesos, venas, arterias y nervios, dióle órganos distintos, la vista, el oído, formó los miembros del cuerpo etc. ¡ Loado sea el Glorioso y el Omnipotente ! Así también, creó á Eva de una costilla de Adán :

infundió á éste el sueño, extrájole dulcemente una de sus costillas, sin que él lo advirtiera, por la omnipotencia divina, y formó de la costilla á Eva. Igualmente los hijos de Adán son procreados de una tan exigua gota de licor [prolífico], que si se la dejase expuesta al sol un rato, se secaría; y sin embargo, de ella forma Dios los huesos, los nervios, la carne, la grasa, etc. Luego, así como conoces la existencia de estos hechos, no debes creer inverosímil la procreación de un hombre solamente de la madre. De donde resulta que los hombres pueden clasificarse en los siguientes grupos: 1° los que [nacen] sin padre ni madre, como Adán (sobre él sea la salud); 2° los que [nacen] de padre sin madre, como Eva (sobre ella sea la salud); 3° los que [nacen] de madre sin padre, como Jesús (sobre él sea la salud); 4° los que [nacen] de madre y de padre, que son todos los hombres restantes. ¿ Cómo pues se juzga tan extraordinaria la condición de Jesús, hasta el punto de creer que es hijo de Dios ? ¡ Cuán por encima está Dios de tal cosa [8] !

Igualmente, no es lícito ni posible creer, acerca de Jesús, que fuese hijo de Dios, fundándose en los hechos que se manifestaron en sus manos, pues estos hechos fueron producidos por Dios en su favor, para demostrar la veracidad [de su misión]; Dios, en efecto, produce los milagros en favor de sus profetas para probar á las gentes la veracidad de ellos, porque el milagro no puede ser hecho por hombre alguno y sí sólo por Dios. El milagro, pues, vale tanto como si Dios dijera: « Él [el profeta] es veraz, dice la verdad: Yo lo he enviado. » Por consiguiente [Dios] da testimonio de la veracidad [del profeta] por medio de su obra [es decir, del milagro]. Y por eso todas las gentes están obligados á dar fe y crédito á las enseñanzas de Mahoma (Dios ruegue por él y le dé le salud): porque el haberse manifestado los milagros en sus manos demuestra su veracidad. Ahora bien: él nos enseñó el honrado Alcorán, que es uno de sus Milagros, en el cual refiere que Jesús es siervo de Dios y enviado suyo. Dice, en efecto, Dios (ensalzado sea) al tratar de Jesús (sobre él sea la salud), que lo primero que dijo cuando habló en la cuna [fué lo siguiente]: « En verdad que yo soy el siervo de Dios; El me ha dado el Libro [revelado] y me ha constituído profeta. El ha querido que yo sea bendito en todas partes en que me encuentre [9]. » También dice el Altísimo: « Infieles son los que dicen que Dios es el Mesías, hijo de María[10]. » « Infieles son los que dicen que Dios es un tercero de la trinidad, puesto que no hay más Dios que el Dios único[11]. » « El Mesías, hijo de María, no es más que un enviado de Dios; otros enviados de Dios le han precedido: Su madre era justa[12]. » « Dí ¡ oh gentes! Yo soy el enviado de Dios á todos vosotros[13]. » Y dice el Profeta (Dios ruegue por él y le dé la salud): « He sido enviado á todas las gentes. » Y añade: « He sido enviado á todos, los blancos y los negros. »

Esto es lo poco que permite [decir sobre la cuestión] la brevedad del tiempo, pues el que ha de llevar [este escrito] tiene prisa de emprender el viage. ¡ La salud sea para el que lo leyere, de parte de Mohámed, hijo de Sirach, llamado Albulcásem! ¡ Que Dios le ayude con su gracia!

Lo que de este escrito se citare como personal mío, es verdadero y exacto. Lo ha escrito Mohámed, hijo de Sirach, hijo de Mohámed, hijo de Sirach, el Caisí, llamado Abulcásem. ¡ Que Dios le ayude con su gracia!

NOTAS

1. La doctrina sobre la trinidad atribuída aquí á los cristianos se aproxima al dogma católico más que la consignada en el Alcorán (IV, 169) donde se les atribuye la fe en una trinidad formada por Alá, Jesús y María. Los exégetas musulmanes, como Aljázin (siglo XIV° de J. C.), explican este absurdo alcoránico como lógica secuela de la idiomatum communicatio : si Jesús es Dios é hijo de María, ésta debe ser también persona divina. Realmente la explicación debe buscarse en el culto cuasi divino de María en la iglesia oriental ; y su sustitución por el Espíritu Santo quizá proceda de que algunos hereges, los ofitas, consideraban á la persona tercera de la trinidad como principio femenino ; el gnóstico Valentín le llama μήτηρ ζώντων, y el Evangelio de los hebreos le llama madre de Jesús. Abenhazam (ob. cit., I, 48) atribuye este dogma trinitario, que el Alcorán supone, á una secta cristiana que ya no existía en su tiempo (siglo XI° de J. C.) y que él denomina البربرانية. Abdalá el Truchimán, á pesar de su perfecto conocimiento de la dogmática cristiana, se hace eco, con visible mala fe, de idéntica falsedad (cfr. ob. cit., 29), sólo para no desmentir el texto alcoránico. Fuera de estos casos aislados, los teólogos musulmanes están unánimes en formular el dogma como nuestro autor : Unidad de sustancia y trinidad de hipóstasis : Padre, Hijo y Espíritu Santo, que representan el Ser, la Ciencia (Verbo ó palabra) y la Vida divina. Esta última atribución parece que comienza á ser usada en tiempo de Sn. Gregorio Taumaturgo (siglo III°) que llama al Espíritu Santo ζωὴ ζώντων αἰτία. Sobre esta cuestión, pueden consultarse : E. Sayous, Jésus-Christ d'après Mahomet (Leipzig-Paris, 1880), págs. 58-62. Tixeront, Histoire des dogmes, I, La théologie anténicéenne (Paris, Lecoffre, 1906), págs. 192 y 416. — Para la exégesis del texto alcoránico IV, 169, y de su paralelo V, 116, véase Aljázin Lobab atawil

(Cairo, 1304 hég.), I, 419 y 501, y Abulbaracat Anasafí, Madárik atanzil (ibidem), I, 420. Cfr. Xahrastani, ob. cit., 172, donde no se encuentra huella de la pseudo trinidad alcoránica (Alá, Jesús y María), á pesar de tratarse de autor oriental y del siglo XI. En cambio otro oriental del siglo XIV, Axxarani, la da como cosa cierta, en su libro Alinsán alcámil (Cairo, 1316 hég.), I, 69, 74, agravando el error con una interpretación más absurda. Dice que una de las tres sectas en que se dividen los cristianos (y á la cual no nombra, aunque sí á las otras dos : Melquitas y jacobitas) cree que Dios equivale á una trinidad : Padre, que es el Espíritu Santo, Madre, que es María, é Hijo, que es Jesús. Y añade Axxarani que á este error fueron conducidos por una mala inteligencia del comienzo del Evangelio que dice : « En el nombre de la Madre y del Hijo. »

2. امتزاج واختلاط son respectivamente la κράσις y la μίξις de los griegos, ó sea, la mezcla proporcionada y la confusa.

3. Estos cuatro símiles que el autor pone en boca de los cristianos para explicar de algún modo el misterio de la encarnación, pueden efectivamente atribuirse á algunas de las sectas heterodoxas y aun á los Stos. Padres anteriores á los Concilios que pusieron término á las grandes disputas cristológicas de la iglesia oriental. El primer símil ó ejemplo, el de la mezcla del agua con el vino ó la leche, fué empleado por Sn. Gregorio Nisseno (cfr. Petau, Theologicorum Dogmatum, lib. I, c. 15, § 8, edic. Paris, 1650) : « Gregorius Nissenus ait humanam naturam ita commixtam esse divinae velut si aceti stilla in mare projecta huic admiscetur. » De este mismo ejemplo — que en la mente de su autor nada tenía de monofisita — abusaron después los eutiquianos y apollinaristas y, más tarde, los jacobitas. Teodoreto cita en sus Diálogos (Petau, ibidem), como del herege Eranistes, análogo símil : « Ut si mare guttam mellis capiat. » Y para más confirmar esta hipótesis nuestra sobre el sentido monofisita del ejemplo, encontrámoslo en Abenhazam (ob. cit., I, 53) atribuído á los jacobitas. En cambio, los tres símiles res-

tantes no es tan fácil determinar á cuál de las soluciones cristianas corresponden : si á la nestoriana ó á la católica y ortodoxa, consagrada por el concilio de Calcedonia. Abenhazam (ibidem), al tratar de los melquitas — que vale tanto como decir católicos —, dice que comparan la unión hipostática de las dos naturalezas en la persona de Cristo, con la del fuego y el metal en el hierro candente ó con la de la luz solar y la casa iluminada. Estos dos símiles fueron usados efectivamente por un ortodoxo, Sn. Euthimio (cfr. Petau, ob. cit., lib. IV, c. 14, § 5), en estos términos : « Quemadmodum si totus aër ignitus vel potius ignis esset ac tum ferri globulus immiteretur. » De donde podemos inferir que el símil citado por nuestro autor en último lugar — el de los rayos solares iluminando el vestido — puede tomarse ya como propio también de los melquitas ó católicos. Los otros dos — el del sello en la cera ó barro y el del aroma en la manzana — igual cabe atribuirlos á estos últimos que á los nestorianos, pues es muy difícil precisar, sin los vocablos técnicos de los teólogos y con la vaguedad subjetiva de los ejemplos, matices tan delicados como son los que separan á una de otra solución. Abenhazam (ibidem) no nos aclara esta duda, pues atribuye á los nestorianos el símil del agua y el aceite, perfectamente adaptable á la heregía de Nestorio, para quien la unión de las dos personas fué una mera conexión accidental (συνάφεια) ó inhabitación (ἐνοίκησις). Otros teólogos musulmanes que he podido consultar, ó nada dicen de estos símiles, como Abdalá El Truchimán, ó traen los mismos de nuestro autor, pero sin atribuirlos á las distintas sectas cristianas. Tal hace Xahrastani (ob. cit., 172) que los enumera en este orden : luz y cuerpo iluminado ; sello y cera ; espiritual y corporal ; vestido y cuerpo [evidentemente nestoriano] y agua y leche. Algazel (Ihía, edic. Cairo, 1312 hég., IV, 219), al tratar de la unión extática, atribuye á los cristianos, sin mencionar tampoco los nombres de sus sectas, tres soluciones del misterio de la unión hipostática : Cristo es Dios ; la humanidad se revistió de la divinidad ; ambas naturalezas se identificaron. Como se ve, la 1ª es la ortodoxa ; la 2ª la nestoriana ; y la tercera la eutiquiana ó monofisita.

4. Alcorán, IV, 156, 7 ; III, 48 ; XIX, 34. Sobre estos pasajes alcoránicos forjaron los exégetas y teólogos musulmanes una leyenda extravagante acerca del destino final de Jesús, cuyos precedentes remotos deben buscarse en las doctrinas gnósticas. Los cerintianos negaban la muerte del Cristo espiritual (πνευματικός) que, como tal, era impasible y abandonó á Jesús, á la persona material, en el momento de la pasión. Estos hereges y los basilidianos aseguraban también que Simón de Cirene, ó el apóstol Pedro, ú otro discípulo padeció y murió por Jesús cuya apariencia corpórea tomaron (cfr. Tixeront, ob. cit., 173, 195 y Sayous, ob. cit., 49). — Mahoma en los versos citados del Alcorán limitóse á decir que « los judíos creyeron falsamente crucificar y matar á Jesús, cuando realmente el que murió fué un hombre que se le parecía, y Jesús fué elevado hasta Dios ». La vaguedad del estilo alcoránico ha obligado á los exégetas á buscar textos más precisos en las Colecciones auténticas de tradiciones de Mahoma, que aclarasen aquella narración. Aljázin y Abulbaracat Anasafí (obs. cits., I, 412) consignan varias versiones tradicionales del hecho de la pasión : 1ª Jesús con diez y siete discípulos es sitiado por los judíos en su casa ; pero al entrar éstos, Dios da á los diez y siete la apariencia de Jesús ; burlados los judíos, amenázanles con matarlos á todos, si no deshacen aquel encantamiento ó si no denuncian á Jesús ; éste solicita y obtiene de uno de sus discípulos que se ofrezca á sustituirlo en su pasión y muerte, y los judíos lo crucifican creyendo que es Jesús, el cual, aquel mismo día, se sube al cielo. — 2ª Jesús y su madre son encarcelados por una tropa de judíos que quedan convertidos en monos y cerdos, en virtud de una simple oración de Jesús. Dios le avisa después, que los judíos siguen maquinando su muerte, y para evitarla, hace lo mismo que en la versión 1ª con uno de sus discípulos. — 3ª El discípulo hipócrita [Judas] se ofrece á los judíos para entregarles á Jesús ; mas, al penetrar en casa de éste, con el fin de realizar su intento, queda transformado exteriormente en Jesús ; llegan los judíos y lo crucifican. — 4ª Igual que la anterior, en su fin, aunque más pormenorizada con datos evangélicos (Matth., XXVI, 14, 15, 21, 34) : Anuncia Jesús á sus discípulos que uno de ellos le negará tres veces, antes que el gallo cante, y le venderá por unas monedas de plata. Los judíos que buscan á Jesús, cogen á Simón [Pedro] que le niega. Al amanecer, va un discípulo hipócrita á tratar con los judíos la entrega de Jesús, y termina la versión como en la 3ª. — 5ª Los judíos encarcelan á Jesús, pero Dios da la figura de éste al soldado que lo guarda, el cual es crucificado y muerto. — Abenhazam (ob. cit., I, 57-60) mejor informado de la narración evangélica, no se hace eco de todas estas patrañas tradicionales en el islam, y se concreta á justificar las palabras del Alcorán sobre la falsa muerte de Jesús por medio de una crítica mal intencionada de los textos evangélicos : las circunstancias que rodearon al hecho de la crucifixión son, según él, sospechosas de impostura, porque no fué presenciado por sus discípulos, que huyeron, ni por María Magdalena, que vió la escena de lejos, ni por personas fidedignas, etc. Y para hacer más verosímil la posibilidad de tamaña suplantación de la persona de Jesús, refiere Abenhazam la impostura, por él presenciada en Córdoba, cuando la falsa muerte del califa Hixem 2º. — El autor del Evangelio apócrifo de Sn. Bernabé (musulmán del siglo XV) dice que en el momento en que los judíos iban á prender á Jesús en el huerto de las Olivas, fué elevado hasta el tercer cielo por cuatro ángeles, Gabriel, Miguel, Rafael y Uriel. Añade que Dios hizo á Judas tan semejante á Jesús que, no sólo los judíos, sino hasta María y los apóstoles lo tomaron por tal, y así fué crucificado y muerto en lugar de Jesús (cfr. Fabricius, Codex apocryphus Nov. Testam., Hamburgi, 1719, t. III, p. 377). Este evangelio ha sido recientemente editado y traducido del italiano al inglés por Lonsdale y Laura Rag (The Gospel of Barnabas. Oxford, Clarendon Press, 1907). De este documento musulmán deben depender las innumerables piezas polémicas de los moriscos españoles que en los siglos XVI y XVII corrían redactadas en aljamiado y de las cuales se conservan algunos ejemplares en la B. N. de Madrid y en los fondos de Gayangos y P. Gil (cfr. Saavedra, ob. cit., 149). En todas ellas, efectivamente, se cuenta cómo los judíos mataron, en vez de Jesús, á otro sujeto que se le parecía. Acerca de la segunda venida de Jesús (παρουσία), los pormenores que da nuestro autor están inspirados por las tradiciones auténticas de Mahoma que se consignan en todos los Comentarios alcoránicos para aclarar los versículos arriba señalados. Hé aquí algunos de esos pormenores según Aljázin y Anasafi (obs. cits., I, 414 y 234), ampliados por Abenarabí el murciano (Mohadarat, Cairo, 1305 ; I, 143) : El fin de los tiempos irá precedido de largas y cruentas guerras en todo el mundo. Vendrá después el Antecristo y, pasados 40 días, bajará Jesús del cielo á Damasco, como guerrero y como juez ; buscará al Antecristo y lo matará ; romperá la cruz, matará al cerdo y suprimirá el impuesto que judíos y cristianos pagan para poder vivir en tierra musulmana ; desde aquel momento, declarará la guerra santa y obligará á todos á optar entre la muerte y el islam. Cuando ya esta religión sea la única en el universo, Jesús vivirá 40 años aún en la tierra, se casará y tendrá hijos y morirá siendo enterrado en Medina al lado de Mahoma. Muchos de estos pormenores, huelga decirlo, tienen sus precedentes en las tradiciones milenarias de los apocalipsis judío-cristianos y en la doctrina origenista de la αποκατάστασις ó restauración universal (cfr. Tixeront, ob. cit., 43, 93, 109, 155, 303, etc.). — Un autor musulmán, relativamente moderno (siglo XVII), Abeniyás el hanefita, consigna en su Badai azohur (Cairo, 1309 hég.) una extensa descripción de la parusia de Jesús (págs. 217-220) con elementos evidentes del Apocalipsis de Sn. Juan y alusiones mesiánicas de Isaías, sin citar, como es claro. Héla aquí en resumen : Bajará Jesús en Damasco, junto al alminar oriental de su mezquita mayor (de construcción cristiana, según Abenbatuta), á la cual entrará y tomará asiento en su púlpito. Divúlgase la noticia de su venida, y judíos, cristianos y musulmanes penetran en tropel para verlo y hacer la oración de la aurora, siendo él el oficiante y acompañado del Mahdí, especie de mesías temporal y guerrero que habrá penetrado por aquellos días en Damasco con su ejército para presentar la batalla contra el Antecristo. Este impostor, que aparecerá en Ispahán, tendrá 10 codos de estatura, un solo ojo (como el Cíclope de la fábula) y grabado en su frente el título de « infiel » que todos, de cerca y de lejos, podrán leer, con esta inscripción debajo : « Feliz el que le resistá y desgraciado el que le obedezca. » Se hará pasar por Dios, correrá el mundo predicando y matando á los buenos y conseguirá por fin juntar un ejército de más de un millón de secuaces con el cual caerá sobre Jerusalem y marchará á Damasco. Pero entonces, saldrán de esta ciudad Jesús y el Mahdí á su encuentro y en Lydda, cerca de Jafa, le presentarán la batalla destruyendo su ejército y matando al Antecristo Jesús en persona con su lanza. Muerto el Antecristo, Jesús reinará sobre toda la tierra, establecerá una sola religión, el islam, y desde aquel momento la justicia, la paz y la riqueza serán el patrimonio de todos los hombres, como en el principio del mundo : « El niño tendrá en su mano la serpiente y jugará con ella sin que le haga daño. El león irá en compañía de la oveja y no la devorará. El lobo irá junto con el cordero y no le dañará » (cfr. Isaías, XI, 6-9 y LXV, 25). Cuarenta años durará este reinado de la paz universal, tras los cuales Jesús se casará con una muger de Ascalón, que le dará dos hijos, hará la peregrinación á la Meca, visitará la tumba de Mahoma y allí enfermará de muerte siendo enterrado al lado de aquél. Poco después morirá también el Mahdí en Cufa y con él pasarán al cielo, sin las agonías de la muerte, todos los buenos. Desde aquel instante comenzarán para los malos sobre la tierra todas las calamidades. Dos serán las principales : la irrupción de Gog y Magog, y la Bestia apocalíptica, que otros tradicionistas hacen entrar en escena viviendo aun Jesús. Su retrato es horripilante: « Cabeza de toro, ojos de cerdo, orejas de elefante, pecho de león, cola de carnero, patas de camello, rostro de hombre, color de pantera, cuerpo cubierto de plumas y con dos alas como pájaro. Con su cabeza tocará las nubes y con sus patas la tierra. » El que la busque no la encontrará y el que de ella huya no se escapará. En sus manos tendrá la vara de Moisés y el sello de Salomón. Con este sello marcará á los buenos y malos. Y hecha esta última selección, saldrá el sol por occidente y con la fuerza de su calor matará á los hombres que todavía queden sobre la tierra.

5. Alcorán, V, 112-115. Al interpretar estos pasajes alcoránicos con el auxilio del evangelio, los musulmanes han hecho, del milagro evangélico de la multiplicación de los panes y peces en el desierto, otro distinto en sus maravillosas y ridículas circunstancias, aunque análogo á aquél y á la cena eucarística. Jesús, á ruegos de los apóstoles, consigue de Dios que descienda del cielo entre nubes una mesa ó mantel ó plato (que en esto discrepan las tradiciones que narran el hecho) en el cual aparece un pez asado y aderezado convenientemente con vinagre, sal, olivas, dátiles, etc. y cinco panes. Jesús manda al pez que se levante, y éste obedece á su imperio, aterrando á los apóstoles y discípulos con sus inesperados movimientos y con el girar de sus orbitas. No permiten probarlo, aun después de volver el pez á su anterior estado. Entonces Jesús llama á los pobres, enfermos, ciegos, etc. (alusión evidente á la parábola de la invitación al banquete), los cuales, en número de 1300 se sacian con tan escasos víveres. (Vide Badai azohur de Abeniyás, edic. Cairo, 1309 hég., pág. 213-215.) Cfr. Aljázin, ob. cit., I, 500, que ofrece variantes de interés en la descripción de la escena, más evangélica todavía.

6. Alude al milagro de Moisés que narra el Exodo (VII, 10-12), aunque añadiendo la circunstancia de los cables convertidos en serpientes por los magos de Faraón. (Vide Badai azohur, 143-4).

7. Aunque el Alcorán no consigna milagros de Mahoma, las tradiciones relativas á su vida abundan en prodigios sin cuento. Estas tradiciones ó hadizes fueron forjadas desde muy temprano para poder defender la superioridad de Mahoma sobre Jesús. Por eso, algunos de esos milagros son imitación flagrante de los evangélicos (multiplicación de alimentos, de líquidos, profecías ó vaticinios, etc.). Quedaba así demostrado, con tales hadizes, que Mahoma no era inferior á Jesús por la calidad de sus prodigioss. Además le superaba por la cantidad. Baste decir que Algazel, teólogo poco sospechoso de credulidad, llena dos páginas in folio de su Ihía, (edic. Cairo, 1312 hég., II, 256-7) con la mera enumeración de algunos de esos milagros. Y su comentarista Sayid Mortada (Ithaf VII, 191-5) añade á este catálogo otro que ocupa cinco pgs. de igual tamaño. Mas, no contentos con esto, los teólogos echaron mano de otro medio probatorio de la divina misión de Mahoma: el Alcorán, monumento de la inspiración sobrenatural de su autor por su insuperable perfección literaria (cfr. Goldziher, Influences chrétiennes dans la littérature religieuse de l'Islam, apud Rev. d'hist. des Rel., XVIII, 180).

8. Mahoma reconoció de buen grado en el Alcorán (III, 40-43; LXVI, 12; XXI, 91; XIX, 16-24) el nacimiento milagroso, sobrenatural, de Jesús. Sin embargo, negó — como hemos visto — su filiación divina. Para salvar esta inconsecuencia del Profeta, los comentaristas y teólogos musulmanes trataron, desde muy antiguo, de quitar valor á aquella confesión del Alcorán, sobre el carácter sobrenatural de la concepción virginal de Jesús. Wahb Benmonábih, tradicionista del siglo II° de la hégira y muy enterado de la literatura cristiana apócrifa, hácese eco de un episodio, algo análogo á los consignados en el Pseudo-Mateo, c. X, acerca de las dudas de José sobre la preñez de María. He aquí una síntesis de este relato, según Aljázin, ob. cit., III, 218: José (al cual se le supone primo de María, no esposo) enterado, antes que nadie, de la preñez de María, concibe sospechas sobre su virtud, á las cuales se resiste á dar crédito. Al fin decídese á interrogarla en esta forma: « ¿ Germinará la semilla sin sembrarla ? Nacerá el árbol sin riego? Puede haber hijo sin padre? » A lo que María responde : « Dios puede hacerlo : creó la semilla y el árbol, al principio del mundo, sin sembrar ni regar ; creó á Adán y Eva sin padre ni madre. » En esta contestación de María encontramos ya el germen de la respuesta que nuestro autor da á los cristianos que quieren fundar la divinidad de Jesús en su concepción milagrosa. Antes que en él la encontramos en Abdala el Truchimán (ob. cit. 33), redactada en forma semejante : « Si decís que Jesús es Dios porque nació milagrosamente sin padre, responderé que no es ese nacimiento más maravilloso que la creación de Adán sin padre ni madre..... ¿ Porqué pues no hacéis Dios á Adán ?» Pero donde únicamente hemos encontrado la ingeniosa clasificación que nuestro autor da de los modos de la generación humana, es en el autor, ya citado, Abeniyás el Hanefita, que por cierto debió ser contemporáneo suyo. Dice así (ob. cit., 211) : « Dicen los sabios que Dios creó á Adán sin padre ni madre ; á Eva, de padre sin madre ; al resto de las criaturas, de padre y madre. Mas queriendo completar los cuatro elementos [de la clasificación], creó á Jesús sin padre. »

NOTAS

AO CANCIONERO INÉDITO

(V. Vol. XVI, pp. 295-333)

Por ora só posso redigir duas. Ambas se referem á Segunda Parte e a composições, apresentadas como anónimas, sem rubrica alguma; marcadas, de mais a mais, de asterisco, como se fossem inéditas. São os nos 110 e 112 [1].

Se as apparencias do verso inicial não me enganam, conheço-as.

1°) O quan fuera de razon (f. 155 v.) parece ser o Mote:

> Ved quan fuera de razon
> es la ley de los amores:
> son los ojos malhechores —
> y págalo el corazon!

Ou, com ligeiras modificações:

> Ved quan fuera de razon
> va la ley de amadores:
> ser los ojos causadores
> y que pene el corazon.

A volta diz:

> Que si el corazon pudiera > miraros, y se engañara,

---

1. Vid. Vol. XVI, p. 326.

que muriera, que penara
su justo pago le fuera!
Mas pues que los ojos son de tanto mal causadores, ved si es fuerza de razon, siendo ellos los malhechores, que lo pague el corazon!

O sétimo verso julgo deveria ser igual ao primeiro do tema: fuera, e não fuerza.

De onde conheço essa composição sobre culpas e penas dos olhos e do coração, assunto trovadoresco, debatido innúmeras vezes tanto no período galego-português como no palaciano da segunda época lírica? De várias obras coevas. Em primeiro lugar do Inferno de amor de Garci-Sanchez de Badajoz [1], no qual, como é sabido, os mais afamados poetas da Côrte dos Reis Católicos (e seus predecessores) recitam cantigas da sua propria lavra, acolhidas e enssoadas pelos músicos de então. Na estrofe 16ª é que surge o apaixonado Cartagena [2] com tres fragmentos de vilancetes e cantigas, caso eu comprenda bem os dizeres seguintes [3]:

Vi venir á Cartagena
diziendo con pena fuerte:
Ved que tanto amor condena que aun no me pudo la muerte libertar de su cadena.
Y dezia con pasion:
Para mi ouo conclusion,
mas no para mis dolores:

3. Não encontrei por ora Ved que tanto amor condena. Nem tão pouco Para mi hovo conclusion.

ved quan fuera de razon
va la ley de los amores :
ser los ojos causadores
y que pene el coraçon [1].

Se acerto na interpretação é preciso pôr ponto depois de dolores. O que se segue é citação independente.

A confirmação de que a trova Ved quan fuera de razon estava muito em voga, encontra-se no Jogo de Naipes, ideado por Florencia Pinar. Ahi o conceito inicial figura entre os quarenta e cinco cantares [2] que foram sorteados entre as damas da côrte (juntamente com uma arvore, uma ave e um proverbio, simbólico bem se vê). A décima aludida diz :

Vós tomarés un cipres, dama, de seruicios digna ;
y será la galondrina
ell aue que tomarés :
y porque haga mencion de lo que aueys de cantar
y ha de ser sin dilatar ;
Ved quan fuera de razon ;
y el refran que se os presenta que la letra con sangre entra (13ª) [3].

Claro está que leio : ha de ser sin dilatar : Ved, etc.

Outra confirmação, de mais peso ainda, é a divulgação, como Motete, em Pliegos sueltos, góticos. No Catálogo que acompanha o seu Romancero General [4], Duran registou um que viu e que já fôra aproveitado anteriormente, por Böhl de Faber [5] :

1. É de doze versos. Quasi todas as restantes são de onze. A 20ª e a 35ª só constam de dez ; a 25ª, apenas de nove. O mesmo vale da 2ª entre as que foram acrescentadas no Cancioneiro de 1527.

2. Pena é não haver entrado no Cancionero Musical, publicado por Barbieri.

Sin l. ni a. (en 4° gót. á 2 colum. e 4 fojas, viñeta) contiene :

¶ Coplas en diálogo que dice : Llamábalo la doncella.
¶ Romance que dice : Cuando el ciego Dios de amor.
¶ Villancico que dice : Mientre mas mal me trateis.
¶ Lamentacion de amor en coplas que dicen : Resuenen mis alaridos.
¶ Motete en una copla que dice : Ved cuan fuera de razon.

Salvá [1] conheceu outro exemplar da mesma folha volante. Ou então, de outra edição anterior, no caso de as variantes de letras e na redacção do título e do Indice significarem alguma cousa :

Coplas de vna dama y un pastor sobre vn villancico que dize llamaua le la donçella y dixo el vil al ganado tengo de yr. Nueuamente compuestas : cõ vn Romance que dize quãdo el ciego dios de amor : y otro villancico que dize quanto mas mal me tratays.

S. l. n. a (hácia el 1530), 4° let. got. Viñeta de madera. — 4 hojas sin fol. con la sign. a, contiene :

¶ Coplas que dicen : Llamábale la donzella.
¶ Romance que dice : Cuando el ciego dios de amor.
¶ Villancico con su glosa, que dice : Mientre mas mal me tratais.
¶ Lamentacion de amor, que dice Resuenen mis alaridos.
¶ Motete que dice : Ved cuan fuera de razon.

Numa nota do editor somos informados de que essas coplas de Llamaba são diversas das de Alcaudete, mais numerosas e melhores [2]. O romance foi acolhido na preciosa compilação de Até a data do Catálogo, creio que de facto assim seria. Posteriormente o Motete foi impresso no tomo IV do Ensayo [3], de onde o tresladei. Já o deixei exposto ha anos, relevando o curioso erro de Gallardo, que a vindicou, assim como a Lamentacion, para Pedro de Lerma [4]. Nada mais sei por ora.

2°) A se de entender assy (f. 156). No rubric whatever. — Four verses only; evidently a fragment.

Estou com curiosidade de saber quaes dos versos que vou tresladar constituem o fragmento indicado. Por ventura o seu teor seja o seguinte :

Hase de entender assi :
que desque os di mi cuidado
a quantas huve mirado
olvidé y aborresci.

Ou, se o verso catalogado serve de epigrafe :

que yo fuy enamorado,
pero, despues que la vi,
olvidé y aborresci
a quantas hove mirado ?

imprimiram-se em Pliegos descritos por Duran (55 e 92), Salvá (23), Gallardo (279) e Porebowicz (n° 91). Este último reproduziu-as no seu ensaio sobre Una colección de pliegos sueltos de Granada existente en la Biblioteca Universitaria de Cracovia (p. 62-68). Figuram tambem no Cancionero de Nágera de 1552, f. 136, segundo F. Wolf, na ed. alemã de Ticknor (II, 537). Cfr. Prager Sammlung, p. 115. As voltas de Alonso de Alcaudete principiam Llamabalo : di, perdido (segundo Salvá) ou Llamabalo : ven querido (segundo Boehl e Duran (que talvez os retocasse). As de Diego de Armenta : Llamalo de una ventana. Além d'isso ha outras espiritualmente feitas : Llama Dios al pecador (Salvá, n° 85). Devo acrescentar ainda que no Ensayo (nos 278 e 279) ele è chamado Alonso Armenta, vecino de la ciudad de Loja. Talvez houvesse confusão com Alcaudete.

Visto não poder ser a quintilha inteira:

Yo vivia enamorado,
y en el punto en que la vi,
tanto suyo me senti que olvidé y desconoci todas quantas he mirado.

Ocupei-me outr'ora d'este trecho, que de facto é apenas uma parcela de uma composição maior de Juan Alvarez Gato. Descosido d'ela foi, porém, atribuido primeiro a Garci-Sanchez de Badajoz, e posteriormente a Luis de Camões, sendo considerado ambas as vezes como improviso. Os dois artiguinhos que lhe dediquei [1], passaram desatendidos, razão por que peço venia para os reproduzir aqui [2].

Numas notas, relativas a Garci-Sanchez de Badajoz, dizia eu (em 1897) [3] baseando-me no Cancionero de Nagera [4]:

« O mote Ame y aborresci foi escripto por Garci-Sanchez, estando louco, em uma parede, acompanhado do entendimento:

Hase d'entender assi:
que yo fuy enamorado,
pero despues que la vi
olvidé y aborrescí
a quantas hove mirado.

Apesar d'isso, foi atribuido a Camões num ms. do sec. XVII [5] e introduzido pelo Visconde de Juromenha e Th. Braga nas edições modernas do grande Lusitano [1], de onde passou tambem para a versão de Wilhelm Storck [2], Foi a signataria d'estas linhas que restituiu o pequeno improviso ao seu verdadeiro auctor [3] ».

Um lustro depois, quando o Cancioneiro de Alvarez Gato era patenteado aos curiosos, dirigi ao editor, o Exmo. Snr. Cotarelo, uma carta em que me retratava e corregia do modo seguinte [4] :

« Ha uns trinta anos que corre mundo, entre as deliciosas Redondilhas de Luis de Camões, uma pequena cantiga hespanhola. E diz :

Intendimento a este verso : Olvidé y avorescy.
Ha se de entender assi :
Que desque os di mi cuidado.
a quantas uve mirado olvidé y avorescy.

O Visconde de Juromenha — pois foi esse benemerito quem a publicou como inédita na sua edição das Obras do Poeta — colhera-a num Cancioneiro português manuscrito, de fins do sec. XVI, ou princípios do seguinte, com outros muitos e preciosos textos camonianos [5].

Nessa Miscellánea poética, por mim descripta e explorada na Zeitschrift, a composição trazia a rubrica O Camoes de repente a este verso [6]. E com efeicto, a pequena trova tem todo o caracter de um improviso. Mas na realidade não ha tal.

Já quando Morel-Fatio tornára conhecido o Cancionero Gene-

Segundo o coleccionador, Estévam G. de Nágera, o pobre do Garci-Sanchez enlouquecido, pusera numa parede o Mote Amé y aborresci. Preguntou-lhe a sua amiga o que queria dizer? E respondeu :

> Ha se dentender assi :
> que yo fui enamorado,
> pero despues que la vi
> olvidé y aborresci
> a quantas hove mirado.

Esta versão mais completa andava, ao que parece, em outros livros de versos da época e em colecções de anecdotas, chistes e ditos agudos. Pelo menos, em mais um Cancioneiro manuscrito sei eu que figura [2].

Não pouco desvanecida com minha esperteza fui divulgando a noticia, imaginando dar o seu ao seu dono. Primeiramente, ao falar da tradução magistral das poesias de Camões, por Wilhelm Storck [3]. Mais tarde, quando me ocupei de Garci-Sanchez [4].

Hoje sei que não havia motivo para cantar a glória. O ouro que fiz circular era ouro-mouro. Nem de Camões, nem do doido de Badajoz. Temos de retroceder mais alguns decénios.

Um belo dia, ainda não ha muito, encontrei num dos meus freqüentes passeios líricos através dos Cancioneiros, o mote Olvide y desconosci e a volta correspondente. Onde? No meio de uma poesia extensa do Cancionero General de 1511 [5], bastante minha

O resto já não é preciso dizê-lo. Mas como agora o Senhor Cotarelo se lembrou de publicar o Cancioneiro do suavemente irónico amador da Condessa de Medina, sempre direi da minha justiça, para que ninguem possa tirar á formiga laboriosíssima a satisfacção de haver contribuido com mais este grãozinho de areia para a construcção da história da lírica peninsular. Ficaremos por aqui? Ou haverá antes de Juan Alvarez Gato outro amador don-juanesco, que dissesse as mesmas, um tanto insolentes, galanterias ás suas Don-Anas? Talvez.

Basta juntar como nota final a indicação que as trovas de Juan Alvarez a un romero tollido que iba á pedir limosna en casa de una señora á quien él servia, ocorrem tambem no Cancionero Rennert [2], entraram na Antologia [3], e figuram naturalmente no Cancioneiro privativo [4] de J. A. Gato.

THE VALENCIAN BIBLE OF 1478

Among the books which afford us the earliest accounts of the introduction of printing to the Pyrenean peninsula, the Biblia Valenciana, printed in 1478, is of peculiar interest. Not that it can claim precedence as the first book printed in Spain. Even at Valencia it was preceded by a series of earlier printed works, namely those printed by Lambert Palmart in his oldest Roman type. Of these the Comprehensorium Johannis, completed the 23rd of February 1475, is the earliest, showing a date and a detailed colophon. But to this same series belongs the Obres e trobes en labor de la Verge Maria, hymns in praise of the Virgin, as they were performed in one of the singing tournaments customary at this period. This festival concluded on February 11th 1474, and it has been reasonably inferred that the poems were printed shortly after its close. Therefore the Obres e trobes is generally believed to be the earliest typographical production of Spain. Personally I am inclined to doubt the accuracy of this opinion, not that the art of printing was first introduced to Valencia at a later dater but that it was known and practised there at an earlier period. It seems highly improbable to me that such an innovation, as was the art of printing for that age, should have made its first public appearance with such a chance production. Generally speaking, printing was regarded as belonging to the arts and sciences and the greater number of early printers either had acquired or had received the magister title from some university. The first printer was certainly called to Spain by a German merchant but assuredly not for the purpose of preserving the meretricious productions of the Valencian troubadours as monumentum aere perennius. I am far more inclined to give the Aristoteles imprints, which Palmart likewise printed in his earliest type, the place as his first issues; perhaps it would be possible to prove this hypothesis by comparing the condition of the type did not the extreme rarity of these imprints make their collection in one place for comparison all but impossible. At all events the time of the introduction of printing to Valencia may be fixed as not later than 1473.

Before the completion of the Valencian Bible printing presses were to be found not only in Valencia but in other Spanish cities. The Manipulus curatorum, printed at Saragossa by Mathew of Flanders bears the date of October 15th 1475, the Sacramental, printed by the Spanish « tres compañeros », that of August, 1st 1477, and in the same year, perhaps even earlier, the Repertorium super Abbatem by Diaz de Montalvo was printed there. Even at Valencia, besides Palmart, a second printer, Alfonso Fernandez de Cordoba, made his appearance in 1477 with the Confessionale by Antoninus de Florentia. Nevertheless of all these books not one can compare as an historic document with the Valencian Bible. The reason may be found in the unusually detailed information which the printers note gives about its history. There in it is related that the origin of the publication is to be found in a manuscript in the possession of the noble knight Berenguer Vivez de Boil, which itself was a copy of the translation of the Holy Scriptures made by Bonifacio Ferrer, brother of St. Vicente Ferrer, in the monastery of Porta Celi near Valencia; that recently this translation had been revised and corrected by the inquisitor of Valencia and doctor of divinity Jaume Borrell; it was now printed at the expense of the worthy merchant Philipp Vizlant from Jsny in Upper Germany by Master Alfonso Fernandez de Cordoba of the kingdom of Castile and Master Lambert Palmart, M. A., a German; that the printing was begun in the month of February 1477 and was finished in the month of March 1478.

There was a few other Spanish books and some rare incunabula printed elsewhere, containing similar detailed notices about the history of their origin, but generally speaking, instances of such accuracy and minuteness in the compilation of a colophon are extremely scarce. Therefore one must not be too surprised if a group of scholars interested in the history of Spanish typography, whose preconceived ideas did not agree with the facts stated in the colophon of the Valencian Bible, had serious doubts about their accuracy, on account of this very abundance of detail. The original had been lost for more than a century and so the idea might easily find credence that it had never existed and that the detailed account of the colophon was but a skilful forgery by persons desirous of proving by any means, however illicit, the primacy of Valencia in the history of the printers' art in Spain.

Those investigators who have studied impartially the history of Spanish typography cannot seriously doubt the fact that a printed translation of the Bible in the Valencian idiom once existed and that it contained the detailed account as by tradition. Though the learned bibliographers of the Carthusian order, Petreius, Niraeus, Bzovius, though Nic. Antonio and other historiographers of Spanish literature know nothing about this Bible, we find mention of the translation of Bonifacio Ferrer from the XVth century downwards, nor are proofs of the existence of Jaume or Jaime Borrell wanting. Alfonso Fernandez de Cordoba and Lambert Palmart are both known as Valencian printers and were there no proof of the collaboration of these two, the universality of the practice among colleagues of the printers craft is established by its recurrence in many other times and places.

Of all the names contained in the colophon that of Philipp Vizlandt was the most difficult to explain. The fact in itself that a foreign merchant figured as a publisher of Spanish books in Spain is not necessarily surprising. The widely known first edition of the Chronicle of Diego de Valera printed in Sevilla under the patronage of the king and queen of Spain, contains a passage in enthusiastic praise of the merits of the Germans and their assistance in the spread of the art of typography, because a German, Michael Dachauer, had born the expense of the publication of this almost official work. Until recently as little was known about Philipp Vizlandt as is now known of the highly extolled Michael Dachauer. Only the researches made by Sr. J. E. Serrano y Morales in the libraries and archives of Valencia have resulted in discoveries which raise the fame of the Vizlandt family in the history of Spanish typography far above that of any of their German countrymen. These documents have revealed that not Philipp Vizlandt but his elder brother Jacques who died in 1475, was the first to employ printers in Spain and, in all probability caused them to first settle in Valencia.

The Valencian Bible, the only printed book with a colophon mentioning the Vizlandt name is the only link between the manuscripts in the archives of Valencia and the early Valencian imprints; it has led to the discovery of documentary evidence, and it alone, after the lapse of centuries, has enabled the establishment of an interesting historical fact in honour of the German name. This proves the great importance which the first of all Spanish Bibles has for the early history of printing in Spain and, for this reason, it was of the utmost consequence that all doubts concerning the reliability of the tradition about the Valencian Bible should be removed.

How could such doubts arise? Primarily from the fact that the Valencian Bible as a book hardly survived the end of the XVth century. It is more than 300 years since the eye has seen a copy of the Valencian Bible nor has it ever been possible for a bibliographer to describe the book from his own examination. Strictly speaking, our knowledge of the existence of a Bible printed in the Valencian dialect is, or until half a century ago was, founded on a statement couched indeed in the most credible form and contained in a manuscript chronicle of the XVIIth century but which disappeared completely a century ago. Therefore it is not surprising that sceptical investigators or those already of contrary opinion were disposed to regard the existence of a Valencian Bible of 1478 as entirely fabulous and impartial scholars have been anxious to discover the proofs of its existence and the reason of its disappearance.

It has not been possible to discover any further bibliographical proof. No library catalogue no bookseller's advertisement, no inventory of the XVth or XVIth century has been found mentioning the Valencian Bible. On the other hand occasional literary references, contemporaneous and of a later period, exist which afford reasons for the belief in its former existence. A learned Spanish scholar, Juan Maria Guardia, engaged in literary research in Paris, discovered in 1860 in the « Bibliothèque Mazarine » an early printed copy of the Psalterium in the Valencian idiom, with its text preceded by the remarkable heading : « En nom de nostre senyor e dela humil verge Maria mare sua. Comença lo psaltiri tret dela blibia destampa : la quall es estada empremptada en la ciutat de Valencia : e fon corregida vista e regoneguda per lo reverend mestre Jacme borrell mestre en sacra theologia del orde de pricadors e inquisidor en lo regne de Valencia e daltres segons en aquella se conte ». A reproduction of this interesting first page may be found in my Tipografia Iberica, plate VII No. 14. In my opinion there can be no doubt that the Psalterium was printed at Barcelona by Nicolaus Spindeler, about 1480. The assertion in unmistakeable terms of its having been based on a Valencian Bible revised by the inquisitor Jacme (or Jaume) Borrell is the more credible on account of the short interval between the publication of the Bible and the production of the Psalterium. It likewise proves that the systematic persecution of the translations of the Bible in the vernacular by the Inquisition had not begun at the time of the printing of the Psalterium, otherwise, for merely practical reasons, the printer would not have ventured to adduce the authority of Jacme Borrell for the revision of the Valencian

Bible. The statements made in the Psalterium agree in all details with that which the colophon of the Bible makes about the correction of the text — the Psalterium says most correctly : segons en aquella se conte, so as it is contained in the same — it is hardly possible to doubt the connection existing between both Catalan printings.

The Psalterium was printed a second time in the XVth century in a Valencian translation but this was not that of Bonifacio Ferrer and neither he nor the Valencian Bible is mentioned on this occasion. This new translation is due to Juan Ruiz de Corella, well known as the translator of the Vita Christi by Ludolfus de Saxonia, the Carthusian. He published the Psalterium with his full name at Venice, with the assistance of a priest of Valencia, Juan Ferrando de Guivara. These facts seem to prove that even then the persecution, which destroyed all copies of the Valencian Bible can hardly have begun.

A few years later, in 1497, the Inquisition was persecuting with fanatical energy the religious writings of the Jews and Moors together with the translations of the Bible in the vernacular idioms of the peninsula. An order issued by the Inquisition of Valencia on the 2nd of May 1498 describes the dangers to which the Catholic faith is exposed by the circulating translations of the Bible and Psalter in the vulgar tongue — en pla — and summons all true believers under penalty of the greater excommunication to deliver up all existing copies to be burnt. Although a protest was made by the ecclesiastical and secular authorities of the kingdom of Valencia against the execution of this command, the Inquisition performed its work only too thoroughly ; in all Spain not one copy of the Holy Scriptures in the vernacular survived and even abroad only a single copy of the Valencian Psalterium found refuge.

If this result is to be attributed entirely to the zeal of the Inquisition or if some copies may not have escaped destruction only to perish later is uncertain when we come to consider the evidence for the existence of the Bible in the following centuries.

Of course no one might venture to print the Bible in the vernacular on Spanish territory in the XVIth century. But those native champions of Reformation principles in Spain could and did publish abroad translations of the Holy Scriptures in the idioms of the Pyrenean peninsula. In 1553 a Spanish Bible was printed anonymously in Italy which vindicates its translation in the language of Castile by the literal plea that a translation of the Bible had already been published in the Valencian dialect. Still more distinct is the reference to the old Valencian Bible in the preface of the Spanish translation published at Amsterdam in 1602 by Cipriano de Valera who himself declares to have seen : la biblia en lengua valenciana con licencia de los inquisidores, a cuya traslacion asistió S. Vicente Ferrer, que ha mas de ciento y tantos años que se imprimió en folio en papel real. This passage refers doubtless to the edition of 1478 and its wording leads us to infer with certainty that a copy of the venerable book was still extant at the beginning of the XVIIth century.

The most detailed statements in reference to the Valencian Bible, those to whom we owe chiefly our knowledge about the book, were to be found in a work which in its whole extent has never been published but has become known to a long series of scholars and bibliographers who with more or less accuracy transcribed the items from each other. The publications of these men were the only source available for the bibliography of the Valencian Bible of 1478.

About the year 1630 Pater Juan Bautista Civera, a Carthusian monk, wrote the history of the monastery of Porta Celi near Valencia, including biographies of all the distinguished inmates of his cloister in the three centuries preceding. It is but natural that the life of Bonifacio Ferrer is described at length as he had been not only superior of the monastery and general of the whole order and distinguished for his literary atteinments but had also been the friend and counsellor of Pope Benedict XIII during the quarrels of the Papal Schism. It is astonishing that Civera in his detailed biography make not the slightest reference to a translation of the Bible in the Valencian idiom. So completely had the Inquisition done its work that even in the place where Bonifacio Ferrer had lived and laboured. no literary trace, no oral tradition recalled its memory. The astonishment of P. Civera is therefore conceiveable when, in the month of October 1645, a priest of Valencia laid before him the printed evidence of the existence of this translation. We quote this passage from the appendix of the chronicle with the words of P. Civera himself ; he writes : « El año pasado de 1645 por el mes de Octubre llegaron a mis manos quatro hojas de papel de marca mayor que me envio un clerigo de Valencia diziendo las avia hallado entre otros papeles viejos en el archivo de la seu, y eran las ultimas de una Biblia escrita en lengua Valenciana vertida de la latina por el dicho p. d. Bonifacio y inpresa en Valencia el año 1478. Espanteme mucho quando tal vi : porque nadie de quantos del trataron (y fueron muchos) semejante cosa avia dicho por no aver llegado a su noticia... y por ser eso cosa tan nueva como ya dixe, me ha parecido encaxar aqui la ultima hoja, porque en ella se vera la llaneza del lenguaje valenciano de aquel tiempo, la propiedad de la version, y la verdad de que hizo esta obra estando de espacio en esta nuestra casa ». These words of P. Civera have saved to posterity the only trace left of the Valencian Bible of 1478. Although of the four leaves which a happy circumstance had placed in his hands he saved but one, guarding against its loss by stitching it fast in the manuscript of his chronicle, he thereby ensured for his own manuscript a far greater celebrity and longer life than that which might be predicted for it as a chronicle of the monastery. Spanish scholars interested in the literary history of Valencia and afterwards bibliographers and historians of Spanish typography have referred over and over again to the manuscript of P. Civera's chronicle when speaking of the Valencian Bible of 1478 and the colophon of the Bible has been copied by more than one while inspecting the library of Porta Celi. Fr. Josef Rodriguez de Castro gave in his Biblioteca Española, Madrid 1781, the text of the whole colophon which the Royal Librarian Francisco Asensio had copied from the original in the monastery of Porta Celi. Another transcript was made by Joaquin Lorenzo Villanueva and published in his polemic treatise : De la leccion de la sagrada escritura en lenguas vulgares, Valencia, 1791. A third transcript, apparently the most exact of all, was made from the original by Gregorio Mayans, who included it in a letter addressed to Gerard Meermans, dated Oliva, X Kal. Majas 1758. It was first published ten years ago by J. E. Serrano y Morales in his Reseña historica de las imprentas en Valencia, Valencia, 1898-99. The last writer to mention the Anales de Porta Celi, whose description of Civera's manuscript although not founded on his own personal investigation is at least based on the ocular inspection of another, is Francisco Mendez whose Tipografia Española was published at Madrid in 1804.

When, after the cessation of the political disturbances which began at the close of the XVIIIth and lasted during the first two decennaries of the XIXth century, literary research resumed its activity, the manuscript of P. Civera had disappeared from the monastery of Porta Celi and no information was forthcoming regarding its resting place. So all succeeding bibliographers up to the present day have been compelled to take their information at second hand and to repeat the scanty details transmitted by their older predecessors. The most deplorable part of the affair was that the scholars of the XVIIIth century were unaccustomed to that conscientiousness and accuracy in textual transcription which modern bibliography demands, especially in dealing with early productions of typographical art. For instance not one of the three persons who had copied the colophon of the Bible from the original contained in Civera's manuscript had thought it necessary to state if the text were printed in Gothic or Roman type, if in one or several varieties of either, if in lines across the page or in columns, whether with or without ornamental initials, etc. All three transcriptions differed slightly from each other so that it became absolutely necessary to apply the methods of conjectural criticism in order to discover the true wording of this precious document as exactly as possible. Mariano Aguiló, the well known bibliographer and historian of Catalan literature, made the greatest efforts to discover the lost manuscript. The first article in his Catalogo de obras en lengua catalana desde 1474 hasta el presente (up to the present time only 17 sheets of this work have been printed, for private circulation only) is devoted to the Valencian Bible of 1478 and therein he is forced to confess that at the present day nothing is known of this priceless manuscript but the sad certainty of its complete destruction.

For about a century scholars have lamented the loss of the manuscript of the Anales de Porta Celi more for the sake of the fragment of the Valencian Bible therein contained than for the historical value of the work itself. Now an announcement by the well known antiquarian book dealer, Mr. Karl W. Hiersemann of Leipzig brings the joyful surprise for those interested circles of scholars and bibliophiles that Civera's manuscript has been discovered after long years of neglect among the rubbish in the garret of a Spanish mansion from whence it has found its way into the hands of this enterprising bookdealer. A friendly destiny has fortunately preserved the manuscript from serious damage and the Bible leaf that venerable relic of early Spanish printing is to be seen, safe and sound, in the place where the ancient visitors of the library of Porta Celi viewed it. It bears the numbers 362 and 363 among the pages of the manuscript. I am indebted to the kindness of Mr. Hiersemann for a very good photographic reproduction of both sides of the leaf in the same size as the original. It is with great delight and satisfaction that I take advantage of the occasion to define those results which an examination of this leaf has for the history of typography in Spain.

First of all it must be noticed that all the transcriptions of the colophon as well as all the attempts to ascertain its exact wording by means of conjectural criticism fail to agree perfectly with the original. The colophon is printed on the reverse side of the last leaf under 19 text lines, indented on both sides, so that it occupies the middle part of the lower half of the page. The first two lines are not composed of capital letters as might be inferred from the transcriptions but of large and heavy black-letter.

The exact bibliographical transcript of the colophon is as follows:

Gracies infinides ſien fetes al omnipotēt deu, | e ſenyor noſtre, || Jesu crist: e ala humil, | e sacratissima verge maria mare sua. Acaba la | biblia molt vera, e catholica: treta de vna biblia del noble mossen berē- | guer viues de boil caualler: la qual fon trelladada de aquella propria que | fon arromançada en lo moneſtir de portaceli de lengua latina en la no- | stra valenciana per lo molt reuerend micer bonifaci ferrer doctor en ca || ſcun dret, e en facultat de ſacra theologia: e don de tota la Cartoxa: ger | ma del benauenturat sanct vicent ferrer de orde de pricadors: en la qual | translacio forē, e altres ſingulars homēs de sciencia. E ara derreramēt | aquesta es stada diligentment corregida, vista, e regoneguda per lo reue | rēd mestre jaume borrell mestre en ſacra theologia del orde de pricadors: | e inquisidor en regne de valēcia: Es stada empremptada en la ciutat de | valencia a despeses del magnifich en philip vizlant mercader dela vila de | jſne de alta Alamāya: per mestre Alfonso fernādez de Cordoua del Reg- | de Castella, e per mestre lambert palomar alamāy mestre en arts: comēçada en lo mes de febrer del any mil quatrecents setāta set: e acabada | en lo mes de Març del any Mil. CCCCLXXVIII. |

The divergencies from the text in the different versions given by former bibliographers do not affect the meaning with one noticeable exception. The most trustworthy transcription, that of Gregorio Mayans, had in the 10th line the reading: e altres seglars homēs de sciencia, that is to say, it asserted that learned laymen had assisted in the work of the translation of the Bible, in itself a somewhat striking assertion. This version proves to be erroneous; the printed text says clearly : singulars homens de sciencia, i. e. learned men of prominence, and there can be no doubt that learned clergymen are meant.

It has already been said that two different kinds of type were used and it scarcely need be observed that both were blackletter. These types are of the greatest interest in the solution of questions connected with the history of typography. Only recently a Spanish scholar ventured to observe that Lambert Palmart's activity in Valencia had been but a short episode of no importance and in support of his assertion hinted that Palmarts' Roman type had been imitated by scarcely any Spanish printer while the Gothic letters which he claims to have been the invention and exclusive possession of Alfonso Fernandez de Cordoba had spread triumphantly over the whole Iberian peninsula.

Against this hypothesis we may now place the Valencian Bible, printed in black letter and as the colophon says, with the assistance of this same Lambert Palmart. Remembering the fact that the man who bore the expense of the impression was a countryman of Palmart and that documents previous to 1477 bear witness that Palmart already had printed for the Vizlandts, we may be sure that the German printer's share in the work was not a trifling one, notwithstanding that his name appears in the colophon in the second place, that of Alfonso Fernandez de Cordoba occurring before it. The family name of Fernandez de Cordoba is a most common one and, in connection with the Christian name of Alfonso, is so frequently met with in documents of this period that it is extremely difficult to discriminate persons of this name with any certainty. The conjecture of Sr. Sanpere, that the printer Alfonso Fernandez de Cordoba was identical with the calligrapher and illuminator of the same name who was employed from 1456 at the court of Alfonso II at Naples, is in itself a most tempting one. (Revista de bibliografia catalana. No.

7. p. 128.) The only objection is that the illuminator A. F. de Cordoba was occupied at Naples for too long a time — until 1483 according to Sr. Sanpere's own statement — to permit his working as a printer in Spain which would have been in any case but a short intermezzo in his life work as artist and copyist. Therefore I am inclined to the more probable supposition that the Valencian printer was rather identical with that argenter (silversmith) Alfonso Fernandez de Cordoba who in a contract of 1483 (communicated by Serrano, Reseña, etc. p. 156 ff.) is also designated as a type-founder and is working in association with other artisans as a printer. It is probable that this man, well experienced in metal work, may have created the black letter type used for the printing of the Bible, for this type is exactly the same as that used in the edition of the Summa defecerunt of Antoninus de Florentia, printed according to the colophon by Alfonso Fernandez de Cordoba alone. But this type is not identical with that used in the Commentary of Jaime Perez in 1485, as I had occasion to assert and to prove in contravention to Spanish bibliographers, although there is a great resemblance between them. That these books were printed by the « argenter » Alfonso Fernandez de Cordoba has been sufficiently proved by Sr. Serrano with the aid of documentary sources. The resemblance of the type in this case leads us still more surely to regard the « argenter » of 1483 and the printer 1477-78 as the same person. If Alfonso Fernandez were a type-founder in 1483, he may also have cast some years before the Gothic type which served for the composition of the Valencian Bible. The circumstances which led to his becoming an associate of Lambert Palmart must have been, with great probability, the following.

About the year 1476 or 1477 Lambert Palmart and his employer, Philipp Vizlandt, saw that the Roman type which they had used up to that date would no more suffice and that they, in the exclusive possession of this material, could no longer compete with foreign printers. They had no black letter type nor was Lambert Palmart able to make them. So Vizlandt applied to the silversmith Alfonso Fernandez de Cordoba and ordered him to manufacture the dies and matrices for two kinds of black letter type, one for the text and the other for headings, etc. The newly created material was used for the first time in the Confessionale Antonini of 1477. Probably this book was printed in the workshop directed by Lambert Palmart and belonging to the rich Philipp Vizlandt. But as the principal accomplishment of this publication was the creation of the new type, Alfonso Fernandez was permitted to sign as the sole printer : « Fuit operis predicti magister Alfonsus Fernandez de Cordoba de Regno Hispaniae. » The type was the property of Vizlandt and when he ordered the two printers to undertake the printing of the Valencian Bible with it, he permitted the names of both typographers to appear in the colophon as the executers of the work.

There is, of course, no absolute certainty that the events took place just as related. But the rediscovered Bible leaf shows that the Bible was printed with the same black letter type as the Antoninus published by Cordoba in 1477 and it so becomes obvious to any one who has studied the documents of early Valencian printing, that the facts must stand in some connection similar to that which has been sketched and the newly found fragment enriches in the happiest manner our knowledge of the origin of Spanish typography.

Last not least, this single leaf enables us to determine with great probability the features of the whole Bible as it must have been in its entirety. As has been said, the last page contains the 18 long lines of the colophon and above them the conclusion of the Apocalypse, 19 lines of text in two columns. The front of the leaf is a complete text page, surely composed in the same manner as the rest of the book. According to the specimen a page printed from top to bottom must have contained 59 lines of text. To be sure a good deal of the pages will not contained fully 59 lines of text. The very type chosen for the text, of which 20 lines measure 91 mm. (= 3 7/8 in.) gives a somewhat monumental aspect to the book. The Bible must have really given the impression of an « édition de luxe », because the composition has wasted a great deal of room at the beginning of the chapters. The last leaf comprises the 21st and 22nd chapters of the Apocalypse complete and 23 lines of the end of the 20th chapter. The beginning of the two chapters is composed in the same manner which we may therefore consider to have been the same throughout the whole book. These headings occupy the space of four lines of text. The first line contains only the number of the chapter in large Roman numerals between two points. The first words of the chapter begin on the base line of the fourth text line and are not set in text type but in the larger (title) type, with the use of an abundance of capital letters. For example, in the beginning of the 22nd chapter, the word « mestra » (he shows) has a capital M, evidently for the sake of ornament as the rules of orthography in Spanish do not permit either now or then the use of a capital M in this place. Moreover, a space is left at the beginning of the chapter to be filled out by an illuminated initial letter. This space at the left of the first line of larger type and the following two of text type measures about 20 sq. mm., with a so-called representative letter of the lower case sort in the centre which served to indicate to the illuminator what letter was to be painted in there. Our copy has the spaces left blank so we cannot tell in what manner the illuminator used to carry out the ornamentation of the initial letters, wheter in red only or, as was frequently the case, in red and blue alternately.

At the top of every page there was, in the middle, a so called column title or heading stating the contents of the page, printed also in the larger type and beginning with a capital letter. The sides of the Bible leaf are numbered 362 and 363, written in ink at a much later period than the date of impression. This numbering has, however, nothing to do with the numbers of the pages of the Bible. It is the work of P. Civera who inserted the leaf between pages 361 and 364 of his manuscript chronicle. Of course the volume of the Bible, so splendidly printed, must have contained far more than 363 pages originally. The text of the Latin Bible when printed in two columns of 58 to 60 lines will comprise about 400 to 450 leaves or 800 to 900 pages. In the case of the Valencian Bible, printed with so much blank space, we must assume the larger number as more probable. Wether the whole Bible was contained in one volume or was divided into two, as Sr. Aguiló supposes, — in such cases the first volume ended with the IInd Book of Maccabees — is a question which cannot be answered with the assistance of the one leaf in existence. Nor do we venture to conjecture how many leaves the quires composing the Bible contained or whether they were signed. As P. Civera relates having received four leaves from his friend, these four may have formed the last quire of the volume. This is accidentally the case also with the Confessionale Antonini printed by Cordoba alone in 1477. Certainly the preceding quires had more leaves; probably the Bible agreed in that with the book just mentioned and Palmart's Thomas Aquinas of the same year, which had sheets of 10 and 8 leaves alternating more or less regularly. Cordoba as well as Palmart introduced the use of signatures in their imprints of 1477 and it may be supposed, therefore, that the practice was continued in the Valencian Bible also.

A watermark is not clearly distinguishable in the paper. Perhaps it takes the place at the bottom of the leaf, were a small portrait of Bonifacio Ferrer, engraved in copper, has been pasted on by the hand of Padre Civera.

At all events the rediscovery of the lost leaf has thrown light upon several most intricate questions. No longer is the Valencian Bible a hazy and disputable point in the history of early Spanish typography. It has now become a distinct and well authenticated « monumentum typographicum ». We may now perceive what remarkakle results the two printers achieved with this splendid and stately work, endowed with all the cunning of their workmanship, and we may accord to this work a sure and undisputed place among the productions of the typographical art in Spain.

I am aware that I have not sufficiently characterised in the preceding lines the manuscript of Padre Civera and that I have referred to it but as the receptacle in which the last relic of the Valencian Bible is preserved. According to the bibliographers of Valencian literature and of ecclesiastical history, the « Anales de la cartuja de Porta Celi », often called « Vidas de los hombres illustres de Porta Celi », are a noteworthy chronicle, interesting not only for the provincial history of Valencia, and their author enjoys the fame of a very clear and precise historian. He has taken care to embellish the neatly written manuscript with illuminated title leaves, some large miniatures, heraldic devices, etc. and with a great number of vignettes, and initial letters in colours and gold. Besides the Bible leaf there are some wood-cuts and copper engravings of the XVIth and XVIIth centuries, some letters of learned Carthusian monks and other documents inserted among the leaves of this highly interesting volume.

It is to be hoped that the precious codex may be saved for the use of European students, as it probably will pass to the private collection of a well known bibliophile, where persons seriously interested in the matter will be allowed to study it. At all events there is no more to be feared that it disappear again as is did a hundred years since.

EL HERMANO DE LOPE

Los años de 1550 á 1560 fueron en Valladolid de inusitado movimiento político y social. Aunque el incansable emperador don Carlos y su hijo don Felipe andaban por tierras de Alemania, la villa del Pisuerga — todavía no ostentaba el título de ciudad — era considerada por todos como verdadera corte de las Españas. Don Felipe, príncipe aún, volvió á su villa natal en 1554, pero su estancia fué muy breve; pues muerto por entonces su cuñado el príncipe D. Juan de Portugal, trájose á Valladolid á la viuda (su hermana la princesa doña Juana), y « comenzó á introducirla é instruirla en el gobierno de la monarquía, satisfaciéndola cuanto le era posible porque obedeciese, y á la pública quietud y general conformidad y para su propio bien ayudase fiel y pronta ». Hecho esto, puso ayos á su hijo el infante don Carlos y partió en busca de su segunda esposa doña María de Inglaterra. Y ni siquiera cuando su augusto padre, poco después, abdicó en él la corona, creyó preciso regresar á España, en forma que la proclamación se hizo en Valladolid por la regente, con asistencia del mismo don Carlos, que ya se entretenía en matar pajarillos y en desobedecer á sus mentores.

Todo ello comunicaba á la villa ese aspecto de riqueza y ostentación que hiciera á Navajero juzgarla como « la mejor tierra de Castilla la Vieja ». Propicia siempre á las demostraciones públicas, lo mismo supo recibir dignamente al emperador en su paso para Yuste, que solemnizar con suntuosos funerales la muerte de dos reinas. Y en medio de aquella singular vida cortesana, bullía una turba abigarrada de « andantes en corte », magnates, clérigos, cómicos, pretendientes, menestrales, poetas, que ya entretenían sus ocios con deportes y fiestas, ya buscaban distracción en curiosear las enseñanzas luteranas, de un modo demasiado inocente tal vez para merecer cruelísimo castigo. Entonces, cuando aquellos heréticos reos marchaban encaperuzados á la hoguera, llegó á Valladolid el rey don Felipe, á tiempo todavía para presenciar la segunda parte de tan sabroso espectáculo.

Entre esta turbamulta hallábanse algunas personas que más tarde, por diversas circunstancias, han pasado á figurar en nuestra historia literaria. Precisamente al comenzar aquel decenio debió de llegar á Valladodid, buscando aquello que al hombre le es más necesario para la vida, el zurujano alcalaíno Rodrigo de Cervantes, llevando la impedimenta de una no escasa familia, en la que figuraba Miguel, niño de sus tres ó cuatro años. Este parvulillo, pues, correría por las calles de la cortesana villa, y aprendería en ella unas letras que luego no aprovechó del todo mal. En Valladolid nació una hermana de Miguel, de nombre Magdalena.

También estaba en Valladolid Lope de Rueda, dedicado á sus ocupaciones de farándula. Por lo menos desde 1554 hasta 1557 representó en esta villa el exbatihoja sevillano, si bien haciendo alguna tournée por las comarcas circunvecinas. Estaba á la sazón casado — por lo menos así lo afirmaban algunos conocidos suyos, en oposición á otros que ponían en entredicho la legitimitad de aquella unión, — con cierta bailarina llamada Mariana, que en otros tiempos había servido á don Gastón de la Cerda, duque de Medinaceli, proporcionándole entretenimiento con sus habilidades coreográficas. Es muy posible que aquel Miguelillo Cervantes, cumplidos ya sus ocho ó diez años, viese en Valladolid alguna representación de Lope de Rueda, toda vez que él mismo nos dice que siendo « un muchacho » admiró las cualidades del comediante de Sevilla.

A más de éstos y otros individuos dignos de recuerdo, hallábanse en Valladolid — y ellos son el principal objeto de este artículo, — dos personajes de consideración : Felices de Vega y su mujer Francisca Hernández ó Fernández. Aquel matrimonio carredano que años más tarde había de traer al mundo todo un monstruo — monstruo de talento y de fecundidad literaria, — residía en la corte del Pisuerga por los años de 1554.

Hablando del origen de sus padres y su salida del pueblo natal, Lope de Vega, en la conocida epístola á Amarilis, inserta en La Filomena, dice lo siguiente:

Tiene su silla en la bordada alfombra
De Castilla, el valor de la Montaña Que el Valle de Carriedo España nombra; Allí otro tiempo se cifraba España;
Allí tuve principio; mas ¿qué importa
Nacer laurel y ser humilde caña?
Falta dinero allí, la tierra es corta;
Vino mi padre del solar de Vega:
Así á los pobres la nobleza exhorta;
Siguióle hasta Madrid, de celos ciega,
Su amorosa mujer, porque él quería
Una española Elena, entonces griega.
Hicieron amistades, y aquel dia
Fué piedra en primero fundamento
La paz de su celosa fantasía.
En fin, por celos soy, ¡qué nacimiento!
Imaginadle vos, que haber nacido
De tan inquieta causa fué portento.

Desde el valle de Carriedo, su tierra natal, los padres de Lope se trasladaron á Madrid, efectivamente; pero antes, sin duda alguna, hicieron una estancia, más ó menos larga, en Valladolid. Tal lo demuestra la partida de bautismo de otro hijo suyo, llamado Francisco, que dice así:

1. Archivo parroquial de Nuestra Señora de la Antigua, de Valladolid. L.1º de bautismos, f. 50.

No creo que haya duda en que se trata de los mismos padres de Lope de Vega. Los nombres no son vulgares para que se trate de una simple coincidencia; y aunque corrientemente se menciona á la madre del autor de La Arcadia con el nombre de Francisca Fernández, la verdad es que este apellido y el de Hernández solían emplearse indistintamente. A mayor abundamiento, puede añadirse que Jerónimo de Bruselas, uno de los padrinos del bautizo, era bordador [1], y que en la familia de los Pereñas, á que pertenecía una madrina, había también individuos del mismo oficio; y sabido es que Felices de Vega, como se ve por la partida de defunción que publicó Pérez Pastor, y por ciertas palabras de Suárez de Figueroa en la Plaza universal —en que no creo que hubiese reparado nadie hasta que yo las saqué á colación, — profesaba también de bordador.

Lo probable, pues, es que Felices de Vega se trasladase á Valladolid con su mujer buscando más ancho campo para ejercer su oficio. Pero viene otra cuestión. Lope, en los versos antes citados, dice que su padre salió del solar de Vega y

> Siguióle hasta Madrid, de celos ciega,
> Su amorosa mujer, porque él quería
> Una española Elena, entonces griega.

Demostrado que la partida no fué directa desde Carriedo á Madrid, sino con escala en Valladolid, y que en este punto estaba aún el matrimonio en cordial armonía, parece lo probable que la pasión de Felices hacia la española Elena surgiera en Valladolid después del nacimiento de Francisco, y que desde aquí huyese el infiel á Madrid seguido de su amorosa consorte. A no ser — cosa poco verosímil — que Francisca Hernández, persiguiendo á su marido desde Carriedo, fuese sorprendida en Valladolid por el parto.

1. D. José Martí (Boletín de la Sociedad Castellana de Excursiones, t. I, pág. 379) da cuenta de un poder otorgado, en 21 de Agosto de 1550, por Jerónimo de Bruselas, bordador, á Andrés Muñoz, del mismo oficio.

El hecho de que fuese padrino del bautizo Jerónimo de Bruselas, parece indicar que Felices ya se había hecho conocer de los bordadores de la corte y que, por tanto, su estancia en ella alcanzaba alguna anterioridad. En cuanto al tiempo que se prolongara, es difícil precisarlo. Tal vez la fuga amorosa de Felices aconteció hácia 1560, cuando Felipe II se llevó la corte de Valladolid. Entonces todos los « andantes en corte », todos los que á la sombra de la misma vivían, tendieron su vuelo hacia el Manzanares. Y teniendo en cuenta que la reconciliación del matrimonio Vega, según las palabras de Lope, debió de hacerse á principios de 1562, no parece infundada la conjetura.

¿ Y qué sería de ese Francisco, hermano de Lope, nacido en Valladolid ocho años antes que el Fénix de los Ingenios, y á quien nadie menciona ? Tal vez murió en temprana edad ; tal vez siguió rumbos que para nada le han hecho figurar junto á su ilustre hermano.

Y ya que antes he hablado de Cervantes, no quiero pasar en silencio una partida de bautismo que existe en el archivo de la iglesia parroquial ya citada. Dice así :

Jō de ceruantes. — En 23 de Septiembre de 1575 aºs bautice yo el blr Luiz Ruiz teniente de Cura a Joan hijo de Jō de Ceruantes y de mª su muger. Padrinos Jō de Villalpando y catalina gonzalez su abogado s. bartolº. El blr Luis Ruiz [1].

No se sabe hasta cuando permaneció en Valladolid la familia de Cervantes. Por las mismas consideraciones antes expuestas, debe suponerse que abandonó la villa en 1559 ó 60, coincidiendo con la partida de la corte. Contando ya por entonces Miguel sus doce años, cada vez me afirmo más en la creencia de que fué en Valladolid donde vió representar á Lope de Rueda.

1. Arch. parroquial de Nuestra Señora de la Antigua. L. 2º de bautismos, f. 159.

Cierto es que también pudo verle en 1561, en Madrid, ó en 1564, en Sevilla; pero, respecto á lo primero, no es seguro que Miguel estuviese por aquella fecha en la villa del Manzanares, y en cuanto á lo segundo, debe tenerse en cuenta que en 1564 el futuro autor del Quijote contaba 17 años, y no era ya « un muchacho » que « no podía hacer juicio firme de la bondad de sus versos ».

Mantuvo Miguel amistad, andando el tiempo, con el doctor Pedro de Soria, catedrático de Prima de Medicina en la universidad de Valladolid; y es difícil saber si esa amistad nació en esta época, cuando ambos eran unos niños, ó si fué de origen posterior.

Ese Juan de Cervantes, padre del niño cuyo bautismo consta en la partida copiada, ¿ pertenecía á la familia de Miguel ? No puede afirmarse. El nombre y apellido son demasiado comunes para llegar á la identificación. Claro está que inmediatamente se ocurre si sería el propio hermano de Miguel, que de aquel modo se llamaba; pero como se cree que de todos los hijos del cirujano Rodrigo, Juan era el menor — y nacido, por tanto, después de 1555, en que aproximadamente vino al mundo Magdalena, — resulta que en 1575, fecha del bautizo, sería todavía muy joven para encontrarse casado.

Y sin embargo, no está muy claro que Juan fuese el hijo menor de Rodrigo de Cervantes; por el contrario, pudiera creérsele el primogénito. Rodrigo, en su testamento, enumera á sus hijos en este orden : Miguel, Rodrigo y Juan; y aquí parece que quiso empezar por el menor para acabar por el mayor, pues sería raro que hubiese comenzado por el segundo (Miguel) para volver luego al primero (Rodrigo) y terminar con el tercero (Juan). Cierto es que luego menciona á sus hijas doña Andrea y doña Magdalena por este orden de mayor á menor; pero parece más explicable este diferente criterio al enumerar á los hijos por una parte y á las hijas por otra, que la transposición de los primeros.

En este caso, siendo Juan de Cervantes el mayor de los hermanos de Miguel, pudo muy bien suceder que, al marchar su familia, él quedase casado en Valladolid — ya que no consta su estancia en ningún otro punto, — y que él mismo fuese el padre de ese niño bautizado en 23 de Septiembre de 1575. Esto como posible, ó si se quiere, como probable; no como seguro.

* *

Lo que sí resulta probado es el caso curioso de que en Valladolid naciera un hermano de Lope de Vega — Francisco, — según se deduce de la partida copiada; una hermana de Cervantes, Magdalena, según se sabe por el testamento de la misma; y, años más tarde, cuando Felipe III restituyó la corte al Pisuerga, una hermana de Calderón de la Barca — Antonia María, — como lo demuestra la correspondiente partida que antes de ahora he publicado.

UN DATO PARA LAS FUENTES DE EL MÉDICO DE SU HONRA

¡ Ay honor, mucho tenemos
Que hablar á solas los dos !

Cuantos comentaristas y críticos se han detenido en el análisis de aquella joya calderoniana que lleva por título El Médico de su honra, han dejado correr pródiga y suelta la vena de sus fervientes alabanzas, ponderando la grandeza del asunto, la habilidad é interés dramático, la riqueza de las ideas, la valentía en los caracteres y la sobriedad y pureza del estilo, presidiendo todo ello al cruel, tremendo y pavoroso desenlace. Tan perfecta en su línea, en sentir de Menéndez y Pelayo, que después de El Alcalde de Zalamea quizá sea la mejor del poeta mirada con el criterio del arte [1].

No la han faltado pues, como á la mayoría de sus hermanas, merecidos elogios, pero nadie ó casi nadie se ha cuidado de asignarle un origen é investigar sus fuentes, concluyendo si fué invención fecunda del poeta, empapado tan ardientemente en las ideas y sentimientos de su tiempo, ó si el hurto fué mayor y su tiempo también el encargado de prestar á su pluma la historia del triste suceso, que tan maravillosamente se poetiza en sus jornadas. Labor penosa y harto difícil, que si en Lope ha hallado por fortuna un mantenedor insigne en nuestros días, de la buena estrella de Calderón hay que esperar que también habrá de encontrarlo más adelante. En el entretanto que llega, vaya este articulillo desbrotando el camino para cuando le alcance su turno en la tarea á El Médico de su honra.

El primer crítico que intentó encontrar un origen histórico á su tétrico argumento fué el por tantos títulos memorable en el estudio de las letras patrias Adolfo Federico, conde de Schack. Al analizar en su conocida obra esta calderoniana, deslumbrado por la intervención del Rey D. Pedro I de Castilla y de su hermano el de Trastamara, echóse á buscar por las crónicas y leyendas de aquel monarca justiciero las huellas primeras de El Médico de su honra[1]. Y esta vez, claro está, sin fruto. No andaba la crítica literaria en los tiempos del erudito alemán tan perfeccionada y sutil como en nuestros días, en los que la intervención en las comedias y dramas de nuestros clásicos ingenios de personajes históricos y reales júzgase tan solo como un capricho de la voluntad libérrima del poeta, para quien la historia, la geografía, los viajes, las ciencias naturales, todo lo que no fuese la gramática y la teología, eran cosa nullius, campo abierto de moros, donde sin respetos, escrúpulos ni miramientos talaban á su antojo para buscar un personaje, urdir una trama, trazar un episodio que diese mayor brío é interés á la pieza que componían. La puntualidad y rigor que exigimos hoy en los personajes históricos sacados á las tablas sería cándido pedirlo á los poetas del siglo de oro. Ni en Gratia Dei, pues, ni en Lope de Ayala, cronistas del Rey D. Pedro, pudo Schack encontrar, como tampoco los he encontrado yo, los rastros históricos que pretendía para el argumento de El Médico de su honra.

Para mí, no tenía necesidad de andar tan lejos : que su tiempo fué pródigo, como veremos luego, no en un médico de su honra sino en universidades y colegios donde rigurosamente se cursaba

1. « En las dos obras principales de la historia de Pedro el Cruel, Historia del Rey D. Pedro y su descendencia, por Gratia Dei, y la Chrónica del Rey D. Pedro, de Lopez de Ayala, no se encuentra dato alguno histórico en que pueda fundarse el argumento de este drama. Ayala sólo habla de la pasión desenfrenada de D. Enrique por el bello sexo. (A. F. Schack, Historia de la literatura y del arte dramático en España, traducida al castellano por Eduardo de Mier. Madrid, 1886-1888, t. IV, p. 359.)

la ciencia del honor, puntillosa, cruel, vengativa é inapelable.

Erró también más tarde otro ilustrador erudito del dramaturgo, dramaturgo asimismo, D. Juan Eugenio Hartzenbusch, suponiendo que el pensamiento de este drama debió sugerírselo á Calderón la lectura de una comedia de Andrés de Claramonte que lleva por título De esta agua no beberé [1]. Tampoco es cierto; ni en los caracteres, que no pueden ser más opuestos (él mismo lo reconoce), ni en las situaciones, distintas en un todo, ni en la intención definitiva y franca del poeta, en nada que no sea una simple coincidencia en los nombres de los protagonistas, el Rey D. Pedro, D. Gutierre Alfonso de Solís y Dª Mencia, se halla la influencia que imaginó Hartzenbusch sin fundamento: coincidencia que, por otra parte, ningún valor tiene en los anales de nuestro teatro, donde estos hurtillos de poca cuenta entre los ingenios eran comunes, usadísimos, permitidos, sin que su conciencia escrupulosa les obligase por ello á restitución.

Ninguno entre tanto de los eruditos españoles se había cuidado hasta esta fecha de leer siquiera una comedia que con el mismo nombre de El Médico de su honra aparecía impresa en la Parte XXVII extravagante de las obras dramáticas de Lope; y no porque desconocieran su existencia, sino porque, siendo en extremo rarísimos sus ejemplares [2], se habían contentado con su cita, presumiendo que editores mercenarios habían despojado á Calderón aquella presea, con el santo fin de engrosar un tomo de Lope, según frecuente uso y pirática costumbre por entonces.

Fué Menéndez y Pelayo ha pocos años quien utilizando unas noticias escondidas entre los Apéndices de la edición alemana de la Historia de Schack y en los estudios de Schaeffer deshizo el engaño y puso patente que El Médico de su honra, tenido hasta el día por obra original de Calderón, era una « refundición admirable y sublime, pero refundición al cabo, de una imperfecta comedia de Lope »[1]. Cabalmente aquélla. Y al efecto, la comparación y cotejo que emprende entre ambas no deja lugar á duda. La imitación es franca, clara, palpable. « No hay idea, intención ni movimiento — concluye el mismo insigne crítico — en el drama de Calderón que no esté en Lope »[2], comenzando por el pensamiento fundamental del drama, desarrollado en este con mayor lujo de detalles aun que en el primero.

2. Uno solo incompleto impreso en Barcelona 1633 (4º) se conoce guardado en la Biblioteca Nacional procedente de la de Osuna. Salvá tuvo fragmentos de otro que no alcanzaban sin embargo á El Médico de su honra (vid. Catálogo, I, pag. 548).

Mas cabe la pregunta ¿ fué acaso también aquella soberana idea, alma mater del drama, invención del talento fecundísimo de Lope, ó lo tomó quizás de algún suceso ó episodio realmente ocurrido á los dos poetas y utilizado por ambos ?

Cuando un ferviente panegirista calderoniano en el pasado siglo, D. Patricio de la Escosura, celoso coleccionador suyo, analizaba la labor del poeta bajo el criterio moralista, al repasar las Cartas, Memorias y Avisos de aquel tiempo, daba, como antes había dado el mismo Hartzenbusch, con un sinnúmero de casos, historias parciales y sucesos, semejantes, iguales como una gota de agua lo es á otra gota, á los sacados por Calderón y otros autores en sus tragicomedias y dramas [3].

Y en efecto, en las Cartas de algunos P.P. de la Compañía de Jesús publicadas por Gayangos, en los Avisos de Pellicer y Barrionuevo, contemporáneos justos del poeta, y en las Memorias de Ariño, Pedro de Soria y Pinheiro, anteriores á él, se leen con profusión pecadora las mismas ejecuciones misteriosas, las mis-mas puñaladas hijas de invisible mano, incendios de quintas y aposentos, pistoletazos mudos é inopinados, en suma el mismo aparato negro, vengativo y secreto de que en aquellas obras se servían los maridos burlados ó simplemente celosos para vengar su afrenta. El propio Calderón lo declaraba cuando en los versos postreros de A secreto agravio secreta venganza hacía historia sucedida la fábula de Dª Leonor y D. Lope de Almeida [1] : el lector acaso se persuada igualmente en este trabajo que asimismo lo fué la de Gutierre Alfonso y la desdichada Dª Mencia : por aquí, pues, en mi entender hay que perseguir las huellas históricas de El Médico de su honra, tanto en el de Lope como en el de Calderón, retrotrayéndose, en suma, al tiempo en que ambos vivían hechos soldados, cortesanos y poetas, con la esperanza de hallar algún suceso que pueda casarse seriamente con el que con tan pujante y descarnada bravura sacó el Fénix de los Ingenios en su pieza, para que la maestría, habilidad y arte calderonianos la mejorasen hasta concluir un drama todo perfección y asombro. « Imitar de este modo—exclama Menéndez y Pelayo—vale tanto ó más que inventar. » Veamos como se hizo, que á ello voy.

Para cumplir con el vulgar dicho castellano de que lo malo abunda, abunda también ó al menos no escasea por nuestros archivos y bibliotecas un librejo manuscrito recopilador de historias bizarras y portentosos casos. Titúlase Libro de cosas notables que han sucedido en la ciudad de Córdoba y á sus hijos en diversos tiempos y debió su existencia, á no dudarlo, á la pluma de algún curioso pendolista nada literato ni elegante, allá en los primeros años del siglo XVII cuya es la letra de los ejemplares que he logrado revisar [2].

Allí se leen hechos santos y ejemplares del Maestro Juan de Avila junto á liviandades de monjas, racioneros y embustes como el de Sor Magdalena de la Cruz tan conocido : apariciones de espíritus malignos, con luchas de toros y de fieras : pendencias caballerescas nacidas de un mentis como á porrillo, de la mano de casamientos desiguales y amores torpes y de tinelo : todo ello nadando entre proezas hercúleas de García de Paredes, historias de falsarios, vidas de hombres célebres, encantamientos y brujerías, en revoltijo risueño, en amable y disparatado cajón de sastre que recuerda irónicamente la indignación airada de Gallardo, cuando al tropezarse con este factum en sus correrías bibliográficas clavóle en sus guardas la ira de su indignación apellidando paparruchas á sus historias asombrosas é indignas de la pluma de todo ingenio sesudo y elegante [1].

algo más que la prosa tersa, pura y castiza, como Gallardo hacía, y revuelva estos casos, al separar atinadamente la paja abundantísima del grano escaso, chico y menguado será el que limpie, pero aun le dará bastante para llenar unos cahices de erudición y de curiosidades estimables.

Tanto es así que en el tal librillo, pródigo y generoso cabalmente en relaciones y sucedidos de honra y de linaje, léese uno sangriento, de tan extrañas y chocantes analogías con el final de El Médico de su honra, que si no arranca totalmente de él la raíz y origen de su fábula, acaso justifique, al menos ante los ojos del benévolo lector, el título ambicioso que á estas líneas encabeza. Conózcalo ante todo por delante, que luego, ahorrando las palabras, haremos juntos el comentario que necesite el texto.

El Libro de casos de Córdoba está escrito, á imitación de tantos otros de su tiempo, en forma de diálogo ó coloquio : júntanse dos cordobeses, Colodro y Escusado, en un mesón ó posada lejos de su tierra : traban conocimiento : brinda el uno de ellos con su aposento y mesa á su paisano, y en acabando de cenar departen sobre sus nombres para enredarse á la postre en la relación de mil historias cordobesas. Muy al final de su plática, en lo postrero del libro, emparejado con otros casos vengativos y truculentos viene el siguiente, que me ha hecho sospechar la inspiración en Lope ó Calderón para el extrañísimo desenlace de sus temibles dramas. Copiado fielmente dice así :

Este vuestro cuento me a traido otro á la memoria que aunque es de otro género os a de causar admiraⁿ la prudencia que tubo un caballero de corᵛᵃ. en un desconzierto que hallo en su casa y suzedió desta manera.

Casose un caballero de Corᵛᵃ con una sʳᵃ igual suya, cuyos nombres se callan por la honrra de los vivos. estubieron algunos aˢ con mucho gusto gozando de muchos vienes temporales y con todos los gustos y entretenimientos que se podian desear. El Demonio que no duerme trujo a casa de este Caballero un lacayo de mui buen parezer, y buena persona del qual se enamoró la pobre sʳᵃ tan sin orden que olvidada de lo mucho que devia á su Marido y á su reputacion y onestidad, se determinó atropellarlo todo, y para esto dió cuenta de su ruin pensamiento á una criada suya, la qual pʳ dar gusto a su sʳᵃ fazilitó con su buena traza un millon de inconbenientes. El mayor de todos era buscar ora segura para sus entretenimientos. No ubo otra cosa mas acomodada que mientras estaban en cabildo los veinte y quatro de Corva que este cavaro era uno de ellos con lo que se dize su nobleza y calidad, con esta ocasion todos los dias que avia cabildo en dejando á su amo en el se venia a gozar de la ocasion que su fortuna le avia ofrecido con toda la seguridad que ambos amantes pudieran desear. Entretubieronse mucho tiempo desta manera, y al fin el Demonio metio zizaña entre la sra y la criada á quien maltrató algunas veces de obra y de palabra, no considerando el mal que este mal tratamio le pudiera suzeder.

La criada agraviada y ofendida se determinó de contarle á su amo todo lo qe pasaba, y para que entendiese que le dezia verdad le aviso el modo y traza que tenian, y que si queria desengañarse que se viniese el primer dia que entrasen en cabildo con algun achaque, y veria con sus ojos todo quanto le abia dicho. el pobre caballero metido en un mar de confusiones, el primer dia qe entraron en cavdo fingio que le abia dado un dolor se vino á su casa, y entrandose de rondon en la sala donde estaba su muger los allo en flagrante delito. Pudiera este cavro hazerles mil pedazos pero considerando la flaqueza de las mugeres y la deshonra que se le abia de seguir quando se supiese el ruin pensamto de su muger que hubiese puesto los ojos en un Lacayo para ofenderlo se determino, se determino (sic) trocar las manos venciendose en tan justa benganza, y asi la dijo á su muger con palabras de mucho amor que no se espantaba de nada, y que la suplicaba se aquietase y no temiese, que la dava su Palabra de no ofenderla antes servirla y regalarla con mas amor que hasta alli lo avia hecho como lo experimentaría : con este seguro dejo quieta á la pobre sra y abriendo un cajon le conto doszientos escudos al Lacayo, y se los dio y le dijo que los tomase y se fuera y no parase en el Reyno, jurandole que le abia de seguir, y adonde quiera que parase le abia de hazer matar. el lacayo se lo prometio y haziendo quenta que aquel dia nacia se fue donde nunca mas parecio : el buen Cavro se bolvio á su Muger, y la hizo mil amores y la trato de alli adelante con tantos extremos de amor, como si entonces se casaran.

Aviendo pasado mas de un año de esta manera cayo mala la Sra y abiendola mandado sangrar el Medico, su Marido se halló presente haciendo mucho sentimio por su enfermedad y despues de sangrada y desocupada la pieza se fue a ella el Marido, y la dijo que si ablava palabra la avia de coser a puñaladas, y diziendo y haziendo la aflojo benda, y poniendose á escribir con mucha disimulacion aguardo que la pobre Sra espirase, y con la mesma se salio, avisando que dejasen reposar a su Sra que abia tenido mala la noche pasada. Aviendo pasado una ó dos oras entro una criada dos o tres veces, y entendiendo que reposaba se volvia, hasta que la parezio que bastaba y llegando ä la cama bio como su Sra estaba muerta. Alboroto la casa y la vezindad, avisaron a su Sr el qual vino haziendo infinitos estremos de dolor, con los quales la enterraron con grandes demostraziones de amor. Dentro de pocos meses le trujeron a este cavro muchos casamientos, y con escarmio de lo pasado dava de mano a todos. Al fin le dieron tanta priesa con un casamto de una Sra mui noble, mui rica y mui hermosa que le parecio dar quenta á su suegro, haziendole cargo qe lo tenia en lugar de Pe (padre) y que no queria hazer cosa sin su horden. el buen suegro se lo agradezio y le dijo que aquel casamito era mui abentajado y le parezia que no seria cordura el dejar de ejecutarlo, y abiendole dicho esto se llego a la oreja, y le dijo casaos, hijo, y si vuestra muger saliere mala, sangradla. Dandole a entender que abia sabido o adivinado como discreto todo lo que abia hecho con su hija [1].

No lo olvide el lector y venga ahora conmigo á recordar sucintamente las últimas escenas de El Médico de su honra. Arrastrado D. Gutierre por el fuego insensato de sus celos, llega á creer culpable á su inocente esposa Da Mencia : el fatal billete que en sus manos sorprende, rogando á su supuesto amante D. Enrique no se ausentase de Sevilla en bien de su honra, acaba de confirmar en el marido la falsa idea del adulterio, y en el mismo papel escribe luego la tremenda sentencia de su muerte : el amor te adora, el honor te aborrece; y asi el uno te mata y el otro te avisa. Dos horas tienes de vida : cristiana eres, salva el alma, que la vida es imposible.

Transcurre el breve plazo y vuelve el enojado D. Gutierre, en compañía esta vez de Ludovico, oficial cirujano, á quien obliga so pena de la vida á con el Rey D. Pedro á quien relata espantado el tremebundo caso. Corre el monarca á casa de D. Gutierre, cuya puerta conocen por la sangrienta huella de la mano, y halla al marido en medio de muestras fingidas de gran dolor y sentimiento, achacando á la fatal soltura de la venda la muerte accidentada de su amante esposa, porque

Ya se ve cuan facilmente
Una venda se desata [1].

Y cuando el Monarca, sin poner deliberadamente atención en el caso, trata solo de consolarle mandándole dar su mano á Dª Leonor su antigua dama, resístese primeramente el caballero, escarmentado, á correr otra vez las borrascas del honor en un nuevo matrimonio, y ante la insistencia del Rey, desarróllase entre ambos esta hermosísima escena, que Ticknor no entendió tachándola de singular y extraña [2], cuando si alguna singularidad ofrece es su extraña semejanza con el caso de Córdoba que más arriba copié.

Pedro el Cruel, pero la fábula no parece estar fundada en un hecho positivo, puesto que el Monarca se presenta en ella con una elevación y grandeza de alma que la historia no confirma » (op. cit., III, 42). Ni hacía falta ; porque su figura es secundaria dentro de la idea del drama y calía fantasearla, como en efecto lo hicieron Lope y Calderón con todos los poetas de su tiempo.

Que de noche halle embozado

Cuatro palabras para terminar ahora. Que la semejanza es patente y pudo provocar la imitación en Lope, aprovechada como se ha visto por Calderón, ahi está el Libro de casos de Córdoba para probarlo. Pero ¿ la provocó en efecto ? Nada de lijero ni aventurado tendría para mí el que se afirmase. Si el librejo manuscrito vióse liberalmente reproducido por mano de los copistas y sus traslados corrieron por España toda, cabe con harta facilidad que cayese en las de Lope ó Calderón como en las de tantos otros. El hecho del veinticuatro debió acaecer realmente además en tiempos no muy lejanos á los en que ambos ingenios escribían sus comedias [1], cuando su propio recopilador anónimo dice prudentemente que calla el nombre de la familia de aquel por la honrra de los vivos. Y debió trascender al mismo vulgo, creando una popularidad siniestra en torno suyo porque se cita una leyenda sevillana semejante en un todo á la cordobesa, si creemos esta vez el juicio tantas lijero del erudito gaditano D. Adolfo de Castro [2].

1. El Médico de su honra de Lope, apareció como queda dicho en la Parte XXVII extravagante de las obras dramáticas de aquel poeta (Barcelona, 1633, 4º). El de Calderón se incluyó por vez primera en una segunda parte de sus Comedias, impresa en 1637 y repetida en 1641 (vid. Salvá, Catálogo, I, nº 1124) y La Barrera, Catálogo, pp. 50 y 51). Los Casos de Córdoba fueron escritos seguramente hacia 1616. Hay un pasaje en ellos (f. 116 vº) en que se habla de la sublevación de la Alpujarra como ocurrida 48 años antes. Luego 1568 + 48 hacen justos los 1616. Además, por si aun fuera poco, entre los Apéndices varios que en el mismo tomo incluyó su anónimo autor hay una Tabla de los hombres famosos q̄ a tenido Corva en letras y armas y una Lista de los Obispos q̄ tiene Corva en estos tiempos, en las que se dan por vivos bastantes personajes contemporáneos todos del reinado de Felipe III. Por cierto que entre los nombres famosos nacidos en Córdoba encaja nada menos que... á Aristóteles. ¡ Que es imaginar !

2. « La tradición sevillana del marido que hizo dar con amenazas de muerte á un cirujano una sangría suelta á su mujer, tenida por culpable, con la mano ensangrentada del cirujano mismo que estampó en la pared de la casa para conocerla cuando aclarase el venidero día, y con la noticia que hubo por ella Don Pedro I, y el perdón del esposo ofendido y vengado, sirvió para este drama. La muerte de Mencia aparece como casual, el desate de una venda mal asegurada. »

A. de Castro, Discurso acerca de las costumbres públicas y privadas de los españoles en el siglo XVII puntlado en el estudio de las comedias de Calderon... Madrid, Gutenberg, 1881, in-4º, pág. 160. Por supuesto que siguiendo su añeja costumbre no dice Castro dónde tomó la noticia de la tradición sevillana que más parece calco calderoniano. Acaso mal recordó la lectura de el Libro de casos y urdió luego esta leyenda.

No es menester, sin embargo, encastillarse en el débil recinto de las conjeturas. Acudiendo al análisis hondo del drama mismo desprendense por sí solos, argumentos bastantes de razón para prohijar y defender aquella influencia.

No está el mérito único y raro de El Médico de su honra en el desarrollo de la idea vidriosa del honor, que otros ingenios sacaron también en sus producciones y el mismo Calderón trató además soberanamente en A secreto agravio, secreta venganza, y en El Pintor de su deshonra, aunque ninguna de las dos alcance á aquella : no lo está tampoco, con ser mucho, en la verdad y pintura de los caracteres y valentía con que el poeta los mantiene en la acción sin decaer un instante : no lo está finalmente en la exageración sangrienta del punto de honor, sentimiento privativo de nuestro teatro todo y única posible solución dentro de los cánones estéticos : lo que hace peregrina y singular esta tragicomedia es la asociación de aquélla idea del Médico que atiende, cura y opera á la propia honra, pensamiento original, feliz, grandioso, tan ligado y unido con el tremendo desenlace, común en ambos casos, en el de Córdoba y en el de la producción calderoniana. Mas : sin este desenlace no se concibe ni imagina el simbolismo de El Médico; para mí es su germen, su origen : bastaba que al poderoso entendimiento del poeta, fuese Calderón ó Lope, llegara la noticia de un suceso como el copiado, en que un marido oficia de propio y callado curador de su propia honra, librando al casual accidente de la venda la discreta y misteriosa salida de la sangre que había de lavar su honra, para que apoderándose de este lúcido detalle, embelleciéndolo, poetizándolo, levantándolo en alas de su genio inmortal, brotara la obra dramática con el brío y vigor que aquí gloriosamente ostenta.

La historia le prestó la figura heróica para nuestro vulgo y dramaturgos de D. Pedro I de Castilla; su época, vibrante, latente y robusta, la preocupación santa del honor sin el que la vida es carga infame y bochornosa; su instinto de poeta, los caracteres y episodios tan portentosamente trabados en el drama de Lope, y cuando las dificultades amontonadas por su albedrío parecían cerrar toda salida á los sordos y rugientes celos de D. Gutierre, gallardamente el poeta se abre paso ante todas, haciéndole prorrumpir en aquel monólogo, médula y alma de la obra :

Yo os he curar, honor,
Y pues al principio muestra
Este primero accidente
Tan grave peligro, sea
La primera medicina
Cerrar al daño las puertas, Atajar al mal los pasos.
Y asi os receta y ordena
El Médico de su honra
Primeramente la dieta
Del silencio... etc [1],

plan curativo que ha de encontrar su última receta en la sangría suelta, porque como él mismo dice más adelante es

el más sutil medio
Para que mi afrenta acabe
Disimulada, supuesto
Que el veneno fuera fácil
De averiguar, las heridas Imposibles de ocultarse.
Y así, contando la muerte,
Y diciendo que fué lance Forzoso hacer la sangria,
Ninguno podrá probarme
Lo contrario, si es posible Que una venda se desate [2].

Razonamiento mismo, que aunque el autor del Libro de casos no cuenta, debió de hacerse también el Veinticuatro. Y lógico además.

Quien haya estudiado superficialmente siquiera aquellos siglos, aquella sociedad y sus costumbres no habrá de cogerle de sorpresa. Si aun estaba en vigor la ley horrenda que facultaba al marido agraviado para vengar su honor públicamente, ejecutando en cadalso abierto á los adúlteros, como de los testimonios que Adolfo de Castro aduce y otros análogos se aprende [1], ¿ qué extraño tiene que lo que á plena luz y ante Sevilla entera calía hacer lo adelantase en el manchado hogar el mísero marido sepultando en el misterio de sus paredes el secreto agravio torpemente inferido á su linaje [2] ? Hoy tachamos de bárbaros y

1. Castro en su citada obra adujo varios de Cervantes y otros. Comprueban esta costumbre Torquemada en sus Colloquios satíricos (Mondoñedo, Agustín de Paz, MDLIII), Colloquio VI. Mateo Alemán que en su Guzman de Alfarache refiere un caso de ejecución de los adúlteros ocurrido en Madrid (Vid. Parte II, Libro II, cap. IV) y Gallardo, por alijerar esta nota, finalmente cita una Relación impresa en dos hojas en folio en que se describe el « Memorable | svceso, que este | año de mil y seyscientos y veynte | y quatro a veynte y cinco del mes de otubre, se vido en | Seuilla, escrito a vn amigo, en qve le da cuenta de como | vn hombre auiendo preso á su muger por adultera, y sen | tenciados á degollar por manos de su marido, se le entre | garon en vn cadahalso, para que executasse la sen | tencia : declarase el principio del caso, el medio que tuuo, y el buen fin que se consiguio. | Impresso cõ licencia en Seuilla por Manuel Ximenez, año de 1624 » (Ensayo, nº 1168.)

El buen suceso que tuvo, claramente se presume. Dos religiosos que asistirían á los reos, ayudados del pueblo, provocarían un tumulto para que á su favor pudiesen acogerse aquellos á la más próxima iglesia poniéndose en salvo. El caso no sería ni el primero ni el único. Este singular amparo entraba entonces aun para las personas más graves, dentro de las obras de misericordia. A la mano tengo acotados un racimo de ejemplos que prueban la protección de que gozaban los condenados á ahorcar y más singularmente los perseguidos por delitos de sangre tomados del mismo Libro de casos, de Le Passetemps de Jehan Lhermite, de la Jornada de Tarazona de Cock, del Caballero venturoso de Valladares, de La Galatea de Cervantes, y tantos otros. Mas va la nota muy larga y habrán de quedarse, por lo tanto, como el famoso mosto del bodeguero jerezano, para mejor ocasión...

2. Rufo con su habitual donaire concretó donosamente el sentir de su época sobre el adulterio y el forzoso expediente del marido en un salado dicho : « Dixose que una mujer adultera escapó de su marido, por no tener con que matalla. Respondió ¿ teniendo cuernos le faltó con qué ? » Las seyscientas apotegmas de Juan Rufo... Toledo, Pedro Rodriguez, 1596, fº 103 vº.

crueles á aquellos tiempos porque no toleraban sufridamente el adulterio, y en cambio predicamos el perdón de la adúltera y hasta la vergonzosa condescendencia del esposo. Apenas conciben á aquel ahigadado tabernero de Sevilla, Silvestre de Angulo, de quien las Memorias de su tiempo cuentan que llevó hasta el cadalso á su mujer culpable y á su amante, y aunque puestos ya en él pidiéronle varios religiosos los perdonase, no quiso consentirlo, y después de quitarles allí la vida por su propia mano, acabada su hazaña, tomó su sombrero, y arrojó lo al pueblo sevillano que en asombrada muchedumbre rodeaba el patíbulo gritando satisfecho ¡ Cuernos fuera ! [1] Pero no : para muchos dramaturgos y no pocos críticos de hoy es más acertada máxima, ó al menos eso nos hacen creer al escuchar sus obras, la de aquel caballero castellano, D. Fernando de Guzmán, que irónicamente afirmaba « que los cuernos son como los dientes, que al nacer duelen pero después se come con ellos [2] ».

¿ Sí ? ¿ Buena la frase ? ¡ Pues pongan su mano sobre el pecho cuantos lectores han tenido la paciencia de seguirme, y díganme luego, con sincera franqueza, quién es el valiente de ellos que para sí la suscribe... !

Agustín de Amezua.

GESTA
RODERICI CAMPIDOCTI

Le manuscrit qui nous a transmis les Gesta Roderici Campidocti fut découvert dans la Bibliothèque du couvent de San Isidro de Leon par le P. augustin Manuel Risco et publié par lui [1] à Madrid en 1792. L'heureux érudit annonçait ainsi sa découverte, en même temps qu'il en faisait ressortir l'importance :

« Habiendo vivido nuestros Escritores con tal desconfianza de conocer al célebre Castellano Rodrigo Diaz, por sus verdaderas proezas, señaladas virtudes, y gloriosa vida, no será extraño, que tenga yo la mayor complacencia y satisfaccion en ofrecer á mis amados Compatriotas, y á toda la República de los Literatos las mas apreciables memorias, y el mas insigne monumento desconocido á los Escritores, que florecieron desde el siglo xiii. hasta nuestros dias. Descubrí, y reconocí esta preciosa reliquia de la antigüedad en la Biblioteca del ilustre y Real Convento de San Isidro de Leon, de Canónigos Reglares de N. P. S. Agustin, y se contiene en un Códice antiguo en 4º de vitela, que con otros se guarda encerrado en un arca. Tiene primeramente este Códice la historia de Isidoro con este título : Incipit historia à B. Isidoro juniore Hispalensi edita. Y luego : Incipit prologus Isidori ex libris Cronicis brevitèr adnotatis. Concluye esta historia en la muerte del Rey Don Alonso VI. Síguese la historia de Juliano, Arzobispo de Toledo, con este título : In nomine Domini : Incipit liber de Historia Galliæ, quæ temporibus divæ memoriæ Principis Bambæ à Domino Juliano Toletanæ Sedis Episcopo edita est. Concluido este escrito se pone inmediatamente la historia de nuestro Rodrigo Diaz : Incipit gesta Roderici Campidocti.

« El autor anónimo de esta historia fue sin duda el primero que se dedicó á escribir la prosapia, guerras, y victorias del Campeador, como él mismo indica en el principio diciendo, que se resolvió á gravarlas en el escrito, para que las proezas de un varon tan memorable no se olvidasen con el discurso del tiempo, que suele borrar de la memoria de los hombres todo lo que no se perpetúa con la escritura. Quando compuso su obra estaba la ciudad de Valencia baxo el yugo de los Sarracenos, que se apoderaron de aquel territorio al año tercero de la muerte de Rodrigo Diaz, como se testifica al fin de la misma historia. Con esto solo se dexa entender, que este escrito es anterior á todas las Crónicas generales, y á los Poemas, y Romances, en que los Poetas fingieron las innumerables novelas, que tan corrompida tienen la historia del Campeador.

« Acerca de la verdad, y pureza del escrito que publico, tengo por constante el testimonio de su Autor, quando cerca del fin dice : Sed quod nostræ scientiæ parvitas valuit, ejusdem gesta sub brevitate, & certissima veritate stylo rudi exaravit. Las noticias que dá conformes enteramente á las pocas memorias, que tenemos de Rodrigo Diaz, coetáneas á los sucesos, ó más inmediatas á ellos, son argumento que demuestra con la mayor eficacia la veracidad del Autor, y su coexîstencia, ó proxîmidad á los hechos, y el claro conocimiento que tuvo de los mismos, y de todas sus circunstancias. Nada he reconocido repugnante á la verdadera historia de aquellos tiempos, ó que padezca alguna dificultad insuperable ; antes tengo por certísimo, que dá todas las luces necesarias para resolver las qüestiones, que se han movido sobre algunos sucesos, que se refieren tambien en historias muy posteriores. Juzgo asímismo, que con este escrito se desvanece la variedad y confusion, con que algunos hechos se cuentan por otros Escritores, representándose en cada una de sus historias un Cid diferente, á causa de no haber tenido por guia un tan insigne y antiguo monumento [1]. »

Treize ans après, en 1805, le P. jésuite Juan Francisco de Masdeu consacrait la moitié d'un volume [2] à critiquer acerbement non seulement l'édition de Risco, mais même l'authenticité du texte [3]. Bien qu'ayant travaillé à Leon pendant quatorze mois (1799-1800) il n'avait pas réussi à voir le manuscrit. Cette disparition du document aurait incité tout autre à la prudence ; elle engagea Masdeu dans une voie de négations systématiques dont deux en-tête de chapitres indiquent l'orientation : « Es incierta la fidelidad de su copia, publicada por Risco » et « Es incierta igualmente la antigüedad del original ». On ne peut pas, plus explicitement qu'il ne le fait, mettre en doute la bonne foi de l'éditeur, et l'on devine sans peine que sans l'attestation de témoins qui avaient vu le manuscrit, Masdeu aurait accusé Risco d'être l'auteur de la chronique latine [1].

« Resulta por conseqüencia legítima, que no tenemos del famoso Cid ni una sola noticia, que sea segura ó fundada, ó merezca lugar en las memorias de nuestra nacion... habiendo ahora exâminado la materia tan prolixamente, juzgo deberme retractar aun de lo poco que dixe, y confesar con la debida ingenuidad, que de Rodrigo Diaz el Campeador (pues hubo otros castellanos con el mismo nombre y apellido) nada absolutamente sabemos con probabilidad, ni aun su mismo ser ó existencia. »

C'était aller vraiment un peu trop loin.

1. «... es innegable, que actualmente no exîste el códice, donde se dice exîstia no mas que ocho años hace. He residido en Leon catorce meses en 1799 y 1800, honrado por el rey nuestro señor con respetidos (sic) decretos, para que se me franqueáran los archivos de todas las comunidades y casas : y aunque no me bastaron tres reales órdenes consecutivas para poderme aprovechar de los papeles de la catedral, por el miedo que tenian aquellos buenos canónigos, de que yo supiera leer los diplomas y breves de su enigmático Amburgo (nom donné par un chanoine à un tiroir où il avait accumulé certains manuscrits qu'il était incapable de lire, dit Masdeu, porque los juzgaria de lengua teutónica), y descubriera con esto los documentos apócrifos de imaginarios derechos y privilegios ; he visto sin embargo de esto todos los demas manuscritos de la ciudad, y de los monasterios, y muy en particular los de San Isidro ; cuyos religiosísimos señores, como se distinguen por su nobleza, urbanidad y cultura, y no necesitan de cimientos falsos para la seguridad de sus verdaderas glorias, me comunicaron desde luego y aun remitieron á mi casa con la mayor generosidad, todas las piezas manuscritas de su biblioteca y archivo, asegurándome con las mas ingenuas expresiones de sentimiento, que no se hallaba la famosa historia del Cid, ni sabian entender cómo se hubiese desaparecido. No pudiendo yo dudar de la exîstencia de un códice que tantos y tan respetables sugetos me atestiguan haber poseido ; ni siendo legítima ni autorizada su falta, puesto que me aseguran sus mismos amos, no haberse

C'est un épisode curieux de l'histoire de l'érudition [1], et un siècle écoulé n'en a pas affaibli le retentissement.

Le manuscrit n'était-il plus à Leon quand Masdeu l'y cherchait ? La seule chose que l'on puisse affirmer est qu'il avait disparu depuis une cinquantaine d'années lorsque, en 1845, un jeune Prussien, le Dr Wilhelm Gotthold Heine, l'acheta à un colporteur (?) français (?) et en 1846 l'emporta à Lisbonne où Herculano l'examina et reconnut que l'écriture était bien du treizième siècle. De là Heine revint à Berlin [2]. Deux ans après il y mourait tragiquement [3], et sa famille ne tardait pas à céder [4] le manuscrit à l'Académie de l'Histoire : en jamas permitido su enagenacion ó extraccion ; ¿ qué he de pensar yo segun leyes de crítica y prudencia ? Debiera sospechar necesariamente (en caso de poderlo hacer sin agravio de la conocida honradez del P. Risco) que dicho códice se ha ocultado á mis ojos y á los de toda la república literaria, ó porque no corresponde al original la copia que se ha publicado, ó porque él mismo, si lo vieramos, nos diera indicios manifiestos de no ser tan antiguo como se dice. Tengo por cierto que el P. Risco por su propio honor, y para mi quietud y la de todos los demas estudiosos, nos descifrará este misterio » (pp. 148-149).

4. Je n'ai pas recherché le détail des tractations qui ramenèrent le manuscrit en Espagne. Voici pourtant quelques notes à cet égard.

Dans les Memorias de la Real Academia de la Historia, tome VIII (1852), pp. L-LI (Noticia histórica de la Academia desde el año de 1832 hasta el presente) on lit :

« La Academia ha tenido tambien la buena dicha de recobrar un MSS. de los mas raros é interesantes y de hallar otro no menos curioso y útil. El Sr. Gayangos puso en conocimiento del Cuerpo, haber sabido en Londres que 1852, le Dr Antonio Cavanilles y Federici, le fils de l'académicien Antonio Cavanilles, l'apportait à Madrid. Il est depuis lors à la bibliothèque de l'Académie de l'Histoire [1].

En 1852, Tomás Muñoz découvrait dans un manuscrit de la collection Salazar [2] une copie du manuscrit léonais, faite au quinzième siècle.

el MS. de la crónica del Cid, que publicó el P. Risco, y cuya existencia negó Masdeu, el cual se tenia por único, y fue extraido de Leon años pasados y comprado por un Aleman, paraba en poder de cierta persona ilustrada en Alemania. La Academia con esta noticia practicó las oportunas diligencias para adquirirlo. En tanto el oficial de nuestra biblioteca D. Tomás Muñoz, dió parte de haber hallado entre los MSS. de Salazar otra copia de la misma crónica Gesta Roderici Campidocti de letra del siglo XV. Responde esta segunda á las objeciones de Masdeu, y serviria para reparar la pérdida del códice de Leon, si se hubieran frustrado las esperanzas que la Academia tenia de recobrarlo. Pero estas afortunadamente se realizaron. El manuscrito procedente de Leon, entregado al Sr. Marqués de Benalúa, Ministro plenipotenciario de España en Berlin, á quien la Academia suplicó se hiciera cargo de él, ha venido ya á poder de la misma. Le entregó generosamente la honradísima familia del ilustrado jóven prusiano Doctor Heine, quien le compró en un viage que hizo por España, y el cual falleció desgraciadamente de un tiro que por casualidad le alcanzó en las turbulencias de Berlin de 1848. Quede aqui consignada la religiosa escrupulosidad y generosa atencion de tan digna familia. »

José María de Eguren (Memoria descriptiva de los códices notables conservados en los archivos eclesiásticos de España. réimprimé en se servant de l'édition de Risco et du manuscrit léonais, j'ai pensé qu'il ne serait pas inutile de publier une fois de plus une chronique dont l'importance n'est plus à démontrer.

Je me suis efforcé de suivre le manuscrit léonais d'aussi près qu'il m'a semblé raisonnable de le faire, la seule liberté que j'ai prise consistant en rectifications orthographiques dans un très petit nombre de cas où je jugeais puéril de conserver des bizarreries dues à la négligence du copiste. Il m'a paru inutile d'indiquer par des caractères italiques les abréviations résolues. La division en paragraphes est nouvelle ; la ponctuation diffère sensiblement de celle des éditions précédentes.

L'écriture du manuscrit, on l'a déjà dit, est du treizième siècle : les deux fac-similés phototypiques qui accompagnent cette réimpression en rendront la constatation aisée. Le texte lui-même, ainsi qu'on l'a fait remarquer [1], est vraisemblablement antérieur à 1238, date de la prise de Valence par Jacques Ier d'Aragon, puisqu'en parlant de la conquête de cette ville par les Musulmans, peu après la mort du Cid, le chroniqueur dit : « et nunquam eam ulterius perdiderunt ».

[fol. 75]

Hic incipit gesta de Roderici Campidocti.

Quoniam rerum temporalium gesta inmensa annorum uolubilitate praetereuntia, nisi sub notificationis speculo denotentur, obliuioni proculdubio traduntur, idcirco et Roderici Didaci nobilissimi ac bellatoris uiri prosapiam et bella ab eodem uiriliter peracta sub scripti luce contineri atque haberi decreuimus.

Stirpis ergo eius origo haec esse uidetur. Flaynus autem Caluus multos genuit filios; de eorum numero fuit Fredinandus Flaynec et Bermudus Flaynec. Bermudus autem Flaynec genuit Rodericum Bermudez ; Flaynus autem Fernandez genuit Nunnum Flaynec ; Rodericus autem Uermudez genuit Fredinandum Roderici ; Fredinandus autem Roderici genuit Petrum Fredinandez et unam filiam, nomine Eylo ; Nunnus autem Flaynez accepit istam Eylo in uxorem et genuit ex ea Flaynum Nunez ; Flaynus autem genuit Didacum Flaynez ; Didacus autem Flaynez genuit Rodericum Didaci Campidoctum 75||v° ex filia Roderici Albari, qui fuit frater Nunni Albari, qui tenuit castrum Amaye et plurimas alias regionum prouincias. Rodericus autem Aluarez tenuit castrum Lune et prouincias de Monte Moggon et Muratellum et Cellorigo et Corel et multas uillas in planitia; vxor autem eius fuit Domna Teresia, soror Nunnioni Flaynez derelias. Didacus autem Flaynez, pater Roderici Didaci Campidocti, magna et robusta uirtute tulit Nauarris castrum qui dicitur Obernia, et Ulber et illam petram ; pugnauit autem cum supradictis Nauarris in campo et deuicit eos; habito super eos itaque semel triumpho, nunquam ulterius contra eum potuerunt preualere. Eo autem mortuo, Rodericus Didaci eiusdem filius successit in paternalis iuris sorte.

Hunc autem Rodericum Didaci Sanctius, rex totius Castelle et dominator Hyspanie, diligenter nutriuit et cingulum militie eidem cinxit. Quando quidem Sanctius rex ad Cesaraugustam perrexit et cum rege Ranimiro Aragonensi in Grados pugnauit, ibique eum deuicit atque occidit, tunc Rodericum Didaci sua ad regem sibille et ad regem cordube misit. Tunc uero almucnii et fortunius sancii gener garsie regis pampilonensis et lupus sancii frater fortunii sanggez et didacus petriz unus ex maioribus castelle. Unusquisque istorum cum sua militia uenerunt pugnaturi

Sanctius rex secum duxit, illumque in exercitu suo et in suo triumpho praesentem habuit; post habitum uero huiusmodi triumphum Sanctius rex reuersus est ad Castellam. Rex autem Sanctius adeo diligebat Rodericum Didaci multa dilectione et nimio amore, quod constituit eum principem super omnem militiam suam. Rodericus igitur creuit et factus est uir bellator fortissimus et Campidoctus in aula regis Sanctij. In omnibus autem bellis que Sanctius rex fecit cum Aldefonso rege in Plantata et in Uulpegera, et deuicit eum, tunc Rodericus Didaci tenuit regale signum regis Sanctii, et preualuit et meliorauit se in omnibus militibus regis exercitus. Cum uero rex Sanctius Zemoram obsederit, tunc fortune casu Rodericus Didaci solus pugnauit cum. xv. militibus ex aduersa parte contra eum pugnantibus : VII. autem ex his erant loricati, quorum unum interfecit, duos uero uulnerauit et in terram prostrauit, omnesque alios robustos animo fugauit. Postea namque pugnauit cum Eximino Garcez, ||[76] uno de melioribus Pampilonis, et deuicit eum. Pugnauit quoque pari sorte cum quodam Sarraceno in Medina Celim, quem non solum deuicit sed etiam interfecit.

Igitur post mortem domini sui regis Sanctij, qui eum nutriuit et eum ualde dilexit, rex Aldefonsus honorifice eum pro uasallo recepit atque eum nimio reuerentie amore apud se habuit. Dominam Eximinam neptem suam, Didaci Comitis Ouetensis filiam, ei in uxorem dedit, ex qua genuit filios et filias.

Interea namque rex Aldefonsus nuntium eum per paria sua ad regem Sibille et ad regem Cordube misit. Tunc uero Almuctamit rex Sibille et Almudafar rex Granate erant. Ga[r]sias Ordonij et Fortunius Sanctij gener Garsie regis Pampilonensis, et Lupus Sanctij, frater Fortunij Saggez et Didacus Petriz, unus ex maioribus Castelle, vnusquisque istorum cum sua militia uenerunt pugnaturi contra regem Sibille. Cum autem Rodericus Didaci et uenerit Almutamiz, statim reuelatum est ei, regem Granate cum auxilio Christianorum uenire super Almutamiz et super regnum suum. Tunc misit litteras ad regem Granate et ad Christianos qui cum eo erant, quod amore domini sui regis Aldefonsi contra regem Sibille non uenirent nec regnum eius intrarent. Ipsi autem in multitudine sui excertitus confidentes, preces eius non solum audire noluerunt sed etiam eos omnino spreuerunt. Venerunt itaque depredantes omnem terram illam usque ad castrum qui dicitur Capra. Quod autem Rodericus Didaci audiens, et ueritate certa cognoscens, eis statim cum exercitu suo obuiam exijt ibique cum eisdem bellum crudele conmisit; quod utique bellum inter se permixtum durauit ab hora diei tertia usque ad sextam. Facta est autem ibi maxima strages et interfectio exercitus regis Granate tam Sarracenorum quam Christianorum, donec omnes deuicti ac confusi fugierunt a facie Roderici Didaci. Captus est igitur in eodem bello comes Garsias Ordonij et Lupus Sanctij et Didacus Petri et alij quamplures illorum milites. Habito itaque triumpho, Rodericus Didaci[76]||[vo] tenuit eos captos tribus diebus; tandem abstulit eis tentoria et omnia eorum spolia, et sic permisit eos absolute abire. Ipse uero cum uictoria reuersus est ad Sibillam. Almutamiz autem dedit ei tributa domini regis Aldefonsi, et addidit super tributa munera et multa dona que suo regi detulit. Acceptis igitur supradictis donis et tributis, et firmata pace inter Almutamiz et regem Aldefonsum, reuersus est honorifice ad Castellam et ad dominum suum regem Aldefonsum. Pro huiusmodi triumpho ac victoria a Deo sibi collata, quamplures tam propinqui quam extranei causam inuidie de falsis et non ueris rebus illum apud Regem accusauerunt.

Reuerso autem cum supradicto honore ad Castellam Roderico, rex Aldefonsus ad Sarracenorum terram sibi rebellem cum exercitu suo statim perrexit, ut eam debellaret et regnum suum amplificaret et pacificaret. Rodericus autem tunc temporis in Castella remansit infirmus. Sarraceni uero interea uenerunt et irruerunt in quendam castrum qui dicitur Gormaz, ubi paucam predam acceperunt.

Cum autem hoc audiret Rodericus, nimia motus ira et tristicia ait: « Persequar latrunculos illos, et forsitan eos comprehendam ». Congregato itaque exercitu suo et cunctis militibus suis armis bene munitis, in partes Toleti depredans et deuastans terram Sarracenorum, inter uiros et mulieres numero. VII. milia, omnesque substantias et diuitias eis uiriliter abstulit secumque in domum suam attulit. Vt autem rex Aldefonsus et maiores sue curie hoc factum Roderici audierunt, dure et molestie acceperunt, et huiusmodi causam sibi obicientes sibique curiales inuidentes, Regi unanimiter dixerunt : « Domine Rex, celsitudo uestra proculdubio sciat, quod Rodericus hac de causa fecit hoc ut nos omnes simul in terra Sarracenorum habitantes eamque depredantes a Sarracenis interficeremur atque ibi moreremur. » Huiusmodi praua et inuida suggestione Rex iniuste commotus et iratus eiecit eum de regno suo.

Ille autem de regno Castelle exiens Barcinonam uenit, amicis suis in tristicia relictis. Deinde uero ||77 ad Cesaraugustam uenit, regnante in ea tunc Almutadir, [qui] mortuus fuit in Cesaragusta, regnumque autem eius diuisum est inter duos eiusdem filios, Almuctaman uidelicet et Alfagit. Almuctaman autem regnauit in Cesaragusta, Alfagit uero frater eius in Denia. Iste uero Almuctaman multum diligebat Rodericum, et preposuit et exaltauit eum super regnum suum et super omnem terram suam, utens in omnibus consilio eius. Dirum autem et seuissimum malitie certamen exortum uidetur inter Almuctaman et fratrem eius Alfagit, ita quod statuerunt locum et diem in quo debellarent inter se. Sanctius autem, rex Aragonensis et Pampilonensis, et comes Berengarius Barcin[on]ensis erant in auxilio et in comitatu Alfagit. Cum Almuctaman uero erat Rodericus Diaz, qui seruiebat ei fideliter, et custodiebat ac protegebat regnum suum et terram suam; quapropter Sanctius rex et comes Berengarius presertim inuidebant ei erantque ei insidiantes. Vt ergo Sanctius rex audiuit quod Rodericus Didaci ire uolebat in Cesaraugustam, in Montesonem iurauit et dixit quod nullomodo auderet

facere hoc. Vt autem Rodericus sciuit iuramentum Regis, animo commotus, cum omni exercitu suo cŏram oculis inimicorum suorum, uidelicet tocius exercitus Alfagit, sua tentoria fixit, altera uero die coram Sanctij regis in Monteson intrauit. Rex autem non est ausus ad eum uenire. Interim uero habuerunt consilium inter Almuctaman et Rodericum, ut restaurarent et munirent castrum antiquum qui dicitur Almanara, quod autem statim factum est. Deinde adhuc malitie certamen inter Almuctaman et fratrem eius Alfagit iterum uidetur exortum, usque ad bellum peragendum perductum. Alfagit autem conuenit se cum comite Berengario et comite Cardauiese et cum fratre comitis Urgelensis et cum potestatibus, uidelicet Usason et Inpurdanensi et Rocionensi atque Carcassonensi, hab(ita)uitque cum eis consilium huiusmodi, quod omnes isti uenirent pariter cum Alfagit et obsiderent supradictum castrum Almanara, quod statim ita factum est. Obsederunt itaque eum et multis 77||v° diebus debellauerunt eum, donec eis qui erant in castrum deficit aqua. Rodericus autem tunc morabatur in castro quod dicitur Escarp, quod est inter duo flumina, scilicet Sigris et Scisma, quod ipsemet prius omnibus suis·ciuibus captis uiriliter ceperat. Illo itaque ibi morante, misit nuntium ad Almuctaman, qui nuntiaret ei tribulationem et pressuram castri Almanare, et qui diceret ei quod omnes qui erant in supradicto castro uidebantur fessi et multum defessi et quasi in extremis positi. Iterum Rodericus commoto animo misit alteros legatos cum suis litteris ad Almuctaman, ut subueniret castro quem construxerat. Almuctaman autem statim uenit ad Rodericum et inuenit eum in castro Tamariz. Inito ibi et habito inter se consilio, Almuctaman precipiebat Roderico ut dimicaret contra hostes qui obsidebant castrum Almanara. Cui ille respondit : « Melius est quod tu des ei censum suum et quiescas expugnare castrum quam inire certamen cum eo, quia in maxima multitudine hominum uenit. » Hoc autem Almuctaman libenter concessit. Rodericus autem ad comites predictos et ad Alfagit statim nuntium misit, ut accepto suo censu a pre-dicto castro discederent. Illi autem suis dictis adquiescere noluerunt nec castro debellare desinierunt. Nuntius uero reuersus ad Rodericum retulit ei omnia que ab eis audierat. Rodericus autem commoto animo iussit omnes milites suos armare et uiriliter se ad bellum preparare. Perrexit itaque cum exercitu suo usque ad illum locum, in quo aspexerunt se mutuo comites scilicet et Alfagib et Rodericus Didaci. Magno autem impetu facto, belligerantes et uociferantes utriusque partis direxerunt acies suas et inierunt bellum; sed predicti comites simul cum Alfagib uerterunt continuo terga, et deuicti ac confusi fugierunt a facie Roderici. Occisa est quippe maxima pars eorum, pauci nempe euaserunt ; omnia eorum spolia et substantia in iure et in manu Roderici remanserunt. Comitem autem Berengarium, et milites suos secum duxit captos ad castrum Tamariz, ‖[78] ibique misit eos in manus de Almuctaman post habitam et factam uictoriam; post. v. uero dies dimisit eos liberos abire in patriam suam. Rodericus autem Diaz pariter cum Almuctaman reuersus est ad Cesaraugustam, ibique reuersus est a ciuibus illius ciuitatis cum summo honore et maxima ueneratione.

Almuctaman uero exaltauit et sublimauit Rodericum in diebus suis super filium suum et super regnum suum et super omnem terram suam, ita ut ille uideretur esse quasi dominator totius regni sui ; ditauitque eum nimiis muneribus et innumerabilibus et donis aurei et argentei multis.

Transactis ergo diebus multis, accidit ut quidam homo ignobilis, nomine Albofalac, qui tunc tenebat castrum Rote, quod uicinum Cesaraguste, subtraxit se cum predicto castro [a] jure et de dominio Almuctaman regis, et rebellauit in eo pro nomine Adafir, qui fuit patruus Almuctaman, qui intrusus erat a fratre suo Almuctadir in predicto castro. Ob autem ab hanc causam, predictus Adafir rogauit imperatorem Aldefonsum multis precibus ut auxiliaretur sibi. Quo audito, imperator Aldefonsus misit ad eum Ranimirum infantem et comitem Gundissaluum et alias quam plures potestates cum ingenti exercitu, ut subueniret ei.

Illi autem uenientes ad eum, cum eo inierunt consilium quod mitterent ad Imperatorem, rogantes eum ut ipsimet ueniret, quod ita factum est. Qui cum exercitu suo statim uenit ad eos et mansit illuc paucis diebus.

Interea uero mortuus est Adefir. Albolfalac autem rebellis castri Rote habuit consilium cum infante Ranimiro, quod traderent Rotam imperatori Aldefonso. Predictus uero Albolfalac ilico ad Imperatorem uenit et locutus est cum eo uerba pacifica in dolo, supplicans ei multis precibus ut ueniret ad predictum castrum et intraret illum. Sed antequam Imperator ad castrum accederet, permisit Albolfalac principes Imperatoris prius castrum intrare[n]t, ipso autem prope stante; at ubi ingressi sunt, dolus et proditio Albolfalac statim cognita uidetur : milites autem et pedites qui custodieba[n]t 78|| vo castrum, percusserunt principes Imperatoris lapidibus et saxis, et multos de illis nobilibus occiderunt. Imperator autem reuersus est ad sua castra nimium tristis. Quo audito Rodericus, qui erat in Tutela, uenit ad Imperatorem. Imperator autem recepit eum honorifice, et diligenter precepit ei ut sequeretur eum ad Castellam. Rodericus autem secutus est eum. Sed Imperator adhuc tractauit in corde suo multa inuidia et consilio maligno, ut ei[ic]eret Rodericum de terra sua. Rodericus autem hoc comperiens noluit ire ad Castellam, sed discedens ab Imperatore reuersus est ad Cesaragustam, quem Almuctaman rex diligenter ibidem recepit.

Post hec uero imperatori Aldefonso maximam uictoriam concessit diuina clementia, ita quod Toletum urbem Yspanie inclitam, diu impugnatam et expugnatam, VII. uidelicet annis, uiriliter accepit, eamque in suo imperio cum suburbanis simul et terris suis subiugauit.

Interea Almuctaman rex iussit Roderico Diaz, ut pariter cum eo congregatis militibus suis terram Aragonensem intraret depredandam, quod ita factum est. Terram itaque Aragonensem depredati sunt et expoliauerunt eam diuitijs suis et habitatoribus terre, quam plures captiuos secum duxerunt. Post. v. uero dies cum uictoria reuersi sunt ad castrum Monteson. Sanctius autem rex Aragonensis tunc temporis presens erat in terra sua et in regno suo, sed nullo modo ausus est ei resistere. Post hunc factum Rodericus Diaz irruit in terram de Alfagib, fratris Almuctaman, et depredatus est eam. Multa quidem dampna et detrimenta ei intulit, maxime in montanis que dicta sunt Maurella, et in finibus eius ; non enim reliquit in terra illa domum quam non destruxit, neque substantiam quam non abstulit. Debellauit igitur aduersus castrum Maurella, et ascendit usque ad portam castri et fecit ei maximum detrimentum. Inter hec rogauit eum Almuctaman per nuntium et per litteras suas, ut rehedificaret castrum super Maurelam, qui uocatur Alcala; quod statim illud rehedificauit et construxit, atque rebus sibi necessariis tam hominibus quam armis bene illud muniuit.

Exceptis uero

Rex autem Alfagib, cum hoc audisset, ilico regem Sanctium Aragonensem conuenit, et de Roderico ma||[79]ximam querimoniam fecit. Statuerunt igitur ambo inter se, ut se adiuuarent et regna sua et terras suas de Roderico uiriliter defendere[n]t, et tandem in campo cum eo audacter dimicarent. Congregauit igitur uterque exercitum suum, et sua castra metati sunt ambo iuxta flumen Yberum ; Rodericus autem prope erat eis.

Rex uero Sanctius statim ad Rodericum misit legatos, ut ab illo loco in quo stabat sine mora recederet ibique ulterius penitus non maneret ; qui eius mandato et sermonibus atque suis monitis adquiescere nullatenus uoluit ; attamen ad legatos huiusmodi responsum dedit : « Si Dominus meus Rex pacifice per me uult transire, ego libenter ei seruiam, non solum ei uerum etiam et omnibus suis hominibus ; insuper autem, et si uoluerit, dabo ei centum de meis militibus, qui seruiant ei et sint socij sui itineris. » Legati autem reuersi ad Regem retulerunt ei dicta Roderici. Vt autem Sanctius rex audiuit, quia Rodericus adquiescere dictis eius noluit nec a loco in quo stabat recessit, motus ira infremuit, et una cum Alfagib usque fere ad castra Roderici celeri cursu peruenit. Rodericus autem uidens hoc iurauit eos omnino resistere et a facie eorum minime fugere, permansitque ibi fortiter constans. Sequenti uero die, Sanctius rex et Alfagib cum suis hominibus pariter se armauerunt suasque acies direxerunt contra illos. Inito itaque atque inserto certamine diu inter se debellauerunt; Sanctius uero rex et Alfagib tandem uersi sunt terga, et deuicti ac confusi fugierunt a facie Roderici, qui persecutus est eos per multa itineris spatia et cepit ex eis quamplures: inter quos captos fuit uidelicet episcopus Reymundus Dalmatij, et comes Sanctius Sanctij de Pampilona, et comes Nunnus de Portugale, et Gustedio Guntadiz, et Nunnus Suaris de Leone, et Anaya Suarij de Gallecia, et Caluet, et Ennecus Suggiz de Montecluso, et Symon Garciaz de Boil, et Pepinus Acenariz, et Garsia Acenariz frater eius, et Flayn Petriz de Pampilonia, nepos comitis Sanctij, et Fortunius Garsie de Aragone, et Sanctius Garsie de Alcaraz, et Blasius Garsie maiordomus Regis; inter quos fuit etiam Garsia Didaci de Castella. Exceptis uero[79]||[v°]istis cepit plus quam. II. milia, quos tandem dimisit ire liberos in terram suam. Hos quidem itaque debellando uiriliter cepit, et omnia castra atque spolia eorum diripuit. His itaque peractis reuersus est ad Cesaraugustam cum maxima uictoria et cum infinita substantia, secum ducens illos nobilissimos supra nominatos captiuos. Almuctaman uero et filij eius ac multitudo magna ciuitatis Cesarauguste tam uirorum quam mulierum, cum ingenti leticia gaudentes et exultantes in eius uictoria, processerunt ei obuiam et occurrerunt ei obuiam ad uillam que dicitur Fontes, que est procul a ciuitate.....stadiis. Moratus est itaque ibi Rodericus Didaci Cesaraugustam usque ad obitum Almuctaman. Quo mortuo, successit ei in regno filius eius Almuzahen, cum quo moratus est Rodericus in maximo honore et in maxima ueneratione apud Cesaraugustam. IX. annis.

Quibus itaque expletis, rediit ad patriam suam Castellam, quem recepit honorifice et ylari uultu rex Aldefonsus. Mox dedit ei castrum qui dicitur Donnas cum habitatoribus suis, et castrum Gormaz et Ibia et Campos et Eguma et Berbesca et Langa, que est in extremis locis, cum omnibus suis alfozis et suis habitatoribus. Insuper autem talem dedit absolutionem et concessionem in suo regno, sigillo scriptam et confirmatam, quod omnem terram uel castella que ipsemet posset adquirere a Sarracenis in terra Sarracenorum, iure hereditario prorsus essent sua; non solum sua, uerum etiam filiorum suorum et filiarum suarum et tocius sue generationis. Bella autem et oppiniones bellorum que fecit Rodericus cum militibus suis et socijs, non sunt omnia scripta in libro hoc.

In Era M.CC.XX.VII, eo tempore quo reges cum exercitu suo ab bellum faciendum uel ad terram sibi rebellem adquirendam procedere solebant, exiuit rex Aldefonsus ab urbe Toleti et perrexit in expeditione cum suo exercitu. Rodericus uero Campidoctus tunc morabatur in Castella, suis militibus donans solidatam. Data itaque solidata et congregata multitudine sui exercitus, in Castella ||^{xo} uidelicet .VII. milia uiris in totis armis, peruenit ad extremas partes iuxta alueum qui dicitur Dorio, et transiens per medium alueum iussit figere tentoria sua [in loco] qui dicitur Fraxino. Progrediens autem inde cum exercitu suo, peruenit usque ad locum qui dicitur Calamoxa. Illic autem fixit tentoria sua, et celebrauit ibi Pascha Pentecosten; ibique uenerunt ad eum nuntij regis de Albarrazin, ut uiderent se ambo pariter ad uicem. Visione itaque amborum pariter facta, rex de Albarrazin factus est tributarius regi Aldefonso, et sic in pace permansit.

Rodericus autem exiens inde peruenit in partes Ualentie. Castra uero sua metatus est [in] valle que dicitur Torrens, que est uicina Muro Uetulo. Eodem nimirum tempore comes Barcinonensis, Berengarius nomine, cum omni suo exercitu iacebat super Ualentiam et debellabat eam, faciebatque Cebollam et Liriam contra eam. Vt autem audiuit comes Berengarius quod Rodericus Campidoctus contra illum se appropinquauerat, pauore nimio perterritus est; aduersarij enim erant ambo ad inuicem. Milites uero comitis Berengarij ceperunt tunc se glorificando multa maledicta et multas derisiones deridendo illum de Roderico dicere, et multis minis sibi captionem et carcerationem et mortem minari, quod postea supplere non potuerunt. Hoc autem dictum peruenit ad aures eius. Rodericus autem timens dominum suum regem Aldefonsum noluit pugnare cum comite, quia eius consanguineus erat. Comes autem Berengarius pauore perterritus reliquit in pace Ualentiam, et celeri cursu peruenit ad Rechenna, deinde perrexit ad Cesaraugustam; tandem cum suis remeauit ad propriam terram. Rodericus autem morabatur in illo loco in quo fixerat tentoria sua, circumquaque debellando inimicos suos. Mouens autem se inde peruenit ad Ualentiam, ibique metatus est castra sua. Rex Alcadir regnabat tunc Ualentia, qui statim misit legatos suos cum maximis muneribus et donis innumerabilibus ad Rodericum, et factus est tributarius ; hoc idem fecit et dux de Muro[80]||[vo] Uetulo. Postea surrexit inde Rodericus Campidoctus et introiuit in montana de Alpont; debellauit itaque ea fortiter et deuicit atque depredatus est ea, moratusque est ibi non paucis diebus. Egrediens itaque inde metatus est castra sua in Richenna, ubi moratus est multis diebus.

Interim uero audiuit quod Iuzef rex Hysmaelitarum et alij quamplures reges Sarraceni Yspaniarum, cum gentibus Moabitarum uenerant obsidere castrum de Halahet, quem Christiani tunc possidebant. Tunc itaque isti supranominati reges Sarraceni obsiderent castrum illum de Halahet et adeo debellauerunt eum, donec omnino deficit aqua eis qui intus erant et castrum defendebant. Quod autem audiens rex Aldefonsus, scripsit epistolam suam ad Rodericum, ut uisis litteris statim cum eo ueniret succurrere castro de Halahet et eis qui intus erant prebere auxilium, pugnando contra Iuzef et contra omnes Sarracenos supradictum castrum fortiter dimicantes. Nuntij[s] autem Regis, qui hanc ei dederant epistolam, huiusmodi responsum Rodericus dedit dicens : « Veniat dominus meus Rex, sicut se promisit uenire, quia ego paratus sum bono animo et bona uoluntate secundum mandatum eius succurrere castro illi. Sed quia illi placet ut cum illo pergam, eius Maiestati supplico ut de eius aduentu certificare me dignetur. » Rodericus autem Campidoctus statim surrexit de Richenna et peruenit ad Satiuam. Ibi quidem inuenit eum nuntius regis Aldefonsi, qui dixit ei regem in Toleto esse cum maximo exercitu et cum infinita multitudine militum et peditum. Quo audito, Rodericus ascendit in locum qui dicitur Ortimana; ibidem permansit donec presciret aduentum Regis. Rex namque antea ei per nuntios mandauerat, ut expectaret illum in Belliana; per locum quippe illum se transiturum omnino dixit. Interea ne exercitus eius fame deficeret, Regem expectando erat ibi. De illo autem loco misit Rodericus exploratores suos ad Bellianam et ad partes de Cinxella, cum itaque cognoscere possent Regis aduentum, sine mora statim ei nunciassent. Illis autem exploratoribus Regis aduentum certitudine expectantibus, || [81] descendit ex alia parte et uenit ad fluuium. Vt autem audiuit Rodericus quod Rex iam transierat et antecederet illum, contristatus est ualde. Ilico mouit se cum exercitu suo de parte de Felin; antecedebat milites suos cupiens ueritatem et agnoscere (ueritatem) transitum Regis. Cum uero cognouisset certum eiusdem iam transitum, suum post se uenientem statim reliquit [exercitum] et cum paucis ad Molinam usque peruenit. Ivzef autem ex Sarracenorum et omnes alij reges Yspanie Ysmaelitarum et quecumque ibi erant cetere gentes Moabitarum, audito regis Aldefonsi aduentu, derelicto in pace opido de Halahet, in fugam continuo sunt reuersi, et sic Regis pauore perterriti, antequam accederet, a facie eius fugerunt confusi, quando quidem Rodericus in Molinam peruenit. Tunc Rex uidens quod Sarracenos nullo modo potest consequi, iter remeandi ad Toletum cum exercitu suo iam arripuerat. Rodericus nimium tristis regressus est ad castra sua, que erant in Elso; ibidem quosdam militum suorum, quos de Castella secum adduxerat, ad propria abire permisit.

Interea Castellani sibi in omnibus inuidentes accusauerunt Rodericum apud Regem, dicentes ei quod Rodericus non erat ei fidelis bassallus sed traditor et malus, mentientes et falso ei

obicientes quod ideo ad Regem uenire et in eius auxilio esse noluit, ut Rex et omnes qui cum illo erant a Sarracenis interficerentur. Rex autem, huiusmodi accusatione falsa audita, motus et accensus ira maxima statim iussit ei auferre castella, uillas et omnem honorem quem de illo tenebat. Necnon mandauit intrare suam propriam hereditatem, et, quod deterius est, suam uxorem et liberos in custodia illaqueatos crudeliter retrudi, et aurum et argentum et cuncta que de suis facultatibus inuenire potuit, omnia accipere mandauit. Rodericus autem perpendens et plenarie omnino cognoscens inimicorum suorum dolosis detractionibus et falsis accusationibus Regem contra se fuisse ita iratum, et tantam talemque iniuriam et tam inauditum dedecus eorumdem sugestionibus sibi tam impie intulisse, quendam militem suorum probissimum, qui de injusta reptatione et de false traditionis [81]||[vo] accusatione ipsum uiriliter exconduceret et penitus illum bene excusare[t], protinus ad Regem misit. Qui presentatus Domino Regi hec protulit uerba.

« Rex inclite semperque uenerande, Dominus meus Rodericus, tuus fidelissimus uassallus, me misit ad te, rogans, tuas osculando manus, ut in curia accipias suam excondutionem et excusationem de reptatione, qua inimici sui illum false reptauerunt coram te. Ipse Dominus meus per se pugnauit in tua curia contra alium sibi equalem et similem ; quod miles suus pugnauit pro eo contra alium sibi equalem et similem, quod omnes quicumque tibi dixerunt, quod Rodericus aliquem fraudem uel aliquem dolum tibi fecit in itinere, quo ibas ad Halageth succurrendum, ut te et exercitum tuum Sarraceni interficerent, mentiti sunt ut falsi et mali, et sunt sine bona fide ; vult autem et hoc intermiscere bello, quod nullus comes uel princeps, nullus miles ad te fideliter adiuuandum omnium illorum qui tecum ibant ad supradictum castrum succurrendum, melioris fidei in tuo adiutorio contra illos Sarracenos et contra omnes tuos inimicos fuisse uidetur, quam ille pro posse suo. »

Rex autem, uehementer contra illos iratus, suam excondutio-

nem licet iustissimam non solum ei accipere uerum etiam benigne audire noluit; verumptamen et uxorem et liberos ad eum redire permisit. Rodericus autem uidens quia Rex suam exconductionem recipere dedignatus est, iuditia sue exconductionis et excusationis per se ipsemet iudicauit, et sub scripto posita tandem Regi dixerit.

« Hoc est iuditium, quod iudico ego Rodericus de reptatione qua reptatus sum apud regem Aldefonsum. Habebat me quidem Dominus meus Rex in tali amore et tenore, in quali me prius habere consueuit. Ego uero in curia sua pugnando contra mihi equalem et similem, uel miles meus[2] (et) pugnauit contra sibi equalem et similem, dicens ita : Ego Rodericus iuro tibi illi mecum pugnare uolenti, qui me reptas de itinere illo quo ueniebat rex Aldefonsus ad Halahet preliare cum Sarracenis, non steti pro ulla alia causa quod cum illo non fui, nisi quoniam transitum eius nesciui et a nullo scire potuj || [82] Hec est autem uerissima causa quare cum illo non fuerim. In hoc autem prelio non mentitus sum, sed ita feci sicut ille per portarium suum et per litteras mihi mandauit, et nullo mandatum suum preteriui. In hoc autem prelio quod putauit Rex facere cum Sarracenis castellum supradictum obsidentibus, nullam sibi feci fraudem, nullum ingenium, nullam omnino traditionem nullamque rem malam, pro qua corpus meum minus ualeat aut minus ualere debeat. Nullus autem illorum comitum uel potestatum seu militum, quicumque in exercitu illo cum eo fuerunt, meliorem habuit fidem erga Regem ad bellandos illos supradictos Sarracenos illum adiuuare, quod ego pro posse meo. Iuro tibi sic, quod quecumque tibi dico, totum est uerum, et si mentior, tradat me Deus in manus tuas, ad faciendam uoluntatem tuam super me. Sin autem, liberet me Deus iustus iudex a falsa reptatione. Idem et tale iuramentum faciat miles meus contra militem secum super hanc reptationem pugnare uolentem. »

Hoc est secundum iuramentum sui iuditij, quod iudicauit Rodericus.

« Ego Rodericus juro tibi militi illi mecum pugnare uolenti, qui me reptas de illo aduentu Regis quo ueniebat ad Halahet, quia non cognoui aduentus Regis certitudinem et nullo modo scire potui quod ante me erat, donec audiui a relatoribus quod iam reuertebatur ad Toletum. Si ego prescissem, cum uenissem usque in Mostellim, uerum tibi dico quia nisi omnino infirmus aut captus aut mortuus in Molina me presentarem Regi, et perambularem cum illo ad Alageth et adiuuarem illum in sua lite, si eam haberet cum Sarracenis, cum bona fide et cum bona ueritate absque ullo malo ingenio. Super hoc tibi iuro per Deum et per Sanctos eius, quod nichil mali cogitaui neque locutus sum neque contra Regem, pro quo corpus meum minus ualeat. Si autem, in aliquo de his .que supra tibi dixi mentior, tradat me Deus in manus tuas ad faciendam uoluntatem tuam super me. Sin autem, eripiat me Deus, qui est iustus iudex, a falsa reptatione. Hoc idem meus miles iuret, et hoc idem suppleat contra militem pro hac reptatione secum pugnare uolentem. »

[83]||[vo] Hoc est tertium iuramentum.

« Ego Rodericus iuro tibi militi illi qui me reptas de illo aduentu Regis, quo uenit ad Halaheth et ibi debellaret cum Sarracenis castrum illum obsidentibus, litteras illas per bonam fidem et per bonam ueritatem absque ullo malo ingenio et absque ulla mala arte sibi misi. Non enim supradictas litteras ad hoc misi, ut ipse deuinceretur uel caperetur a Sarracenis suis inimicis. Cum autem ille ad supradictum oppidum cum exercitu suo pergeret, tunc mihi nuntium suum misit in Belliana, ibique aduentum eius expectarem. Sic itaque iuxta mandatum eius feci. Vere tibi iuro et dico quia contra Regem numquam cogitaui nec locutus sum, nec feci traditionem nec mala[m] rem, pro qua corpus meum minus ualeat, aut unde debeam perdere meum honorem aut meam peccuniam, uel pro qua Rex faceret super me talem et tam magnum et tam inauditum desonorem, sicuti fecit. Sic tibi iuro per Deum et per Sanctos eius, quia hoc quod iuro, uerum iuro. Si uero in aliquo de his que tibi superius dixerim mentior, tradat me Deus in manus tuas ad faciendam uoluntatem tuam super me. Sin autem, ut prius, et iustus iudex liberet me a tam falsissima reptatione. Hoc idem iuret, et suppleat meus miles contra militem contra se ac pro hac reptatione secum pugnare uolentem. »

Hoc est quartum iuramentum.

« Ego Rodericus iuro tibi militi Regis illi mecum pugnare uolenti, per Deum et Sanctos eius, quia ex eo die in quo illum recepi pro seniore in Toleto, usque ad illum diem in quo cognoui quod crudeliter et tam sin[e] ratione meam uxorem captiuauit, et totum meum honorem quem in regno suo habebam mihi penitus abstulit, nullum malum de eo dixi, neque malum cogitaui, neque aliquid contra eum feci, pro quo malum habeam uel corpus meum minus ualeat. Sine merito, sine ratione et absque omni culpa abtulit mihi meum honorem, et captiuauit meam uxorem, tam magnum et crudelissimum mihi fecit desonorem. Iuro autem tibi militi illi mecum pugnare uolenti quod illud quod superius dixi, [uerum est, ac si] mentior, tradet me Deus in manus tuas ad faciendam uoluntatem tuam super me. Sin autem, ||[83] uerissimus et pijssimus iudex liberet me a falsissima reptatione. Hoc idem et non aliud iuret, et suppleat meus miles contra militem secum pugnare uolentem. »

« Hoc nimirum est iuditium, quod ego Rodericus audaciter iudico et firmiter afirmo : « Si unus ex istis .IIIJ. iuramentis, que superius scripsi, Rex accipere uoluerit, eligat quodcumque illorum sibi placuerit, et ego libenter illud complebo. Si uero sibi non placuerit, paratus sum pugnare cum milite Regis qui sit mihi miles equalis, et talis qualis ego eram apud Regem, cum eram in amore eius. Judico quia sic me debeo exconducere apud Regem et Imperatorem, si me reptat. Si quis autem me de isto iuditio uituperare aut reprehendere uoluerit, et melius et iustius istud iuditium super hanc reptationem dederit, scribat illud et scriptum mittat eum ad me, qualiter me debeam exconducere et saluare. Si quidem cognouero illud esse plus rectum et iustum quam meum libenter illud recipiam, et secundum illud me exconducam et saluem. Sin autem, pugnabo super iuditium meum, aut miles meus pro me. Si forte ille fuerit uictus, accipiat iuditium meum. Si uero fuerit uictus [meus miles], recipiat iuditium suum. »

Rex autem nec huiusmodi iuditia ab ipso Roderico iudicata, nec suam excondutionem et saluationem recipere uoluit.

Postquam uero Rex ad Toletum remeauit, Rodericus metatus est castra sua in Elso ; ibidem diem Natalis Domini celebrauit. Celebrato itaque Pascha, mouit se inde, abijt per maritima loca, donec ad Pelope peruenit, vbi erat quedam spelunca maxima repleta peccunia ; qui eam obsedit eamque fortiter debellauit. Consumatisque paucis diebus, deuicit bellantes et uiriliter ingressus est eam. Inuenit autem in ea multum aurum et argentum et sericum et uestes preciosas sine numero. Ditatus itaque inuente peccunie sufficientia, recessit inde, et transiuit ac peruenit ad portum Tarnani, et ante urbem Denie, in loco qui dicitur Ondia, reparauit quendam castrum fecitque eum fortem. Sanctum uero quadragesime ieiunium ibidem ieiunauit, et Resurrectionis Jesu-Cristi Domini Nostri Pascha in eodem [83]||[v°] loco celebrauit.

In quo nimirum loco Alfagib, qui tunc terre illius erat rex et in terra illa regnabat, nuntium pro pace secum habenda ad eum misit. Qua uero pace cum eo firmiter statuta et firmata, nunti Sarraceni reuersi sunt ad Alfagib. Rodericus autem recessit inde cum exercitu suo, et peruenit in partes Ualentie. Rex autem Alfagib egressus est de finibus Leride et Tortoxe, et peruenit ad Murum Uetulum.

Vt autem audiuit Alcadir, qui tunc temporis erat rex Ualentie, quod rex Alfagib pacificauerat cum Roderico, perterritus est ualde nimiumque uehementer expauit. Inito itaque cum suis hominibus consilio, cum maximis et innumerabilibus muneribus peccuniarum ad Rodericum nuntios ili[c]o direxit. Qui munera multa et innumerabilia que portabant eidem Roderico contulerunt, et sic regem Ualentie cum eo amicabiliter pacificauerunt. Simili modo de omnibus castellis que erant rebellia regi Ualentie suoque imperio parere dedignantia, multa et innumerabilia tributa atque dona Rodericus accepit.

Rex autem Alfagib, ut audiuit quod Alcadir rex Ualentie pacificauerat cum Roderico, nimio perculsus pauore, media nocte de Muro Uetulo recessit, et sic perterritus uehementer de partibus illis fugijt. Rodericus autem egressus est de partibus Ualentie et peruenit in Burriana. Ibidem uero certa relatione audiuit, quod Alfagib Leride et Tortoxe conducere temptabat Sanctium regem Aragonensium, et Berengarium comitem Barcinonensium, et Ermengaldum comitem Urgelensem contra illum, ut posset eum eiicere et expellere de terra sua et omnibus finibus regni sui. Rex autem Sanctius et comes Ermengaldus noluerunt adquiescere precibus eius nec illum adiuuare contra Rodericum. Rodericus autem permansit in Burriana tanquam lapis immobilis. Mox Rodericus recessit de Burriana et ascendit in montana de Morella. Ibi enim erat cibariorum multa copia et habundantia, peccora quoque innumerabilia et copiosa.

Berengarius comes uero Barcinonensis, inito cum Alfagib consilio, ab ||[84] eo quidem maxima iam accepta peccunia, statim immensum exercitum egressus est de Barcinona et peruenit in partibus Cesarauguste. In Calamosca uero, in terra de Albararzin, metatus est castra sua. Tunc autem Comes cum paucis ad Almuzahen regem Cesaraguste, qui erat in Doaracham, locutusque est cum eo de pace inter se habenda. Accepta itaque ab Almuzahen peccunia, pacificati sunt inter se. Rex autem Almuzahen prece Comitis perrexit una cum Comite ad regem Aldefonsum, qui tunc erat in partibus de Auron. Rogauit quidem Regem multis precibus, utmilitum suorum auxilium ei contra Rodericum preberet. Eius quippe precibus adquiescere Rex noluit, et Comes cum suis comilitonibus Bernaldo et Giraldo Alaman et Dorea, cum maximo exercitu peruenit ad Calamoxa[m]. Facta est ibi et congregata multitudo maxima bellantium contra Rodericum.

In illo tempore Rodericus morabatur in montanis, in loco qui dicitur Iber, ibique ei nuntium rex Almuzahen misit, qui ei cum eo comitem Barcinonensem pugnare omnino paratum fuisse nuntiauit. Rodericus nuntio hec sibi dicenti ylari uultu huiusmodi dedit responsum : « Almuzahen Cesarauguste regi, meo amico fideli. Quoniam Comitis consilium et futuri de proximo belli contra me muniti dispositionem eiusdem Comitis mihi patefecit, gratias amicabiles refero. Comitem uero et suorum bellatorum multitudinem omnino uilipendio, et sperno, et in loco isto cum Dei auxilio libenter eum expectabo. Si autem uenerit, cum illo proculdubio debellabo. »

Berengarius ergo comes cum ingenti exercitu suo per montana usque ad proximum locum, ubi Rodericus erat, peruenit, et tentoria sua parum procul iuxta Roderici fixit. Quadam uero nocte misit exploratores, qui explorauerunt et prescierunt castra Roderici super se immensum Hab'ntiarum montem. Ipsa autem castra fixa erant sub monte. Altera autem die, Comes scribere fecit epistolam huiusmodi in se legationem continentem, et scriptam Roderico per nuntium misit.

« Ego Berengarius comes Barcinonensium cum meis militibus dico tibi Roderico, quia uidimus tuam epistolam quam misisti ad Almuzahen, et dixisti ei [illegible] quod eam nobis ostenderet, que nos derisit ac nimium uituperauit atque ad maximam insaniam nos excitauit. Antea nobis feceras quamplures iniurias, quibus deberemus contra te esse infesti et ualde irati; quanto magis pro derisione qua per epistolam tuam nos spreuisti et derisisti, debemus tibi esse inimici et aduersarii! Peccuniam nostram, quam nobis abstulisti, adhuc penes te habeam. Deus autem, qui potens est, de tantis iniurijs a te nobis illatis uindicabit. Aliam quoque deteriorem iniuriam et derisionem nobis fecisti, qui nostris uxoribus nos assimilasti. Nos autem nolumus tam nephanda derisione te deridere neque tuos homines; sed rogamus et obsecramus Deum celi, ut ille tradat te in manus nostras et in potestate nostra, quod possimus tibi mons-

trare quam plus ualemus quam nostre mulieres. Dixisti etiam rege Almuzahen, quia si nos ueniremus ad te tecum [de]bellare, plus citjus exires nobis obuiam quam ipse posset reuerti in Monteson; et si nos tardaremus uenire contra te, tu nobis in uia occurr[er]es. Precamur ergo te multum, ut iam nos non uituperes ob hoc quod hodie non descendimus ad te; ideo enim hoc facimus, quia uolumus nos certificare de tuo exercitu et de tuo contenimento. Videmus namque quia una cum tuo monte confidens, in illo uis nobiscum debellare. Videmus etiam et cognoscjmus, quia montes et corui et cornelle et nisi et aquile et fere omne genus auium sunt dij tui, quia plus confidis in augurijs eorum quam in Deo. Nos autem credimus et adoramus unum Deum, qui nos de te uindicet, et in manibus nostris te tradat. Scias uero ueritatem, quod cras ad auroram, Deo uolente, uidebis nos prope te et ante te. Si autem exieris ad nos in plano et separaberis te a monte tuo, eris ipse Rodericus quem dicunt bellatorem et Campeatorem. Si autem hoc factum nolueris, eris talis qualem dicunt in uulgo Castellani aleuoso, et in uulgo Francorum bauzador et fraudator. Nichil quippe tibi prestavit ostendere similitudinem tanti roboris te |[85] habere; non leuabimus super te nec discedemus a te, quousque uenias in manibus meis mortuus aut captiuus et ferr[e]is compedibus illaqueatus. Tandem uero faciemus de te alboroz. Illud idem quod scripsisti, fecisti tu ipse de nobis. Deus autem uindicet suas Ecclesias, quas uiolenter confregisti et uiolasti.»

Prelecta hac epistola coram Roderico et ab eo audita, iussit continuo suam epistolam scribere et Comiti mittere, que hanc continet responsionem.

« Ego Rodericus, simul cum meis socijs, tibi Berengario comiti et tuis hominibus salutem. Scias quia tuam audiui cartam, et quod in ea continebitur totum intellexi. In ea namque dixisti quia scripsi-[sti] ad Almuzahen meam cartam, in qua tu et tuos homines derisi et blasphemaui; uerum certe dixisti. Blasphemaui enim te et tuos. et adhuc blasphemo. Dicam ergo tibi pro quo te uituperaui. Quan-

doquidem eras cum Almuzahen in partibus Calataiub, coram illo tunc blasphemaui, dicens ei quia propter tuum pauorem non eram ausus intrare istas terras. Tui quoque homines, uidelicet Raymundus de Baran et alij milites qui cum eo erant, hoc idem regi Aldefonso me deridendo dixerunt in Castella coram Castellanis. Tu ipse etiam, Almuzahen presente existente, dixisti regi Aldefonso qui[a] mecum omnino pugnasse[s], et de terris de Alfagib ui(n)ctum me quidem eiecisses, et in terris supradictis te expectare nullo modo auderem. Sed Regis amore hoc tunc facere dimisisti, et eius amore me actenus non inquietasti, et quia eius eram vassallus, idcirco dedecus mihi inferre pepercisti et mihi noluisti. Propter huiusmodi conuitia tali derisione mihi illata, te et tuos derisi et der[r]idebo, et uestris uxoribus propter uestras femineas uires vos coequiparaui et assimilaui. Nunc autem non poteris te excusare quin mecum pugnes, si expugnare ausus fueris. Si autem ad me uenire recusaueris, me quicumque in eius amore habebit. Si autem ausus es ad me uenire cum exercitu tuo, iam ueni metumque non formideo. Non credo te ignorare, quod tibi[85]||[vo] et tuis hominibus fecerim qualiter uobis nocuerim. Michi quidem notum est quod fecisti conuenientiam cum Alfagib, quod daret tibi peccuniam, et tu de terris suis omnino me expelleres atque ei[i]ceres. Credo namque quia promissa implere formidabis, et ad me uenire mecumque pugnare minime penitus audebis ; ad me autem uenire non recuses, quia in planiori loco, qui planior in cunctis terris istis uidetur esse, uideor. In rei certitudine tibi dico, quia si tu et tui ad me uenire uolueris, non proderit uobis. Dabo quidem uobis uestram solidatam, sicut dare uobis soleo, si forte uenire ad me ausi fueritis. Si autem ad me uenire recusaueris mecumque pugnare ausus non fueris, mittam litteras meas ad Dominum regem Aldefonsum, et nuntios mittam ad Almuzahen, dicam eis quia quicquid promisisti et supplendum te iactasti et uentilasti, pauore meo perterritus adimplere nequisti. Non solum his duobus Regibus, uerum et uniuersis nobilibus tam Christianis quam Sarracenis hoc innotescere et scire omnino faciam.

Tam uero Christiani quam Sarraceni, te a me fuisse captum, et peccuniam tuam et peccuniam omnium tuorum penes me esse habitam, proculdubio sciant. Nunc autem in plano te expecto securo et robusto animo. Si forte ad me uenire conaberis, ibidem tue peccunie partem uidebis, sed non ad tuum prouectum, imo ad tuum detrimentum. Te autem superfluis iactando uerbis, me iam uictum aut captum aut mortuum in manu tua necnon ducere(m) retulisti : hoc autem in manu Dei est, et non in tua. Me autem falsissime delu[d]endo dixisti, quod feci aleue ad Forum Castelle aut bauzia ad Forum Gallie, quod sane proprio ore plane mentitus es. Nunquam enim feci tale quid : ipse autem feci[t] istud, qui iam probatus est in talibus traditionibus, quem tu bene cognoscis, et plures tam Christiani quam Pagani talem qualem ego dico, esse proculdubio cognoscunt. Jam diu est, ex quo contemdimus uerbis litigiosis : parcamus huiusmodi uerbis, et sicut proborum militum mos est, inter nos diuidatur huiusmodi litigium uiribus armorum ||[86] nobilibus. Veni et noli tardare. Accipies quidem a me tuam solidatam, quam tibi dare soleo. »

Cum autem Berengarius cum omnibus suis hanc audisset epistolam, omnes unanimiter inmensa accensi sunt ira. Accepto itaque consilio, quosdam milites nocte continuo miserunt, qui furtim montem, qui super castra Roderici eminebat, ascend[er]ent et caperent, existimantes enim ab ipso monte castra Roderici disrumpere, eiusdem omnia tentoria inuadere atque penitus accipere. Venientes itaque nocte preocupauerunt supradictum montem et tenuerunt illum, Roderico nesciente. Altera uero die summo mane, Comes et sui armati, uociferantes circa castra Roderici, et ilico irruerunt in eos. Quod autem perspiciens Rodericus dentibus suis cepit fremere, et militibus suis loricas statim iussit induere, et acies contra aduersarios uiriliter preparare. Rodericus autem irruit uelocr impetu in aciem Comitis, quem in primo certamine mouit et deuicit ; tamen in ipso certamine uiriliter bellando Rodericus de equo suo in terram cecidit, corpusque autem eius statim illisum et uulneratum extitit. Verumptamen

milites a bello non destit(u)erunt, ymo robustis animis pugnauerunt, donec et Comitem et omnem exercitum suum deuicerunt atque uiriliter superauerunt. Multis quidem et innumerabilibus illorum interfectis atque peremptis, tandem eundem Comitem ceperunt et captum cum .v. fere milibus suis in prelio illo captis [ad] Rodericum perduxerunt. Rodericus uero quosdam uidelicet Dominum Bernaldum, Giraldum Alaman, Raymundum Muroni, Ricardum Guilelmi, atque alios quam plures et innumerabiles nobilissimos, una cum eodem Comite, teneri et sub custodia peruigili haberi atque retrudi precepit. Facta est itaque uictoria semper laudanda et memoranda in manu Roderici super comitem Berengarium et super exercitum eius. Milites autem Roderici depredati sunt omnia castra atque tentoria Berengarij comitis acceperuntque omnia spolia que in eis receperunt, uidelicet multa uasa aurea et argentea, et uestes preciosas, [86]||[vo] mulos et equos palafredos, lanceas, loricas, scuta, et omnia bona quecumque acceperunt, cuncta integra et salua fide bona Roderico presentauerunt atque contulerunt.

Comes autem Berengarius, uidens et cognoscens se adeo uerberatum et confusum et in manu Roderici captum, humilis misericordiam ei petens, ante Roderici in suo tentorios edentis peruenit, eique indulgentiam multa prece expetijt. Rodericus autem eum benigne recipere noluit, neque iuxta eum in tentorio suo sedere permisit, sed foris extra tentoria eum custodiri a militibus suis iussit; victualia quippe sibi largiter ibidem dari sollicite precepit; tandem uero liberum ad terram reuerti sibi concessit. At ubi Rodericus sui corporis sanitatem post paucos dies recepit, cum Domno Berengario et Giraldo Alaman, quatenus ob redemptionem suam .Lxxx. milia marcas de auro Ualentie sibi darent, pactum instituit. Ceteri omnes captiui ad libitum Roderici pro sua redemptione innumerabiles peccunias, iam sub numero certo significatas, se sibi daturos, obligauerunt ac promise[runt]. Mox ad propria reuertuntur, et inde tandem auri et argenti maximam copiam et filios et parentes, pro redemptione iam instituta, done eam persoluerent, in pignore uolentes secum afferentes ad Rodericum, cum his qui secum ducebant, festinatione non pigra remeauerunt, sibique omnia danda et complenda in sua posita presentia se proculdubio dixerunt. Cum itaque Rodericus hec uideret, habito apud se suo consilio, pietatis intuitu motus, non solum eos ad terram suam liberos abire permisit, uerum etiam omnem redemptionem ei(u)sdem dimisit. Illi autem ob tantam misericordiam ab eo habitam, eius nobilitati et pietati gratias deuotissime referentes et sibi seruire promittentes, cum omnibus rebus suis et cum ingenti honore ad terram suam gaudentes sunt reuersi.

Rodericus autem peruenit in partes Cesarauguste ad locum qui dicitur Salarca, moratusque est ibi quasi duobus mensibus. Egressus autem inde uenit ad Darocam, vbi sane multis est diebus. Erat ibi nimia cibariorum copia et peccorum habundantia, in quo loco graui quidem morbo Rodericus infirmatus est. Tunc Rodericus ad Almuzahen regem || [87] Cesarauguste quosdam milites cum litteris suis misit, qui eum Cesaraugustam inuenerunt, eique litteras quas portabant contulerunt. In qua nimirum urbe comitem Berengarium cum militibus suis nobilibus, una cum prefato Rege sedente, inuenerunt. Cum itaque Comes nuntios istos Roderici esse et mil[it]es sciret, eosdem ad se uenire permisit, continuo mandauit, et huiusmodi nuntiationem ad Rodericum ferendam eis diligenter comisit. Quibus sic ait : « Rodericum meum amicum ex parte mea nimium salutate, eiusque me uerum uelle esse amicum et in cunctis necessitatibus suis coadiutorem, proculdubio eidem narrare non desista[ti]s. » Quo audito, ad Rodericum iam conualentem et sanum prefati nuntij deportauerunt, et Comitis legationem eidem seriatim diligenter [retulerunt]. Rodericus uero, audita pro nichilo habens, suum amicum esse et cum illo pacem habere se omnino negauit. Cui sui milites et primates dixerunt : « Quid est hoc ? quid mali unquam fecit tibi comes Berengarius, quod tu non uis pacem habere cum illo ? Ipsum quidem deuictum ac superatum, uinc-tum atque captum in manu tua potencialiter tenuisti, omnesque suas gazas et diuitias eidem uiriliter abstulisti, et non uis pacem cum illo? Non enim ipsum tu rogas, sed ille te rogat quod tecum pacem habeat. » Militum itaque nobilium suorum consilio demum adquieuit, et cum eo pacem habiturum se omnino promisit. Nuntij uero ad Cesaraugustam continuo reuertentes, Rodericum suum uelle esse amicum et cum eo pacem habiturum, comiti Berengario et suis nobilibus diligenter retulerunt. Quo audito, Comes et sui nimium gauisi sunt. Tunc Comes egressus de Cesaraugusta ad Rodericum et ad sua castra statim uenit, ibique amicitia et pax inter utrumque amicabiliter instituta dinoscitur. Comes autem Yspanie partem quandam suo imperio subditam in protectione et in manu Roderici tunc posuit; pariter itaque ambo ad loca maritima sibi proxima ilico descenderunt. Rodericus quippe metatus est castra sua in Burriana; Berengarius autem recedens a Roderico transiuit Albernium Ibri, et in terram suam est regressus. Rodericus uero moratus est in Burriana in partibus Ualentie; super Cepullam [87] || [vo] uero Pascha Domini celebrauit.

Tunc nimirum Lirie, castrum Ualentie uicinum, cum suo exercitu obsedit ibique militibus suis stipendia largissima distribuit. Quo in loco regine regis Aldefonsi uxoris et amicorum suorum littere ad eum pertulerunt, que significauerunt ei regem Aldefonsum contra Sarracenos ire et cum eisdem bellum inire omnino uelle, atque disposuit proculdubio habuisse. Jam enim Granatam et omnes fines eius Sarraceni ceperant. Hec nimium erat causa quare Rex contra Sarracenos pugnare ibat. Per litteras namque istas consuluerunt ei amici eius, quod, remota omni occasione, sub ueloci cursu ad Regem Sarracenos cum exercitu suo iam pergentem iret, et in bello illo una cum Rege esset, et cum omni exercitu suo Regis exèrcitui illum adiuuando se insereret, et sic Regis gratiam et amorem proculdubio statim recuperaret. Amicorum itaque suorum consilio obtemperans, Lirie castrum ab eo tam bello quam fame et siti undique ualde coactum et fere iam in redendo se funditus creditum illico reliquit, et cum omni exercitu suo per longa itinera ad Regem continuo perrexit. Regem uero in partibus Cordoue, in loco qui dicitur [Martos ?] inuenit.

Rex autem audiens quod Rodericus ueniret, statim exiuit ei obuiam, et in pace nimiumque honorifice eum recepit. Ambo itaque pariter prope ciuitatem Granatam uenerunt. Rex uero per montana loca, in loco qui dicitur Libriella, omnia sua tentoria figi atque locari iussit. Rodericus autem per planitiem, in loco qui erat ante castra Regis ad euitanda et uigilanda regia castra sua fixit tentoria, quod autem Regi ualde displicuit. Tunc Rex ductus inuidia ait suis : « Videte et considerate qualem iniuriam et quale dedecus nobis Rodericus infert. Hodie quidem post nos ex longo itinere quasi fessus et fatigatus uenit ; modo uero nos precedit et ante nos tentoria sua fixit. » Omnes fere sui inuidia tacti uerum dixisse Regi pariter responderunt, et Rodericum de audacter nimia presumptione, sibi in omnibus inuidentes, coram Rege illum uituperauerunt. Rex autem in eodem loco. VI. permansit ||[88] diebus. Juzeph uero, rex Moabitarum et Sarracenorum, regem Aldefonsum expectare et cum eo pugnare non audens, eiusdem Regis pauore perterritus, una cum exercitu suo fugijt, et a partibus illi[s] clam recessit. Cum itaque rex Aldefonsus Iuzeph regem Sarracenorum eius pauore fugisse et a partibus clam recessisse certa ueritate cognosceret, ad Toletum reuerti statim mandauit.

Ad Toletum itaque rediens, usque ad castrum qui dicitur Ubeda, quod est super alueum de Alcheuir, peruenit. Rodericus uero iuxta eundem alueum castra sua figi atque statui sui precepit. Ibidem Rex iratis et non blandis uerbis Rodericum aspere tradidit ; multis quidem et uarijs causis sed non ueris eum redarguit. Adeo sane contra illum uehementer motus et accensus est ira, quod illum capere decreuit ac uoluit. Quod Rodericus perpendens et plenarie signis certis cognoscens, omnia Regis uerborum conuitia pacienter sustinuit. In eadem itaque superueniente nocte a Rege, non sine pauore, Rodericus recessit et ad sua castra statim redijt. Plures vero militum suorum tunc Rodericum reliquerunt et ad castra Regis se transtulerunt; derelicto itaque Roderico domino suo, Regis seruitio se contulerunt.

Rex autem a Roderico aliquantis litigiosis se de iniuria a Rege sibi illata excusando exacerbatus et a furore nimio illatus, ad Toletum cum exercitu suo regreditur. Rodericus uero moles[tus] nimiumque mestus, non modico itineris labore in partes Ualentie protinus secessit; multis quidem diebus ibidem permansit. Quo in loco quendam castrum, qui dicitur Pennacatel, quod Sarraceni funditus destruxerant, multis et firmis edificiorum munitionibus rehedificauit, atque muro inexpugnabili undique cinxit, firmiterque illud construxit. Tam militum quam peditum multitudine omnibus armorum generibus sufficienter munitum, prefatum castrum tandem nimium muniuit; panis etiam et uini et carnis copia illud copiose repleuit. Egrediens igitur inde ad Ualentiam descendit; deinde uero ad Morellam, ubi non multis moratus est diebus, descendit ibique diem natalis Domini sollempniter celebrauit. Hoc autem in loco ad eum quidam homo uenit, [38]||[vo] qui castrum Borge uicinum Tutele sibi furto penitus dare promisit. Inito itaque consilio, contra castrum Borge cum gente sua státim ire cepit, et ecce subito Almuzahen regis Cesarauguste nuntius ad eum uenit, qui Almuzahen a rege Sanctio Aragonensium esse ualde coactum et opressum eidem nuntiauit. Postquam nuntius iste a Roderico recessit, Rodericus nocte iuxta Cesaraugustam occulte non paucis peruenit, ibique utique hominem qui ei Borge castrum dandum promisit, fuisse omnino menti[t]um probauit. Verumptamen ad castra redire noluit, sed in loco eodem in quo erat permansit; quo maiores et meliores Cesaraugustane urbis ciues ad eum uenerunt. Illum nimirum, ut cum Rege suo amorem et amicitiam et pacem habere uellet, multis obsecrationibus efflagitauerunt. Factum est autem, quod Almuzahen et Rodericus uiderunt se ad inuicem, et firmauerunt inter se firmissimam pacem.

Tunc autem Rodericus iam cum exercitu suo ad Cesaraugustam peruenit, ibique alueum transiuit, atque castra sua in loco qui dicitur Fraga fixit. Quo audito, rex Sanctius Aragonensis una cum filio suo Petro rege inmensum exercitum congregari precepit. Congregato itaque exercitu, tentoria sua in loco qui dicitur Gorreia figere protinus iussit. Rex autem et filius eius tunc miserunt ad Rodericum legatos pacificos, amoris et pacis legationem ferentes. Quo audito et cognito, Rodericus eos honorifice et hylari uultu eos recepit, et cum (eos) rege Sanctio et cum filio eius pacem et amorem omnino se uelle habere eisdem respondit. Suos quoque nuntios, qui uerba pacem significantia Regi et filio eius narrarent, eis continuo direxit. Rex autem Sanctius et filius eius et Rodericus, uidentes se insimul, et amorem et pacem inter se habendam indissolubili laqueo firmissime instituerunt. Roderici quoque amore et prece, (et) Sanctius rex cum Almuzahen pacem confirmauit; pacificatus est itaque cum eo amicabiliter, Roderico mediante et operante. Hoc autem peracto, ad terram suam Sanctius rex continuo redijt. Rodericus uero in Cesaraugusta apud regem Almuzahen in maximo honore diebus permansit non paucis.

||[89] Egressus tandem de Cesaraugusta, cum maximo et innumerabili exercitu intrauit terras de Calagurra et de Nagera, qui erant in regno regis Aldefonsi et sub eiusdem imperio. Tunc autem uiriliter debellando et Aluerith et Lucronium cepit. Ingentem nimirum atque mestabilem et ualde lacrimabilem predam, et dirum et impium atque uastum inremediabili flamma incendium per omnes terras illas seussime et immisericorditer fecit. Dira itaque impia depredatione omnem terram prefatam deuastauit et destruxit, eiusque diujtijs et peccunijs atque omnibus eius spolijs eam omnino denudauit, et penes se cuncta habuit. Egrediens itaque de loco illo, cum ingenti militia peruenit ad castrum qui dicitur Alfarum, quod uiriliter debellauit et illico cepit. Quo in loco Garsia Ordoniz et omnium parentum suorum nuntij ad eum uenerunt, qui ex parte Comitis et omnium paren-

tum suorum, ut ibidem. vii. diebus et non amplius expectaret, [e]idem retulerunt; si uero id ageret, Comes cum parentibus suis cum eo pugnare proculdubio non dubitaret. Quibus et Comitem et omnes parentes suos. vii. diebus eidem expectare, et cum eisdem libenter pugnare, uultu ylari respondit. Comes autem Garsias Ordoniz congregauit omnes parentes suos et potentes, potestates et principes, qui dominabantur omni terre illi qui est ab urbe que dicitur Zamora usque in Pampilonam. Congregato itaque inmenso et innumerabili militum et peditum exercitu, supradictus Comes una cum eadem gentium multitudine usque ad locum qui dicitur Aluerith peruenit. Vltra itaque ire et cum Roderico bellum inire nimium pauens et formidans, ex loco isto ad terram suam una cum exercitu suo exterritus incunctant[er] remeauit. Rodericus autem usque in die. vii. presignata ibidem eos tanquam lapis immobilis robusto animo gaudenter expectauit. Tunc autem certa sibi relatum est narratione, quod Comes et uniuersi qui cum illo erant, a promisso se subtrahentes bello et cum illo pugnare pauentes, iam repatriauerant seseque disperserant, necnon et [89]||[vo] Aluerith sine milite desertum et uacuum reliquerant. Calagurre namque et omni regione quam Rodericus depredatus fuerat, per manum regis Aldefonsi Garsias comes Roderici inimicus tunc dominabatur. Propter Comitis inimicitiam et propter eius dedecus, prefatam terram Rodericus flamma ignis incendit, eamque fere destruxit atque deuastauit. Rodericus autem audiens, ut dictum est, quod eius pauore Comes cum gente sua iam repatriauerat et Aluerith sine milite desertum reliquerat, egressus cum exercitu suo de Alfaro ad Cesaraugustam peruenit; ibidem uero multis diebus inmenso honore permansit, omnisque terre illius uindemias, que non erant subdita imperio Almuzahen, ad opus suum collegit atque uindemiauit.

Egressus autem cum exercitu suo de Cesaraugusta, cepit iter arripere ad Ualentiam; et dum iter ageret, ei quidam nuntius occurrit, qui barbaras Sarracenorum gentes ad orientales partes peruenisse easque seuissime deuastasse, et etiam usque ad Ualen-

tiam accessisse, necnon eamdem iam obtinuisse, idem seriatim retulit ; quod deterius est, Alcadir regis Ualentie traditione omnes homines Ualentie ille barbare gentes interfecerunt, et huiusmodi malum peractum peregerunt, ipsique tandem indicauit. Rodericus autem hoc audiens, celeri cursu ad opidum Cepulle peruenit eumque statim obsedit. Nis[i] uero tam cito uenisset, ille barbare gentes Yspaniam totam usque ad Cesaraugustam et Leridam iam preoccupassent atque omnino obtinuissent. Castrum quidem Cepulle undique fortiter debellatum tunc continuo cepit ; villam uero in eodem populauit et construxit, eamque munitionibus et fortissimis turribus circumcinxit atque muniuit, ad cuius nimirum populationem ex circumstantibus uillis plures gentes uenerunt et in eadem habitauerunt. Homines ergo Ualentie qui de morte euaserant, erant subditi illis barbaris qui dicebantur Moabite, et sub eorum imperio se habebant, et apud illos mistice ||[90] manebant. Mense autem iulio, cum messes sunt colligende, Rodericus fixit castra sua iuxta Ualentiam. Messes quidem illorum cum equis cepit comedere eorumque domus forinsecas destruere. Cum autem Ualentie habitatores perspicerent, ad illum legatos ilico miserunt, eum rogantes nimiumque exorantes, quatinus eis pacificus esset et Moabitas una cum eis habitare permitteret. Ille uero nullo modo eis pacificum se esse permisit, nisi Moabitas a se disiungerent et ab urbe eos omnino e[j]icerent ; quod utique illi facere noluerunt, sed se in urbe incluserunt. Ille uero quandam Ualentie partem, que dicitur Uilla Noua, adeo fortissime debellauit quousque eam cepit, omnibus diuitijs, et peccunijs quas in ea inuenit eam funditus expoliauit. Interim autem alteram urbis partem, que appellatur Alcundia, debellauit et cepit. Homines uero qui in loco huius partis habitabant, submiserunt se et subiugauerunt se continuo sub dominio et imperio suo. Ille autem iam sibi subiugatos in domibus suis et in loco suo cum omnibus rebus suis liberos in pace restituit. Ceteri autem homines urbis Ualentie habitatores hoc perspicientes ualde conterriti sunt ; Moabitas uero statim et secundum statutum

Roderici mandatum ab urbe sua expulerunt, et sub eiusdem imperio se subiugauerunt. Ipse uero usque ad Deniam liberos et pacificos manere et quietos uiuere permisit.

Juzeph autem paulo ante sibi litteras di[re]xerat, in quibus, quod nullomodo Ualentie terram intrare auderet, omnino ei mandauerat. Quo audito, Rodericus iratus ualde uidetur. Flam[m]ea itaque accensus ira, nimium eum spreuit et uerba illusionum eidem direxit, necnon ad omnes potestates et duces Yspaniarum litteras suas misit, in quibus, quod Iuzeph eius pauore mare transire, ad Ualentiam uenire non audebat, eisdem significantia. Quod autem Iuzeph audiens, inmensum et innumerabilem exercitum congregari ilico mandauit, illumque transfretare sine dilatione denique sollicitus precepit. Interea uero Rodericus hominibus in Ualentia habitantibus dulci parabola hoc ɔ°||v° ait : « Homines Ualentie, usque ad mensem augustum spatium et indutias uobis libenter dabo. Si uero interim Iuzeph uenerit et uobis succurrerit, et me de istis terris uictum eiecerit, et de meo imperio uos liberauerit, servite illi et estote sub imperio eius. Si autem hoc facere non ualuerit, seruite mihi et estote mei. » Sermo quidem iste omnibus Ualentie hominibus placuit. Ad Iuzeph et ad omnes Yspaniarum duces quicumque erant sub imperio Iuzeph, litteras suas continuo miserunt, in quibus, ut cum inmenso exercitu ad Ualentiam uenirent et de manu Roderici et de eius imperio eosdem liberarent, eis notificauerunt; quod si facerent usque ad mensum augustum, nollent Roderici penitus imperio parere sibique in omnibus seruire eos, procul-dubio utique scirent.

Interea Rodericus Ualentiam in pace liberam dimisit, et ad Pinnacatel cum exercitu suo peruenit, et usque ad Belliena omnem terram et prouintiam circumquaque habitantem depredatus est. Multos quidem captiuos multaque spolia et copiam cibarie ibidem cepit. Que autem omnia in Pinnacatel cuncta misit, ibique eam cum maxima preda reliquit, et ad partes Ualentie statim ingressus est. Egressus autem inde, ascendit et peruenit in terras de Albarrazin, qui ei mentitus fuerat in suo tributo. Depredatus itaque omnem terram illam, omnem uero cibariam quam ibi inuenit, in Cepullam totam mitti iussit. Ipse autem inter[im] ad Cepullam cum preda maxima regressus est.

Transacto igitur mense augusto, Ualentie habitatores audierunt relatione uera, quod Moabite cum ingenti exercitu Iuzeph in auxilium eorum ad succurrendum et liberandum de dominio Roderici proculdubio ueniebant. Ilico a pacto quod cum Roderico instituerant se subtraxerunt, eique rebelles ac aduersarios pacti fidem male seruantes omnibus modis se constituerunt; quod autem Rodericus plenarie cognoscens, Ualentiam iterum omni animositate obsedit, eam forti et robustissimo prelio undique expugnauit.

Fames autem ualida et non modica in urbe || [91] facta omnino esse dinoscitur. Interea igitur exercitus Moabitarum, eis ad succurrendum sceleri cursu perueniens, ad Ualentiam se appropiauit. At cum Roderico bellum comitere non audens, eius pauore perterritus et nimis pauens, nocte per umbras fugijt et sic ad regiones suas confusus remeauit. Rodericus autem non modico tempore Ualentiam solito more fortius ac robustius ex omni parte debellauit, eamque expugnatam tandem gladio uiriliter cepit, captamque continuo depredatus est. Inuenit et adquisiuit utique in ea multas et innumerabiles peccunias, copiam uidelicet auri et argenti inmensam et numero penitus carentem, monilia pretiosa, gem[m]as multo auro decoratas, varia et diuersa ornamenta, vestes siricas precioso auro deauratas. Tantam igitur et tam preciosissimam in urbe hac adquisiuit peccuniam, quod ipse et uniuersi sui facti sunt diuites et locupletes ultra quam dici potest.

Juzeph autem Moabitarum rex, audiens quod Ualentia a Rode rico nimia belli animositate iam esset capta ac depredata, iratus ac mestus factus est uehementer. Habito itaque cum suis consilio, ducem super Yspaniam de genere suo, sororis sue filium, nomine Mahumath constituit; quem cum infinita multitudine Barbarorum et Moabitarum atque Hysmaelitarum per omnem Yspaniam habitantium, Ualentiam obsidere et Rodericum captum et ferreis uinculis uinctum ad illum perducere misit. Hij itaque uenientes in loco qui dicitur Quarto, ab urbe Ualentia .iiii^{or}. miliarios habenti, castra sua fixerunt. Omnis ergo regio illa que circumquaque habitabat, cum cibaria et cum epulis et escis sibi necessarijs continuo ad eos peruenit, et uictualia eisdem partem contulit partimque uendidit. Numerus autem illorum erat quasi. C. L. milia militum, tringita uero milia peditum. Videns autem Rodericus tantam et tam innumerabilem gentium multitudinem aduersus eum peruenisse pugnaturam, non raro miratus est. Inmanis iste Moabitarum exercitus 9^{a}‖^{vo} super Ualentiam x. diebus et totidem noctibus iacuit ac permansit. Cotidie nimirum girabant eam, multis et diuersis uocum clamoribus ululantes atque uociferantes, rugitum non modicum emittentes, et tentoria Roderici et militum suorum et habitacula eorum frequenter sagittabant, nimiumque eos bello instanti urgebant. Rodericus uero solita cordis animositate se et suos uiriliter confortabat ac corroborabat, et Dominum Jesum Christum, ut suum diuinum preberet auxilium, incensanter ac prece deuota deprecabatur. Quadam uero die, secundum solitum morem ululando ac uociferando atque debellando, dum urbem circundarent et suis uiribus omnino eam capere crederent, Rodericus inuincibilis bellator, in Domino et in eiusdem clementia toto suo animo confidens, cum suis bene armatis, ad eos uociferando eosdemque uerbis minarum terrendo, audaciter et uiriliter egressus est. Irruit itaque in eos, et cum eisdem bellum com[m]isit inmensum ; diuina opitulante clementia, Moabitas omnes deuicit ; sic itaque triumphum et uictoriam sibi a Deo collatam super eos habuit. Ipsi uero iam deuicti, dantes terga uersi sunt in fugam; multitudo uero illorum gladio ceciderunt. Alij autem cum propijs uxoribus et liberis ad castra Roderici ducti sunt captiui. Cuncta quippe eorum castra atque tentoria acceperunt, in quibus innumerabiles peccunias auri et argenti et uestium pretiosarum inuenerunt, atque cunctis diuitijs ibidem repertis funditus expoliauerunt. Rodericus igitur et omnes sui tunc sunt nimis ditati, et multo auro et argento, et uestibus preciosissimis, et equis et palafredis, ac mul[t]is seu diuersis armorum generibus, et cibarie copia atque thesauris inenarrabilibus sufficienter repleti. Facta est autem huiusmodi uictoria in Era. M. C. XXX. II.

Post habitum huiuscemodi triumphum, cepit Rodericus castrum qui dicitur Olokabet; in quo equidem multum thesaurum qui fuit regis Alcadir, inuenit, quem cum suis bona fide diuisit. Tunc autem alterum quoque accepit oppidum || [92] qui dicitur Serra.

Tunc uero Sanctius rex Aragonensis bone memorie mortuus est, qui quinquaginta et duobus uixit annis, et postea ad Christum in pace perrexit, et sepultus est honorifice in monasterio Sancti Ioannis de Pinna. Post cujus mortem, Petrus eiusdem filius in Aragonensi regno rex est eleuatus. Vniuersi autem regni eius principes insimul [sunt] congregati. Tunc dixerunt Regi : « Maiestati tue, Rex inclite, unanimiter supplicamus quatenus consilium nostrum audire digneris. Sanum nempe et utile tibi fore consilium credimus, cum Roderico Campidocto amicitiam et amorem habere. Hoc nostri consilij unanimitas tibi proculdubio consulit. » Regi autem huius principum suorum consilium nimis placuit, et ad Rodericum, ut cum illo se iungeret, nuntios suos continuo direxit. Nuntij autem missi Roderico dixerunt : « Dominus noster rex Aragonensis nos ad te misit, ut te cum illo iungas et cum eo pacem et amorem firmissimum amicabiliter instituas; ad bellandos uero inimicos uestros quod sitis unanimes, et ad inuicem contra aduersarios nostros penitus auxiliabiles. » Quod ualde placuit Roderico, seque libenter hoc facturum eisdem respondit. Petrus autem rex ad maritima loca, in loco qui dicitur Mons Ornes, protinus descendit. Rodericus uero egressus ab urbe Ualentia ad eum in Burriana peruenit; quo in loco inuicem sese uiderunt, et pacem inter se habendam firmissime firmauerunt, et ut se super omnes homines contra inimicos suos uicissim adiuuarent, bono et sincero animo constituerunt. Quo facto, ad terram suam Rex statim redijt, regnumque suum sub bona manere atque uiuere justicia, legis soliditate disposuit et stabiliuit. Rodericus uero ad Ualentiam repedauit.

Transacto itaque modico tempore, Petrus rex cum exercitu suo ad auxiliandum amico suo Roderico ad Ualentiam uenit, quem maximo honore Rodericus recepit. Congregato itaque exercitu suo, ambo pariter de Ualentia egredientes ceperunt pergere ad Pinnacatel oppidum, ut in eo cibaria 92||vo mitterent et uictualibus sufficienter munirent. Cumque ad urbem Xatiuam appropinquarent, Mahumeth sobrinus Iuzeph regis Moabitarum et Hysmaelitarum, cum inmenso exercitu, uidelicet, xxx. milia militum omnibus armis bene munitorum, eisdem obujam exiuit, quatinus prelium cum eis com[m]itteret. Eodem autem die Hysmaelite et Moabite bellum cum eis non co[m]miserunt, sed super montes qui ibidem erant ululantes et uociferantes tota die perstiterunt. Petrus autem rex et Rodericus omnem cibariam, quamcumque in regione illa inuenerunt, cum preda habita totam in oppido Pinnacatel uiriliter miserunt, sicque oppidum uictualibus copiosissime munierunt. Egredientes inde uersus meridiem, ad maritima loca pariter descenderunt, et contra Beyren castra sua fixerunt. Altera uero die, Mahumeth cum Moabitis et Hysmahelitis et cunctis gentibus barbaris, uidelicet maxima et innumerabili multitudine, contra Regem et Rodericum bellum co[m]mittere se muniuit. In eodem uero loco mons erat magnus, qui in longitudinem quasi. XL. stadijs extensus uidebatur. Hoc in monte erant castra Sarracenorum ; ex altera parte erat mare, in quo erat multitudo nauium Hysmaelitarum et Moabitarum, de quibus expugnabant Christianos in arcu et sagittis; ex montis itaque parte eos expugnabant cum ceteris armis. Quod cum Christiani perspicerent, non mediocriter sunt exterriti et ualde pauidi effecti. Rodericus autem perspiciens eos timidos atque expauescentes, statim super equum suum equitauit, et suis armis munitus, per exercitum Christianorum incedere incohauit, eosque nimis confortando hec uerba expressit : « Audite me, socij mei dilectissimi et dulcissimi, estote fortes in bello et potentes, et uiriliter confortamini, nullo modo formidetis, neque multitudinem illorum paueatis, quia hodie tradet eos Dominus Noster Jesus Christus in manus nostras et in potestatem nostram. » Media autem die, Rex et Rodericus cum omni exercitu Christianorum irruerunt super eos, et fortibus armis et uiribus robustis ‖[93] debellauerunt eos. Tandem Dei clementia opitulante et operante, eosdem uiriliter deuicerunt atque fugauerunt; quidam illorum gladijs interfecti corruerunt, quidam uero in alueum ceciderunt. Inmensa nimirum illorum pars fugiendo in mari est submersa et suffocata. Deuictis itaque et interemptis Sarracenis, cunctarum eorum substantiam uictores Christiani depredati sunt. Vniuersa quoque eorum spolia, uidelicet aurum et argentum, equos et mulas et arma optima et plures diuitias, post habitam uictoriam sufficienter ibidem acceperunt, et de uictoria eisdem a Deo collata Deum tota mentis deuotione glorificauerunt.

Post habitum uero huiusmodi memorie conmendandum semperque laudandum triumphum, Petrus rex et Rodericus cum suo exercitu Deum laudantes ad Ualentiam redierunt. In eadem quippe urbe paucis diebus permanserunt. Egredientes autem ambo inde, ad castrum montem Ornes, qui erat rebellis Regi et erat in territorio eius, pariter peruenerunt eumque continuo obsederunt, et obsessum atque uiriliter debellatum ad Regis opus acceperunt. Quo facto, in regnum suum Rex ylaris statim redijt. Rodericus uero reuersus est ad urbem suam Ualentiam.

Quadam uero die, Rodericus egressus est ab urbe explorare et inuestigare inimicos suos. Dum iter ageret, alcayth nomine Abulphatab, egressus de Xatiua, ingressus est in Murum Uetulum. Quod Rodericus comperiens, perrexit aduersus illum secutusque

est eum, donec inclusit eum in oppido quod dicitur Almenara. Oppidum autem obsedit, et tribus mensibus undique fortiter debellauit ; quibus transactis, uiriliter cepit. Omnes autem homines quos intus cepit, liberos abire in sua loca permisit. Altare et ecclesiam Domino in honore Beatissime Uirginis Marie ibidem edificari precepit. His autem gratia Dei sic peractis, cum sua militia egreditur de Almenara, dicens et fingens se uelle ire in Ualentiam, cum ille in corde suo secreto Murum Uetulum circumdare et debellare disposuisset, interim manibus ad celum extensis orauit ad Dominum dicens 93||v° : « Deus eterne, qui scis omnia antequam fiant, quem nullum latet secretum, tu scis, Domine, quia Ualentiam prius nollem intrare, antequam Murum Uetulum obsidere et debellare, et debellatum in fortitudine gladij, tua potentia operante, obtinerem, et te donante, iam adepto atque sub imperio nostro habito et possesso, ibidem tibi Deo uero missam te laudando facerem celebrare. » Finita itaque huiuscemodi oratione, oppidum Muri Uetuli ilico obsedit, atque gladijs, sagittis, telis et omnium armorum generibus et machinamentis ex.... erant grauiter afflixit et coegit, atque eisdem egressum a castello et ingressum ad castellum omnino prohibuit. Defensores autem castelli et habitatores, perspicientes se undique impugnatos nimiumque afflictos et coactos, locuti sunt ad inuicem : « Quid miseri faciemus? Rodericus iste tyrannus in castro isto nullo modo nobis uiuere uel habitare permittet; faciet etenim nobis, quod habitatoribus de Ualentia et de Almenara eidem resistere non ualentibus nuper fecit. Videamus ergo quid acturi simus. Jam enim nos et uxores nostre et filij atque filie fame proculdubio moriemur; nullus quidem erit qui de manibus suis nos eripere ualeat. » Quod cum cognitum esset, Rodericus fortius et instantius solito more eos debellare inchoauit, eosque grauissime constrinxit. Cum igitur sentirent et uiderent se positos in tanta amaritudine, clamauerunt ad Rodericum dicentes : « Quare infers nobis tanta et tam importabilia mala? Cur interficis nos et lanceis et sagittis et gladijs ? Mollifica et mitiga cor tuum, et miserere nostri. Tibi unanimiter supplicamus, quatenus pietatis intuitu dierum aliquorum nobis inducias dones. Interea nuntios nostros ad Regem et dominos nostros mittemus, quod nobis succurrere ueniant. Si uero nullus uenerit ad presignatum placitum, qui nos de manibus tuis liberare ualeat, erimus tui et seruiemus tibi. Scias sane uera ueritate, quia oppidum Muri Uetuli tanti ‖[94] nominis et tante fame est in cognitione omnium gentium, quod illud tibi tam cito nullatenus dabimus. Prius utique quam sine indutijs nobis concessis detur, nos omnes prius mori ultro proculdubio scias. Nobis itaque omnibus interemptis, postea illud habere poteris. » Rodericus autem plane perpendens quia nichil eis hoc ual[er]et, inducias .xxx. dierum eisdem dedit. Illi autem miserunt interim nuntios suos ad regem Iuzeph et ad Moabitas et ad regem Aldefonsum et ad Almuzahen regem Cesara[u]guste et ad Albarrazin regem atque comitem Barcinonensem, quatinus usque xxx. dies eis succurrere uenire omnino minime desisterent. Quod si facere nollent, diebus .xxx. iam transactis, Roderico oppidum proculdubio darent et eidem ulterius tanquam Domino fideliter seruirent. Cum rex Aldefonsus uidisset et audisset nuntios Muri Uetuli, sic eis respondit : « Vera certitudine mihi credatis quia uobis non succurram, quoniam malo quod Rodericus habeat oppidum Muri Uetuli, quam quilibet rex Sarracenorum. » Nuntij autem hoc audito, sine ullo consilio ad propria sunt reuersi. Nuntijs uero qui ad Cesaraugustam missi fuerant, Halmuzahem huiusmodi dedit responsum : « Ite et quantum potueritis confortamini, et estote fortes eidem debellando resistentes, quia Rodericus ceruicis est et preliator fortissimus et inuincibilis, et ideo ego cum eo prelium co[m]mittere penitus pertimesco. » Nam paulo ante Rodericus ad eum nuntios miserat dicens : « Scias utique, Almuzahen, quod si cum exercitu tuo contra me uenire temptaueris et mecum bellum commiseris, tu et nobiles tui aut mortui aut captiui de manibus meis nullo modo euadetis. » Sic uero Roderici

pauore perterritus non fuit ausus uenire. Rex autem Albarrazin nuntijs super hoc presentatis inquit : « Quantum plus potueritis, confortamini et resistite ei, quia ego non ualeo uobis succurrere. » Moabite autem nuntijs sibi missis dixerunt : « Si Iuzeph rex noster uenire uoluerit, nos omnes ibimus simul cum eo, et uobis libenter succurremus ; sin autem, sine illo cum Roderico bellare minime audebimus. » Comes autem Barcinonensis, qui ab 94||vo eis inmensum acceperat tributum, nuntijs sibi missis ait : « Scitote quia cum Roderico bellare non audeo, sed uadam citjus, et circundabo castrum suum quod dicitur Aurepensa, et dum ille ad me uenerit mecumque pugnare conatus fuerit, uos interim ex alia parte cibariam in uestrum castellum sufficientem mittite. » Comes itaque, ut predixit, mox castellum obsedit. Quod audiens, Rodericus pro nichilo penitus hoc habens, ad succurrendum castro suo ire renuit. Interea uero quidam miles Comiti super castellum iacenti ait : « Comes nobilissime, ueritate certissima audiui Rodericum contra te uenire tecumque bellum committere uelle. » Quo audito, rei ueritatem probare nolens, continuo de castro circundato recessit, et Roderici pauore ad terram suam pauidus fugijt. Transactis igitur .xxx. dierum inducijs, Rodericus Barbaris qui intus in castello Muri Uetuli erant, dixit : « Vt quid tardatis michi tradere oppidum? » Illi autem sub dolo eidem sic responderunt : « Domini nuntij, quos direximus nondum ad nos reuersi sunt; quamobrem adhuc nobilitati tue unanimiter supplicamus, quatinus inducias aliquantulas nobis dones. » Cum igitur Rodericus dolo et fraude eos sibi loqui perpenderet, et propter aliquod spatium habendum eosdem sibi hoc ficte dicere plenius cognosceret, ait eis : « Vt omnibus pateat hominibus quod nullum Regum uestrorum timeo, adhuc .xij. dierum inducias uobis concedo, quatenus uenire et uobis succurrere nullam habeant excusationem. Transactis itaque .xij. diebus, uobis in rei ueritate dico, quod si castrum protinus mihi non dederitis, quoscumque uestrum capere uel habere potero, uiuos igne cremabo et gladio non sine tormentis trucidabo. » Venit itaque dies presignata, in qua eisdem qui intus erant in castro dixit Rodericus : « Cur tantas interponitis moras, et non traditis mihi castrum iam promissum ? » Illi responderunt : « Ecce Pascha uestrum, quod dicitur Pentecostes, iam proximum est ; in die Pasche trademus tibi omnino castrum ; non enim Reges nostri nobis succurrere uolunt. Tu autem cum tuis tutius ingredere illud, habetoque secundum ||95 libitum tuum. » Ille uero ait ad eos : « In eadem sane die Pentecostes non ingrediar castellum, sed do uobis adhuc inducias usque ad festum Sancti Iohannis. Interim accipite uxores uestras et liberos et familias atque omnem substantiam, et cum omnibus rebus uestris ite in pace, quocumque uolueritis. Euacuate itaque castrum, quod liberum sine impedimento mihi relinquatis. Ego autem, clementia operante, in natiuitate Sancti Iohannis Baptiste intrabo castrum. » Sarraceni uero, propter tantum talemque miserationis amorem, plures et deuotas sibi retulerunt grates.

In natale itaque Sancti Iohannis Baptiste Rodericus ad intrandum castrum milites suos premisit, quibus castrum ascendere ac intrare omnino precepit. Illi uero castrum continuo intrauerunt, et summitatem castri iam obtinentes, Deo gratias exultantes retulerunt. Mox nimirum castrum ipse Rodericus ingrediens, in eo missam celebrare et munus oblationum offerre statim deuota mente iussit. Ibidem Sancti Iohannis ecclesiam miro construi opere fecit. Portas ciuitatis et omnium murorum munitiones, et cuncta que intus in urbe et in castro erant, militibus sollicite custodire precepit. In ipso autem castro quamuis euacuato multas inuenerunt diuitias. Muri Uetuli quidam habitatores Sarraceni tunc in urbe adhuc permanebant ; post triduum uero capti oppidi Rodericus ait illis : « Nunc uobis omnibus modis precipio, ut cuncta que in eis hominibus abstulistis, et ea que contra me et ad meum dedecus et meum dampnum Mohabitis contulistis, mihi reddatis ; quod si facere nolueritis, uos in carcerem intrudi et uinculis ferreis dire illequeari nequaquam dubitetis. » Illi uero quesita reddere non uolentes, diuitijs suis omnino nudati et uinculis uincti, ad Ualentiam protinus Roderici mandato sunt directi.

His itaque peractis uenit ipsimet Ualentiam, et in domo Sarracenorum quam illi mezquitam uocant, ecclesiam Sancte Marie Uirginis ad honorem eiusdem Redemptoris Nostri Genitricis miro et decoro opere construxit. Calicem aureum. c. l. 95 ||vo habentem eidem ecclesie obtulit. Dedit quoque prefate ecclesie duas citharas serico et auro textas pretiosissimas, quibus alias similes in Ualentia nunquam fuisse perhibebant. Missam in eadem ecclesia, cum laudum modulationibus et suauissimis ac dulcissimis cantuum uocibus, deuotis mentibus unanimiter tunc celebrauerunt, et Redemptorem Nostrum Dominum Jesum Christum, cui est honor et gloria una cum Patre et Spiritu Sancto per omnia secula seculorum amen, ibidem exultantibus animis laudauerunt.

Vniuersa autem bella que Rodericus cum socijs suis fecit et ex eis triumphum obtinuit, et quot uillas et uicos dextera ualidissima cum gladijs et cunctis armorum generibus depredatus est atque omnino destruxit, seriatim narrare perlongum esse uideretur, et forsitan legentibus in fastidium uerteretur. Sed quod nostre scientie paruitas ualuit, eiusdem gesta sub breuitate et certissima ueritate stilo rudi exarauit. Dum autem in hoc seculo uixit, semper de aduersarijs secum bello dimicantibus triumphum nobilem obtinuit, et nunquam ab aliquo deuictus fuit. Obijt autem Rodericus apud Ualentiam in Era. m. c. xxxvii. mense iulio.

Post mortem autem eius, uxor eiusdem cum maximo militum et peditum comitatu apud Ualentiam miseranda remansit. Illius quidem morte audita, omnes Sarraceni qui in partibus marinis habitabant, congregato exercitu non modico, super Ualentjam continuo uenerunt, eamque ex omni parte obsederunt, obsessamque .vii. mensibus undique expugnauerunt. Vxor autem eius tanto talique uiro uiduata, cum in tanta afflictione sese urgeri perspiceret et infelicitati sue remedium consolationis minime reperiret, episcopum ciuitatis ad regem Aldefonsum protinus direxit, ut ei miserande pietatis intuitu subueniret. Quo audito, Rex cum exercitu suo Ualentiam ueloci cursu peruenit. Quem uxor Roderici miseranda pedes osculans eius maximo [gaudio] recepit, et ut sibi et cunctis Christianis qui cum ea erant succurreret, supplicauit. ||[96] Rex autem inter suos nullum omnino reperiens, qui in eadem urbem teneret et a Sarracenis defenderet, quia procul a suo regno remota uidebatur, uxorem Roderici cum corpore uiri sui, et cunctos Christianos qui tunc aderant cum suis diuitijs et substantijs, secum ad Castellam reduxit. Egressis autem omnibus ab urbe, totam urbem igne cremari Rex precepit, et cum his omnibus Toletum peruenit. Sarraceni autem, qui propter aduentum Regis fugerant et urbem obsessam reliquerant, post Regis recessum mox urbem quamuis arsam intrauerunt, et eam cum omnibus eius finibus habitauerunt, et nunquam eam ulterius perdiderunt.

Vxor autem Roderici, una cum militibus uiri sui, corpus eiusdem Roderici ad monasterium Sancti Petri Caradigne detulit, ibique non modicis muneribus pro eius anima monasterio collatis honorifice sepeliuit.

THE UNPRINTED POEMS OF THE SPANISH CANCIONEROS IN THE BIBLIOTHÈQUE NATIONALE, PARIS[1]

The poems printed herewith are contained in the Spanish Cancioneros of the Bibliothèque Nationale at Paris. The following tabulation, which is that given by Mussafia [2], shows the letter or number by which these Cancioneros have been, or are at present known :

Mussafia	Cat. Morel-Fatio	Classemt de 1860	Anc. Fonds
A	586	226	7819
B	587	227	7820
C	588	228	7822

E	590	230	7825
F	591	231	7826
G	592	233	7824
H	593	313	8168

The Cancioneros are discussed and described with some detail in the Catálogo [3] of Don Eugenio de Ochoa, who assigns them to two, or possibly three different centuries : A, B, D, E, G, H, to the XVth century, C to the XVIth, F to the XVIth or beginning of the XVIIth century. A brief description of the mss. is also given in Morel-Fatio's Catalogue under number 586. He says [1] that it must have been written in the second half of the XVth c. in Castile; and A and E in the end of the XVth or beginning of the XVIth c. by a Catalan scribe.

Mussafia [2] discusses somewhat at length the contents of A, E, and H, giving a list of the poems found in these Cancioneros and showing which of them are likewise contained in M (=Cancionero de Lope de Estuñiga, B. N. Madrid, M. 48). He also gives an index of G [2], pointing out the correspondence between its contents and that of R [2] (= « [codice] accodato al Codice Casanatense »).

Neither description of the Cancioneros of the Bibliothèque Nationale, nor study of the language of the several collections is attempted here. The editor has aimed only to punctuate the poems according to modern requirements, and to indicate the divergences in the texts where the poems occur in more than one of the mss. It has been thought superfluous to give every slight variation in spelling, yet those have been noted which would help to throw light on the origin of the copyist.

The names of all the authors of the Castilian poems save those of Sanchez and Mendoza [4] are given by Amador de los Ríos in his Ensayo de Catálogo at the end of vol. VI of the Historia de la literatura etc. (pp. 580-595) and are for the greater part, those of poets familiarly known as associated with the literary activity at the courts of John II of Castile and Alphonso V of Aragon.

Among the several Mendozas that are mentioned it is impossible to identify the author of B 194 as his first name is not given in the ms.

No one of these poems has, to my knowledge, hitherto been printed entire, although lines or even stanzas of several of them have already appeared in print. The greater number of such examples are found in Ochoa and Amador de los Ríos [1] and are intended as a rule merely as a means of identification or illustration. If the extract printed is more considerable, the place of its appearance is stated in a foot-note.

When a poem occurs in the three Mss A E and H, or in A and E, the text is based on the form given in A; when in E and H, E has furnished the basis of the present edition. Suggested additions are in brackets, and suggested suppressions in parentheses.

[A. f. 13] HOBRA FETA PER EN LEONARD DE SOS EN LO CONSISTORI DEN FRANSI VUÇOT QUE DIX QUI MILOR DESTROUIRA CRUELTAT E GUANYA JOYA.

Crueltat vol que gens no siamat
Quib leyal cor serueix enamorada,
No desyamt en res deshonestat
N qui no plau esser deshonestada.
Gran tort comet al bon enamorat
Lo vici foll e virtut nos amada,
Per qui tal fet esser volrra lohat
Contra raho la veig desordenada;
Principi pur no te de caritat,
Ffa liberal prest hobra caritada,
El molt amar dires desordenat
Si donau fa non deu esser loada.

Nço vull dir vent molt engoxat
Ffransi Buçot per qui huy ha justada;
Es gent subtil aqui nos amagat
Segret algu ni labtes amagada
El magnifich consistori justat
Per desllurar sa pensa congoxada
[f. 14.] Per desegual regiment qua mostrat
Qui de virtuts es tan acompanyada
Segons ell diu que deu ses fort mirat
Fformarla tal mas ella sesmirada

Ffer lo tostemps demigs acompanyat
May vn istant bona cara mostrada.

Tanta donor li guardan temps passat
E guarda vuy qualtra nos tan presada,
Si bel desdeny gens no la bandonat
En tots serueixs ell menys la bandonada.
Qui tant soffer deu esser molt presat,
Pusquels entichs hauien tal passada;
Crueltat beig ques vici reprouat
E tan injust que bondat temagada,
Quant en vy loch ab ella ses trobat
Quis veu tan ferm molt amor ha trobada;
Juy e raho sembla tingamagat
Qui ten sos fets manera reprouada.

Armem tots donchs vostra benignitat:
Pietat vull ab vos sia costada,
El voler be pus no tendreu celat
Com sobrel cap tindreu semblant celada;
El cors metam e per cada costat
Amor qui fa lyra benignitada
[f. 14 v.] E per mandret esforç vos sia dat
Per destruhir la crueltat maluada
Les calses forts sien humilitat,
Que si teniu la penssa humilitada,
No pot trobar may en vos res maluat
Qui fama tal de cruel vos ha dada.

Regoneixeu sius han aconcellat

[A. f. 29 v. b.] CANCION

De mi tanbien seruida,
A que me fazes guerra ?
Mira la mi vida
Ya como se atierra.

Assombrada de mirar
Tamanya perfeccion,
Ha perdido el fablar,
Catiuandol coraçon.

A muerte es venida
Sin fazer ninguna yerra;
Triste como vencida,
Es cayda por tierra.

Assi que sin otro danyo
Es cosa cierto sabida,
Que peor es la partida
Que muerte ni otro danyo.

[A. f. 29 v. b.] OTRA

Adios, adios, buen amor,
Ques forçada mi partida,
Con tan sobrado dolor,
Que sera fin de mi vida.

No espero sino moriendo
De ti mi alma partir,
Blasfemando y maldiziendo
Mi desastrado viuir.

Por que fue consentidor
Que fuesses de mi querida
Con tan sobrado dolor,
Que sera fin de mi vida.

[A. f. 35 v. b.] CANÇON[1]

Pues mi vida preguntays,
Non vos lo quiero negar :
Bien amar e lamentar
Es la vida que me days.

Quien vos podiera seruir
Tambien como yo he seruido?
Mi trabaiado viuir
Quien podiera hauer sofrido?

Para que me preguntays
La pena que he de passar?
Pues amar e lamentar
Es la vida que me days.

[A. f. 35 v. b.] OTRA

Tanto quanto me desplaze
El ser absente de vos,
Otro tanto, par dios,
O poco menos me plaze.

Plaze me, pues se que sigo
El que virtud me requiere;

1. Ochoa, loc. cit., p. 338, attributes this and the following poem to Suero de Ribera.

E desplaze me, por que fatigo
Me querer, que non lo quiero [1].

Assi que viuiendo, faze
Mi vida morir por vos;
Mas lo que deuo, por Dios,
De fazer, faz que me plaze.

[A. f. 47 v. a.] Sepas que tu venida
Dara fin a mi viuir,
No queriendo consentir
El reparo de mi vida.

Despues que sea finado,
Dime tu, que ganaras ?
Sabes bien que perderas
Tu leal enamorado.

Y porende, da la vida,
Pues me diste a sentir;
Quen tu mano es mi viuir
O matarme sin ferida.

O dama desconocida
Por quien me plaze morir,
Sepas que tu venida,
Con desseo recebida,
[f. 47 v. b.] Dara fin a mi viuir.
Pues morir tengo forçado,

1. Read : Mi,.. quiere (?)

Sin causa me mataras
Por mi suerte.

Despues que sea finado,
Muriendo ya por mi grado,
Dime tu, que ganaras
Con mi muerte?

Triste, quien puede sofrir
Mi pena mas que perdida?
No queriendo consentir,
Fin de todo me seruir
El reparo de mi vida.

Pues tu, mi bien, que podras
Reparar el mal doblado Que meresce,
Sabes bien que perderas,
Si mis danyos miraras,
Tu leal enamorado
Que padesçe.

Mi mal que nunca soluida,
Por ti se puede partir;
Y porende, da la vida,
Di (sic) mis seruicios vençida,
Pues me diste a sentir.
Tan gran dolor que dezir
Es vna muerte sentida,
Por do viene
Quen tu mano es mi viuir.
[f. 48 a.] A todo mal resistir,
O matarme sin ferida,
Te conviene.

No se do vaya tan lexos [1]
Que males de mi salexen,
Ni quede do pierda quexos,
Y los cuidados me dexen.

Que vaya tierra muy luenga, Desseos me tornaran;
Que queda do mal sostenga,
Cuydados me leuaran.

Pues males me son annexos,
Quiero mi muerte aquexen,
Porque se pierdan mis quexos
Y mis cuidados me dexen.

La desuelaua llorando, ꝛ dezia :

1. In the ms. this poem follows the preceding one without interruption and would seem to be a continuation of it. Ochoa, loc. cit., p. 413, considers it a separate poem and that it is such is evident from the fact that it is found as an independent composition in the Cancionero de Salvá (cf. Catalogo de la Bib. de Salvá p. 92, note 15. In this cancionero it comes directly after a poem by Lope de Estuñiga, the obvious reason por its ascription to this poet by Amador de los Ríos (Cf. Ríos, loc. cit., vol. VI, p. 554).

2. This romance is found also in the Codexes R^2, the second section of the Cancionero della Casanatense, and in I, the Cancionero de Ijar (cf. Mussafia, loc. cit., pp. 1, 3, and 18; and Ticknor-julius, Geschichte der schönen Literatur in Spanien, Leipzig, F. Brockhaus 1867, vol. II, p. 524), Gallardo, Ensayo I, no. 486 prints from I the first stanza and the last four lines of the poem. The divergences from the text of B are given in the following notes.

« Gentes estrañas nos van catiuando [1], Y vos asy estays en tienpo dudoso ! »
ꝛ calla, tornando al dulçe reposo, Diziendo : « Biua el rey Don Fernando ! [2] »

« Biuo es el rey, non estes oçiosa;
Fuyd, bella dama, que el daño se estiende. »
« Dexad me, escudero, que la gloriosa Vida del rey ami bien defiende.
El buen rey Alfonso mi paz ha ganado,
El su claro fijo la conseruara ;
Aquel Don Fernando que ha heredado
Los bienes quel padre jamas dexara.

Su nombre de fierro es la fortaleza
Con la qual armado me ha mantouida ;
Por cuya virtud yo biuo en franqueza,
Ganada con armas ꝛ avn defendida.
Aqueste, non solo diestro guerrero
Que los enemigos convençe y atierra,
Mas sabio, prudente ꝛ buen consejero,
Los viçios tristes persigue ꝛ destierra.

[f. 216.] A quien las leys syn dubda obedesçen,
ꝛ aquien las guerras dan sienpre lugar,
Ynclito fijo, enel qual paresçen
Las claras virtudes del rey syngular.
En altos trihunfos non desconoçido,
Enlos ynfortunos jamas desmayado,
ꝛ avn dela mala fortuna temido,
Terror alos otros y de suyos amado,

1. l non (sic) vos catyuando.
2. The order of this line and the next is inverted and they read : Ella pregunta : Viue el rey Fernando ? — Y calla tornando al dulçe reposo.

FYN.

Aqueste me causa la dulçe folgança,
Y [1] seguro reposo, ℰ tranquilo beuir;
Legitimo esposo mi firme esperança,
Aqui fago [2] fyn tornando adormir. »

[C. f. 127 v. a.] RECEPTA DE AMOR [3]

Por que de vuestro acidente La maior parte me toqua,
E por que en veros doliente
Tal quexa mi alma siente Quespressar non se por boqua;
Mouido del interesse,
E buscado por escuelas
Como remedio os diesse,
E maguer que no dormiesse,
Folgaua con tales velas.

Y del todo congoxado,
Con estrema diligentia
Libros mil e trastornado,
En los quales e fallado
Reparo a vuestra dolentia
Y asi vos, por quien yo biuo
Alegre sin beneficio,
No dudeys en lo que scriuo
Y del mas vuestro catiuo Reçebit este seruiçio.

1. I omits y.

2. I fizo; the queen's words end with esperança on the line above. Ríos, loc. cit., vol. VI, p. 486. prints the second stanza of this poem, the first two lines being as follows : Vivo es el rey ; non esteys ociosa : Fuid, bella dama quel daño se enciende.

3. Ochoa, loc. cit., p. 454, prints the first décima and the last four lines of this poem.

MUESTRA EN QUE PARTE FALLARA LAS MEDEÇINAS

En la huerta de Cupido
Do lamar es ortolano,
Al entrar fallays gemido,
Y dentro goço infinido;
Y es temor el guardiano,
Sin el qual matar primero,
Sabed sin otra disputa,
Segun es cruel y fiero,
Por parablas (sic) ni dinero
Jamas haureys de su fruta.

[f. 127 v. b.] Y dando fin al peruerso,
Maliçioso, importuno,
Vereys un huerto diuerso,
Tal quen todo luniuerso
Dudo se falla ninguno,
Do de frutas inuisibles
Fallareys gran quantitad, Paral gusto muy terribles;
Mas los fines atratibles (sic)
Son dentera sanidad.

Y passada la fragosa
Parte de frutas amargas,
Fallareys vos deleytosa
Fruta, plaçiente, saborosa,
Vna multitud de cargas;
Y por la forma seguiente,
Segun escrito vereys,
En manera diligente,
Como persona prudente,
La tal regla seruareys.

COMO SE DEUEN TOMAR LOS XAROPES ATODAS HORAS DEL DIA

Por que toda purga buena Lenxeropar la mejora,
Tomareys a cada cena
Vn argenço de la pena
Que sufre quien vos adora;
Item, por lo semejante,
Dela muy graue passion
Que sustiene vuestro amante,
Otro argenço bien bastante Tomareys a colaçion.

[f. 128 a.] Otro argenço bien pesado
A hora de media noche
Tomareys vos de cuydado,
Del que siente el desamado
Buen amador sin reproche.
Item, mas bien de mañyana,
Paral mal que vos teneys,
Por ques muy perfeta y sana,
Quantidat duna bellana
De fatiga tomareys.
Item, dun gemir saluaje
Lleno de spinas estrañyas,
Mesclad y façed potaje
Con çiertos brotes doltraje Que atrauessan mis entrañyas;
E fechos poluos en çima
Dun pedaço de pesar, Tomalde a hora de prima,
Y podreys façer estima
De prestamente sanar.

Item, luego de presente,
Cuytas, affan, y dolor
Cojereys con su simiente,
Las quales continuamente
Naçen cabel disfauor;
Y con vn llanto sobrado
Ques dela misma comerçia,
Lo sobre dicho mesclado
Por sus partes ygualado, Tomareys a hora terçia.
[C. f. 128 b.] De agua de vuestros ojos
Enchires vn almarraxa,
Y cojed tantos manojos
De muy granados enojos, Fastanchir vna gran caxa,
Y tomaldos con destreza
Ala hora del yantar,
Mesclados, con la corteza
Daquella negra tristeza Que vos me façeys passar.

Item, dun trabaio estremo
Que cabel desden se cria,
En cuyas fogueras quemo,
Por el qual morir yo temo,
Tomareys a medio dia
Vna dragma y no mas;
Por ques de tamaña aspereza
Que no podriades jamas, Segun es vuestro compas,
Sofrir tanta fortaleza.
Y despues daquesto fecho,
Otra dragma por mesura,

Para todo azer prouecho,
Tomareys daquell despecho Que la tardança procura,
De cuya sabor descreo,
Pues destruye mi persona;
Y ensemble con el deseo
Y sospiros que posseo, Tomalde ahora de nona.

[f. 128 v. a.] Y dareys al pensamiento
Los enxaropes nombrados,
Por que vuestro entendimiento
Venga en conoçimento (sic)
De mis daños estremados;
Y conoçidos los tales,
Por ellos podreys bien ver
Que Dios vos da tantos males
Por vengar los desiguales Que me faceys padeçer.

ORDENALE EL RESTAURANTE, SI NECESSARIO FUERA.

Si alguna basca cambiante
Vos viniere en este medio,
Por que punto nos quebrante,
Tomareys vn restaurante
Queos dara presto remedio;
Y sera solo pensar
El descançe (sic) aduenidor,
Y el reposo que alcançar
Esperays conel sanar, Plaçiendo a Nuestro Señyor.

MOSTRA QUANTO TIENPO SE HA DENXEROPAR Y EN QUE CONOÇERA HAUER PASSADA LA PARTE AMARGA.

Y despues quenxeropada
Vna semana contina,
Fallar vos eys alleuiada
Con la humor preparada,
Para tomar medeçina.
Y passada lamargura,
Fallareys en la frontera
Entre ell agror y dulçura
Vn valle de gran fondura,
Y vna muy fuerte barrera.

[C. f. 128 v. b.] MOSTRA QUAL ES LA PORTERA DELA FRUCTA DULÇE.

Y en çima la paliçada
Vereys va noble dueña,
En su mano vna spada,
Contrastando al entrada,
La qual se llama vergueñya;
Pero es de condiçion
Que con gratiosa rogaria,
Sin poner mas dilaçion,
Mouida de compassion,
Acoje muy voluntaria.

MUESTRA LA QUALIDAD DE LA SOBREDICHA DUEÑA, Y COMO OS HAUEYS DE HAUER CON ELLA.

Y asi con mucha alegria
De que he pudays (siç) fablar, Mansamente, sin porfia,
Dezilde por cortesia

Vos quiera dexar entrar;
Y deque dentro sereys,
Dar os ha riñya y contienda
Si de su fruta cojeys;
Pero vos dal no cureys
Saluo de vuestra fazienda.

Ca sin querer atorgar
Las demas veyes consiente;
Y dexalda brauear,
Pues que su mucho rallar
Non vos puede ser noziente.
Y esta dotrina seruando,
Prouechosa y amigable,
Tal qual yo voy razonando,
Lo dañoso desechando,
Tomareys lo saludable.

[f. 129 a.] Fallareys luego noçiua
Vna yerba sin virtud,
De condiçion muy catiua,
Laqual medeçinas (sic) quiua (sic)
Que se llama ingratitud;
Y para la conoçer
Entre las otras vereys
Que la faze[n] peor veer,
Y donde suele naçer,
Jamas nada cojereys.
Y como de ryalgar [1]

1. Ryalgar : perhaps the Solanum Vespertilio whose berries have been called Realgarera Canariensium. Cf. Webb and Berthelot, Phyt. Can. iii, 124. This name is evidently given them for their color, because there is a pigment of a beautiful ruby-red color called realgar. This pigment, an arsenic com-

Vuestras manos fuyan della;
Y guardaos della tocar,
Quen lugar de mejorar
Vos dara mayor querella.
Y dala (sic) tal vos guardando,
Con otras que yo reçito,
Vos ireys multiplicando
En salut, y bien sanando
Si fazeys lo sotescrito.

LA CURA PERFECTA ET VLTIMA

Puesto a parte menospreç, Cojeres, grado primero,
Hastanchir vn almireç
Y poco mas, duna nuez
Dun querer muy verdadero;
Cojereys de lealtad
Ensemble con affection (sic)
Duna libra la metat,
Y a lexos de crueldat,
Cojed mucho galardon.
[f. 129 b.] Cojereys dauinenteza
Vna onza por medida,
Y dun secreto y firmeza
Enxerido en gentileza, Otra onza bien complida.
Coieres como galana,
Discreta desemboltura
Con muchedumbre de gana,
Y veros es muy çercana
Dela deseada cura.

Fuyreys desquiuedad
Y destrema presumption (sic),
Que son contra caridad;
Y aredraos de soledad,
Por ques de mal ocasion.
Cojereys dun motejar
Que se cria nel palacio, Ensemble con festejar,
Que procuran bien amar,
Y aborreçen el cansançio.
Desechareys esperança Que causa detenimiento,
Y coied sin mas tardança
Deleyte, goço, folgança,
Y parte de complimento,
Y por que cessen humores
Terneys la exeqution presta;
Y cojed daquellas flores
Quen vulgar diçen amores, Vna razonable çesta.

[f. 129 v. a.] Coiereys de piedat
Hasta peso dun quintal,
Y de sana voluntad
Con buena fe y verdat Enchireys vn buen greal.
Y la reçepta nombrada
Porneys en su alembique,
Con la calor moderada;
Sacareys agua stillada
Muy mas dulçe calfenique.
Y cadauez capetito
Vos viniere de comer,

Tomareys vos vn poquito
Deste balsamo bendito,
El qual se nombra plazer;
Y lo tal continuad,
Que si luego non sanays,
Acusadme de maldad;
Y doy uos lautoridad
Por que mejor me creays.

Este leytuario lleno
De sinnos (sic) muy apropiados, Laviçena [1], mege bueno,
Ypocras y Galieno
Lo ponen en sus tratados.
Por do, mi segundo dios,
Suplico vos dende aqui
Por que sanemos los dos, Quassy como sano a vos,
Que tanbyen saneys a mi.

[f. 129 v. b.] Y pues façer lo podeys,
Rreparad mi triste llaga;
E si asi no lo fazeys,
Solo sepa vos jolgueys,
No quiero de vos mas paga.
Ca my byen es contentaros, Y aquesto quiero deçiros :
Que mi gloria es miraros,
Mi moneda es amaros,
E mi riqueça es seruiros.

1. Read : Aviçena.

Si quiça vos pon enpacho
El tantas yerbas buscar,
Ved a mi de amor borracho,
Que como simplo (sic) mochacho
Cierto me podeys mandar,
Y sereys obedeçida.
Que lo tal es mi consuelo,
Preçiosa damá garrida,
Por que soys en esta uida,
Bien como Dios enel çielo.

[C. f. 129 v. b.] OTRA RREÇEPTA [1]

Vuestro mal, segun eçede
Delo que sentir soles,
Presunçion tomar se puede
Que del coraçon proçede
La pasyon que sostenes;
Quen mirar vuestra presençia
Tan turbada y tan sentida,
Por conoçida espiriençia
Conosco vuestra dolençia,
De qual vmor es naçida.

[f. 130 a.] Por que vista la señal
Que descubre vuestro jesto, Por rrazon muy natural,
La causa de vuestro mal
Me fue dato (sic) y manifiesto (sic), Que despues quen vos falle

1. Not mentioned by Ochoa.

La color toda alterada,
Avn el pulso nos mire,
Jo se bien como y con que
Vos aves de ser curada.

Y avn que vuestra ingratydud
Faze ser triste mi vida,
Moverme quiero avirtud
En cobrar vuestra salud
Que teneys toda perdida.
Por ende no deys lúgar
Asofrir tal açidente,
Que sy del queres sanar,
No cuesta sy no guardar
El regimiento sygiente.

Con cuchar de mi pasyon
Tomares de quando en quando Almina de conpasyon,
Por que vuestro coraçon
Se torne de duro blando;
[f. 130 b.] Y porquel graue tormento
Que me days mas no mofenda,
Tomad enel pensamiento
Aguas darrepentimiento
Tybias, en fuego denmienda.

Mandareys con piedad
Beuer vn preparatiuo
Que de vuestra voluntad Aparte la crueldad,
Con que muerto syenpre biuo;
Y para el vmor contrario

De vuestro desconoçer,
Es señora, neçesario
Que tomes vn letuario
Que se llama agradeçer.

Los xaropes seran tales
Que purgen vuestros desdene
Con deseos y señales
De poner fin amis males,
Dando comienço amis bienes;
Y despues, con tal vnçion
Vntares vuestro sentido,
Cos mueva la condiçion
Ala paga y galardon
De quantos tenga seruido.

Tomad mas vn violado
Dacordaros cada dia
Quanto biuo apasyonado,
Por que con este cuydado
Sablande vuestra porfia;
[f. 130 v. a.] Y desque fuere çesada,
Luego comed vna yerua
Dafiçion que mes negada,
Dela qual, con fe mesclada,
Mandareys fazer conserua.

Despues que la sanidad
Vença los males vmores,
Foyda la enfermedad,
Purgada la voluntad
De medar mas disfauores,
Por que de no rrecaer

Tengays mayor confiança,
Para nunca adoleçer, Sangria aves menester
En la vena de mudança.

Y para ser esta cura
Mas acabada y perfeta,
Vençeres la calentura
De quererme dar tristura, Comiendo cosas de dieta,
Que seran, por no dañarme :
Las almendras socorrerme,
Las granadas alegrarme,
Las mançanas consolarme,
Con açucar de quererme.

Y para dexar vençido
Vuestro mal con mas vitoria,
No leuays, ques defendido,
Agua cruda del oluido,
Mas cozida con memoria.
[f. 130 v. b.] Ya veys mucho de mirar
En esta rregla, que manda Que no gustes el manjar Desquiuar ℣ densañar,
Por ques dañosa vianda.

FIN

Y vos enesto mirando,
De vuestra salud se gana;
Mis consejos no mudando,
Los contrarios oluidando, Quedares del todo sana;
Y antes quel daño salarge,

Luego tened este medio
Por que no duela y amarge;
Que sy days lugar que carge,
Sera dudoso el remedio.

[C. 130 v. b.] OTRAS COBLAS [1]

Esperança mia, por quien
Padeçe mi coraçon
Dolorido,
Ya, señora, ten por bien
De me dar el galardon Que te pido;
Que pues punto dalegria
No tengo sy tu me dexas, Muerto so.
Vida dela vida mia,
Aquien contare mis quexas
Sy a ty no?

[f. 131 a.] Aquel dios damor tan grande
Que consuela los vençidos Amadores,
De mando asoluto mande
Que fyeran entus oydos
Mis clamores,
Y la justa piedad
Que a persona tan fermosa Perteneçe,
Inclyne tu voluntad
A mi vida dolorosa
Que padeçe.

1. Ochoa, loc. cit., pp. 454-5 prints first and last stanzas.

Aquel tanto desear
Que faze ser porfiado
Al amante,
Y no lo dexa mudar
Y quanto mas es penado
Mas costante;
Y lo que faze ser mustias
Alas amantes mujeres
Medio muertas,
Te faga que mis angustias
En señalados plazeres Me conuiertas.

Aquel gran dolo que suele
Ynclinar las mas esentas,
Amesura
[f. 131 b.] Te duela; que sy te duele,
No puede ser que no syentas
Mi tristvra,
Do quiça podra naçer
Que conla penada vida
Que biuieses,
Y viendo mi padeçer,
Tu misma de ty vençida
Te vençieses.

Torre domenaje fuerte,
Fortaleza que tan bella
Nos pareçe,
Congoxa damor despierte
Tu coraçon, que syn ella Sadormece.
O arco de flechas rrabiosas
Que my salud desesperas!

Ṣabe çierto
Que sy todas estas cosas
No te hazen que me quieras, Yo soy muerto.

[f. 141 v. a.] Escucha los mensajeros
Que lleuan nuevas estrañas;
Que te harten
Mis sospiros verdaderos Que marrancan las entrañas Quando parten;
Y tenpla la mi pasyon
Con que yo telos enbio Padeciente,
Y syenta tu coraçon
La graue pena quel mio
Por ty syente.

Que sy no te veo, muero
Conla soledad que acusa
La mi vyda;
Y viendo te, desespero
En saber que no se escusa Mi partyda.
Entonçe syento vn plazer
Rrebuelto con vn dolor
Que mensaña,
Y quando quiero escojer
Lo que pienso que es mejor, Mas me daña.

[C. 137 v. b.] DEZIR

Del buen castillo de Pliego Partiendo triste pensando,

Rruyseñor de su sosyego Fallen la verta cantando.
Vna gran pieça mirando

CANCION [1]

[C. f. CXL.] Por fuir de triste suerte Cedo morir me conviene;
Quiça que tiene la muerte
Lo que la uida no tiene.

Sospiros, lagrimas, ffuego Maquexan sin ayudarme,
Que vn ora de sosiego
No tengo para partarme.
Ansi que por meyor (sic) suerte
Mucho morir me conuiene,
Por uer si tiene la muerte
Lo que la uida no tiene.

1. This poem is in a different script from that of the others in the volume, and much more modern. The ink is different and looks newer, as does that of the foliation of this page; and the creased margin is wider than that of the rest of the ms. The stamp of the library (Bibliotecae Regiae, in red) is on the verso of the preceding leaf, which would allow the supposition that this poem is a later addition to the Cancionero, written in after the collection was considered finished.

[G. f. 96 v.] RESPUESTA DE CHRISTOUAL BERMUDEZ [1].

A los fuertes temeroso,
A poderosos poder,
Vn saber, vn trasçender,
Vna gloria de vn valer,
Grant discreçion y reposo
Por la suma gloriosa,
Vos lo dio naturaleza;
Tal alquimia, tal riqueza,
Con liberdad ꝛ franqueza,
En vos, señor, reposa.

Y crea que poco queda
En mi saberes pujantes,
Nin me son mucho constantes;
Con la vida de ynorantes

Que os faga salir de tiento.

CABO

Non dubdo por mis baratos
Vos y el moço aveys gastado
Mucho mas delo contado;
Mas pues lo teneys pasado, Conportad mis desbaratos.

[G. f. 96.] COPLAS DE PEDRO DEL CASTILLO A CHRISTOUAL BERMUDEZ, EL DE CORDOUA[1].

Cauallero generoso,
Virtuoso enel nasçer,

1. In R², no. 18 (cf. Mussafia, loc. cit., p. 18, also supra note on the poem of Chr. Bermudez).

Nasçido conel saber, Por vuestro grant merescer,
Esfuerço caualleroso,
Dad osar al que non osa
Delante vuestra agudeza, Discreçion ꝛ gentileza,
Que demuestre su sinpleza
Con mano muy themerosa.

Y dad me lugar que pueda
Responder por consonantes, Vuestras coplas admirantes Segunt los mitrificantes, ꝛ pagar en tal moneda
Qual vos, señor, me adeudastes
Bien contra toda razon,
Por sola la presunçion,
Syn aver ynformaçion
De aquello que sospechastes.

[f. 96 v.] Como quier que non quisiera
Conplir vuestro mandado enesto,
Y por ende yo protesto
Que so forçado y molesto,
Por saber que vos pluguiera.
Mas pues vuestros reuesados
Consonantes son, y tales
Que apenas tienen yguales, Consentid que desiguales
Los responda yo mudados.

[A. f. 30.] [1] LOPEZ DE ÇUNYIGA [2]

Segond tu fermosura Houieras tal amador,
Non siento [3] merescedor
Ninguno por su ventura, Sin preiudicar natura.

Absalon el muy fermoso,
Ahun que resuscitasse,
Non es tan digno que amasse
Tu donayre generoso;
A Narciso [4] el amoroso
Tan indigno me lo fallo;
De los otros yo me callo,
Que non hay tal criatura
De ygualar [5] con tu figura.

[G. f. 100 v.] TESTAMENTO QUE FIZO DIEGO DE LEON [6]

Ffallando me ser çercano
Dela muy esquiua muerte, Testamento firme fuerte,
Segunt pecador humano :
Ordeno sean consientes
Mis hermanos ℣ amigos,
Tan bien ruego alos presentes
Que les plega ser testigos.

Otrosi avos, notario,
Plega luego de signar

6. In R^2, no. 23 (cf. Mussafia, loc. cit., p. 18)

Mis mandas, ꝛ yo pagar Mandare vuestro salario.
ꝛ sean testamentarios
Los que aman leal mente;
Mis deueres aduersarios
Conpliran de continente.

Enel nonbre del que creara
Çielos, tierra, noche ꝛ dia,
Yo mando el alma mia
Al Señor que la conprara;
ꝛ mando mi voluntad
Ala Virgen coronada,
Ques fuente de piedad,
Socorro de mi llamada.

[f. 101.] Mando ala Madalena,
Como quier que me guio
En vida catiuo ẏo
Do senti dolor y pena,
Que le sean luego dichas
Quinze misas ofresçidas
A las virgines bendichas, ꝛ çiento muy bien conplidas.

E mando mi coraçon
Aquella cuyo catiuo
Fuy, ꝛ sere quanto biuo;
En señal de redempçion
Mando amis gasajados
Que le fagan conpania,
Por que todos sus cuydados
Se le tornen alegria.

E mando ala mi vista,
Aquel dia que yo muera,
Que sea dela que fuera
Amada de mi, bien quista,
Amandole [1] los sentidos
Todos quantos que restauan,
Por que sean conosçidos
De aquella por quien penauan.

[F. 101 v.] E mando ser sepultado
Mi cuerpo en dura tierra,
Con mortaja sin desfierra,
De sus ropas despojado.
ꝛ mando que luego escriuan
Ençima la sepoltura
Atales letras que digan :
Aqui jaz el syn ventura.

Señores, todas mis mandas Presta mente conpliredes, ꝛ mando que me lleuedes
Syn llanto fazer en andas
Con doze fachas ardiendo,
Por las quales luz veria
La triste alma que seguiendo
Mis quereres penaria.

Monesterios ꝛ abadias Mando que sean llamados,
ꝛ vayan bien hordenados,
Cantando las ledanias (sic),
Comigo al santo tenplo
Do sienpre he de morar ;

1. Read : mandandole ?

ꝛ sera mi muerte enxienplo
Aquien pena por amar.

Las prioras ꝛ abadesas
Digan : venite adoremus, Exultemus, jubilemus ;
Las otras monjas profesas,
Por mi, triste, trabajado,
Que paso syn detenencia
A do sere sentenciado,
Mas non se de que sentençia.

Todas quantas bien amades,
Casadas, viudas, donzellas,
Feas, comunas, ꝛ bellas,
Señoras, por mi digades
Siete salmos de Dauid
Por que non sea perdido;
Memento tan bien dezid,
Pues tal fin he fenesçido.

Pues fenezco y no espero Eneste siglo beuir,
Quiero, señores, dezir
La causa por que yo muero :
Por mirar dueña fermosa
Mi vista desordenada Me causo muy peligrosa
Cruel muerte desastrada.

[f. 102 v.] Non era yo triste dotado
De tal muerte resçebir, Mas pesar desordenado,
ꝛ deseo de seruir

Esta señora que viera
De toda beldat conplida,
Ved aqui que me fiziera
Sin por que perder la vida.

Yo llegue por ver su faz
De la muy gentil señora,
Mas llegando a desora,
Amor entre guerra y paz
Me causo, por donde dexo Aquesta vida presente,
Dela qual triste me alexo,
Avn que non de buena mente.

ULTIMA

Mi querer non es anexo
De pasar tal açidente,
Mas yo muero por grant quexo
Por mi dama ser ausente.

[B. f. 194.] MENDOÇA A SU AMIGA

Hercules, que la serpienta
Ydra mato syn themores,
Se fallara en sobreuienta,
Sy se viera en tal afruenta
De vos requerir de amores ;
Que vos veo tan benina,
ℨ vos veo tan loçana,
Que non se tomar dotrina :
Sy vos ore por diuina,
O vos ame por humana.

[F. f. 119 v.] DEL CARDINAL DE MENDOÇA

Dama, mi gran querer
En tanto grado me tocca,
Que no me puedo valer ;
Mi biuir por vos se apoca.

Apoca se mi biuir
Por amar demesiado (sic),
No me aprouecha el seruir,
Ne me aprouecha el cuydado.
Vòi me del todo a perder ;
La vida mia se apoca :
Esto causa mi querer
Que en tanto grado me tocca.

[F. . 119 v.] DEL MEDESMO CARDINAL

Mi vida se desespera
Timiendo si perdimento,
Ca do yo sigo raçon,
Raçon consiente que muera.

Y si mi seruir pareçe
Mereçer por mas querer os, Visto que nada os mereçe,
Yo no puedo mereçer os.
Y si algun remedio spera
Mi vida por defension, Querer yo con vos raçon,
Raçon consiente que muera.

[E. f. 187.] [1] MOXICA [2]

Dios vos [3] salue, Rey humano,
Uno [4] de los escogidos
Reyes [5], inclitos, sabidos
En el collegio mondano [6].
Rey de tanta magnitud,
Ayays [7] larga salud;
Sabed [8] que vuestra virtud
Desperto my ruda mano.

E si en tan [9] ligero labio
Me fablesce despartiua [10],
[f. 187 v.] En la prolacion actiua,
Non catada en estrelabio [11];
Si vos [12] fuere paresciente
Que vaya defficiente,
Vos, como Rey prudente,
Suplires con seso sabio [13].

Mercurio, de quien yo fio
El calamo reserante (sic),
En my fauor se leuante
Si puntando [14] desuario;
E, senyor, vos apuntat,
Arguyt, e desputat,
Si passa difficultat
En el proposito myo.

Jheronimo de camino
A my consideracion,
Pido la instruction [1]
Al doctor sacro Agustino [2];
Ambrosio [3], con el Gregorio,
De [4] su sancto consistorio
Me prometan adjutorio,
Por que me sienta mas digno.

[f. 88.] Por quanto tengo recelo
Que larga prolixidat
Non tiene graciosidat,
Nyn da plazer nyn consuelo,
Comensando en el del [5] medio,
Seneca, Petrarcha [6], Ouidio,
E breue en el subcidio,
En el mistico libello.

El my grossero tractado
Donado synse destreza,
Soccore con gentileza
El Florentino fondado [7].
Omero con efficaçia [8]
Me preste loquela e gracia [9],
Por que con maior audacia Relate lo processado.

Por la breue fin de aquell
Que Dyos haya, noble infante,

Carne vuestra semeiante,
Obrada por hun pinzell,
Yo non vos he visitado
Fasta ver vos oluidado
Del dolor que vos ha dado
Ynpia muerte y [1] cruel.

[f. 188 v.] Mas, señor [2], es ordenança
So grand judicio de vos,
Que tenemos maior Dios Aquien damos alabanza.
Pues se faze lo que quiere,
Quando tal fortuna fiere,
A buen seso se requiere Mondifficacion (sic), templança [3].

Poco cierto es de viuir,
Por la regla vniuersal
E deuda tan general
Que non podemos fuyr.
De [4] muerte non se reffrena :
Qual se quiera fin es pena,
Enpero, si Dios ordena
Non es nuestro resestir [5].

Rey de virtut singular,
Por non vos entristecer,
Quiero syn licencia tener ;
Mas deueys considerar,

1. H lacking — 2. E senyora — 3. H modestificaçion e tenplança — 4. H do — 5. H regestir.

Maguer sea el caso fuerte,
Non es de planyer [1] la suerte
De qualquier que guste muerte
En el deuido logar [2].

[f. 189.] Que tan [3] subito se cuele
Hun principe tan notable,
Plaga es inconportable ;
Lo que si Dios me consuele,
Del si siente [4] gran companyas [5] ;
Mas de fortuna tan manya [6],
A nosotros los de Espanya [7],
Estranyamente [8] nos duele.

Sacra Mayestad, yo fuyo
Del [9] inmenso proponer,
Lo que por el deue ser,
A vos todo lo atribuyo, Obsequias continuando,
Sus debitos descargando,
Por el anima rogando
El [10] muy gran aliuio [11] suyo.

Tal es el aliuiamento [12]
Del deffuncto translatado,
Ser a Dios recomendado,
Por solemne complimento [13] ;
E despues, tornar plazer
Neto vestir e traher,
En la mente retener
Intrinsico sentimiento [14].

[f. 189 v.] Si [1] se podiesse cobrar
Lo que la muerte arebata,
Nyn por oro nyn por plata
Non lo sabriamos dexar.
Y pues syn precio nynguno
El morir es opportuno,
Mostrat me [2] por llorar Vno
Que vimos resuscitar.

Mas vuestro seso complido [3]
Donde discreccion [4] (sic) se pone,
Imploro [5] que me perdone,
Si fablo sobre salido ;
Ca de sentimiento rudo
No guardes fablar agudo ;
Por lo qual [6] la fabla mudo,
En otro caso mouido.

Humano [7] Rey, escuchareys
El principio de my tema,
Que segund la pluma [8] rema,
Es, senyor, que vos fazeys
Tres diuisas o senyales [9],
La [10] sentencia delas quales
Por partifiçios [11] eguales [12],
Denuncio segund vereys :

[f. 190.] Lo primero declara(n)do,
Si vostra [13] merced lo mira.

1. E e si — 2. E que — 3. H seso conplido — 4. H discriçion — 5. H jnploro — 6. E laqual — 7. H humado — 8. E que la pluma — 9. H señales — 10. H las — 11. E pacifficos — 12. H yguales — 13. H vuestra.

Aquesta vostra cadira [1]
Muestra ser en celso [2] grado ;
E para maior sentencia,
Esta es [3] el alta potencia,
Estado de preheminencia,
Quel mondo [4] vos ha prestado.

A lo qual my [5] vista cobra,
En ella parece luego
Hun muy rigoroso [6] fuego Que encendidamente obra ;
La qual fama o luminaria,
Por declaracion sumaria,
Esta es gracia plenaria
Tanta vostra [7] que vos sobra.

Otramente construyda
Esta foguera abrasante,
Declaro, porque adelante
Podria ser entendida ;
Syn fazer mas larga istoria,
Digo que es prospera gloria,
E luz de vuestra victoria,
Con assaz periglo a vida [8].

[f. 190 v.] Leemos de los Troyanos [9]
Que fezieron [10] grandes cosas ;
Muchas e merauillosas [11]
Sabemos de los Romanos ;

1. H vuesta (sic) cadera — 2. E excelso — 3. E lacking — 4. H que el mundo — 5. H mis — 6. H reguroso — 7. H vuestra — 8. H con asaz peligro avida — 9. E Loemos de troyanos — 10. H fizieron — 11. H maravillosas.

De los Pontiffices godos, Todas sus reglas e modos ;
Pero cessar [1] deuen todos
Donde vos pones las manos.

E podemos escriuir [2]
Que non viene [3] vostro [4] par
En el alto humilitar.
A toda verdat dezir,
Los valientes esforçados,
Los presentes, los passados
Vos den sus vozes e grados,
E todos los por venir.

E vuestra prudencia vista [5]
En los fechos dela guerra,
Hun solo punto non yerra,
En todo perfecto artista.
E ayoles dela toda mesa
Non tomaron [6] tan gran [7] presa,
Assy que maior enpresa
Oy ninguno [8] non conquista.

[f. 191.] Por lo qual mas sufficiente
Nynguno siento fallado
Por gracia, potencia, estado,
En este tiempo presente,
Que se pueda [9] collocar
En la silla, nyn estar [10]
Si non vos, que assituar
Vos podeys esentamente.

1. H çesar — 2. H escrevir — 3. H vive — 4. H vuestro — 5. H e vuestra prudencia vuestra vista — 6. E tornaren — 7. E gran — 8. E alguno — 9. F puede — 10. E acentar (sic).

Concluyo la primera [1] parte
Abreuiando mas presto,
Por quanto prolixo testo [2]
Va contra mesura e arte;
Breue presumo cessar [3],
Que tanta virtut tractar,
Lengua non puede bastar [4],
Nyn yo siento quien me farte.

Dela segunda dire
Por platica [5] mas ligera, Vsando clara manera,
Quanto pueda abreuiarse;
E por mas luengo [6] declaro
El libro non tanto claro, Cuyo blason siento claro [7],
Quando lo discernere.

[f. 191 v.]

Misterio tan alto tiene
Que non me [8] fallo constante,
Ny ydoneo [9], nyn bastante,
Tanto sentido conuiene.
Mas, senyor [10], el libro muestra
Ser [11] la gran sauiesa vuestra
Infinita e mucho diestra,
Que vos rige e vos [12] mantiene.

El qual libro [13] non se puede
Leer, por mucho que fize,
Nyn saber que es [14] lo que dize;
Mas este secreto quede

1. H primer — 2. H prolixo e testo — 3. H çesar — 4. H gastar — 5. E practica — 6. H luego — 7. E preclaro — 8. E lacking — 9. H ydonio — 10. H señor — 11. E esser — 12. H nos — 13. E libre — 14. E lacks que es.

Ala grand [1] proffunditat
Dela vostra [2] mayestat,
Que es entanta quantitat
Que todo saber procede.

Maguer my simpliza [3] entiende
En mas delo [4] razonado,
Que vuestro libro voltado
A grand [5] fondura se estiende [6];
Pero sin ver su lectura,
Digo que es puesta figura
Soffrir en pasciencia pura
Alo que la fortuna entiende.

[f. 192.] Amor, que es en excellencia
Eternal dios inflamado [7],
Lo fizo escriuir [8], notado
De inuisible [9] prudencia,
A fin de vos exalçar [10];
E se puede [11] recontar
Que vos deueys apellar Libro dela sapiencia.

Poetas, sabios, auctores [12]
Son, syn los que ya passaron, Que con vos non egualaron [13],
Nyn los modernos doctores,
Nyn los maestros thologales [14] (sic),
Nyn legistas soffismales,

1. H gran — 2. H vuestra — 3. H sinpleza — 4. E la (sic) — 5. H gran — 6. H entiende — 7. H jnfamado — 8. H escrevir — 9. H jnvesible — 10. H ensalçar — 11. H pueda — 12. H autores — 13. H ygualaron — 14. H mastros (sic) thologales.

Nyn aquellos principales
Delas missas correctores [1].

Assy [2] que nunca jamas
Scientes tanto sopieron [3],
Nyn tantos [4] quantos cogieron
Sciencia con gran compas [5];
Pues nascistes tan perfecto,
Finalmente, syn deffecto,
A que se concluyo [6] hun respecto:
Nynguno non sabe mas.

[f. 192 v.] Pues leuante se Lucano
Con todos sus aderentes,
Virgilio con los prudentes, Valerio Maximiano [7],
E fagan ser coronada
Vuestra prudencia fundada,
De guirlanda laureada,
A [8] estilo e modo anciano.

Vengamos ala tercera
E breue comparacion [9],
Syn fazer dilatacion,
Es la parte postrimera;
Ciertas spigas de millo [10],
En hun manoio senzillo;
Lo que son non se desillo [11],
Nyn se venir en carrera.

Alumbre [1] my manọ ciega,
Faziendo conclusion llena.
Este millo es vna rama
Que da semiente de fama,
Tanto [2] vuestra que non tama [3]
Siempre [4] maior e mas buena.

[f. 193.] E tan bien es franqueza [5]
Que sembrades [6] proueyendo,
E quando mas yo [7] entiendo,
Es me dios comunaleza,
Que prueue [8] en vuestros fechos
E conceios muy derechos;
Con estos tenes estrechos
Los que vos muestran braueza.

De [2] vostra tema es atada;
E siempre [3] se deue atar,
Sobre tal cosa pugnar,
E antes [4] morir que dexar
Vna questıon [5] tan onrada.

[f. 193 v.] E por dar auctoridat [6]
Delo tal, fago responso
Del magno Rey don Alfonso,
Con que furia e volundat
Juro de non se partir
De Gibraltar [7], o de morir
Donde quiso [8] concluyr;
E morio [9], pues vos notat.

E muchas que la scriptura [10]
Alaben de tan ardidas,
Que de batallas e alydas Fizieron su cepultura [11];
Pues officio vuestro es
Se que lo espereceres,
Quanto mas que vos tenes
La cuerda desenvoltura.

Assy [12] que por estas tres
Figuras suso [13] rezadas,
De tres coronas loadas
La cimera mereces:

La de oro por sauieza [1],
La de paia por largueza [2], Augusto Cesar [3] seres.

[f. 194.] E desto fago mudança.
Otra fazienda faziendo,
Empero perdon pediendo [4]
Si fiziera [5] mas tardança.
De todas estas tres cosas,
Syn copia de grandes prosas [6],
Con distinctiones [7] fermosas
Fare breue comparança [8].

Las quales, senyor, hoyt,
Han desser [9] puestas ensemble,
Por que toda gente temble [10]
De vos, fuerte rey ardit;
En la fuente de puxança
Echadas [11] con esperança
De vencer, en semeiança Delas que lanço Dauid.

Contra aqueste filisteo [12]

Dios de Isach [5], ordenat,
Dios de Iacob [6] » otro tanto
El qual vos quiera aiudar [7]
Faziendo vos prosperar,
Y por mas gloria vos dar,
Ala fin vos faga sancto.

Agora, Rey glorioso,
Fago fin e acabamiento
E fenesco [8] el fundamiento
De my libello [9] famoso, Humilmente suplicando [10],

El hombre [1] que vos [2] escriuio
Assy mesmo [3] concluyendo,
A ty [4], senyor, mencomiendo,
A vuestra grand senyoria [5], Porque presto fare via;
A la qual plega saber
Que non se mas atender.

[A. f. 66 a.] [6] PERINIGUEZ [7].

Prompto Rey en los nascidos,
Tu magnifica prudencia
Comporte insuficiencia
Si vacillan mis sentidos, Que mouidos
Conoscer tu condicion[8]
Sienten la su deuocion Conterida con gemidos.

Conosciendo ser llegada[9]
Tu pitima (sic) veluntat
Con mucha benignidat
A la Virgen coronada,

1. H home — 2. H la — 3. H ansi mismo — 4. H aqui — 5. H en vuestra gran señoria.

6. A, f. 66 a; E, 100 v; H, 172. Periniguez. — 7. A, Peminguez; E Pemingues. This poem occurs also in the ms. of the Biblioteca de Palacio, Madrid, whose signature is 2-F-5 (Mussafia X[2]), on fol. 52. It is there given as anonymous. Cf. Aaron Wittstein, An unedited Spanish Cancionero, Revue Hispanique, tome XVI, 1907, p. 307 and note — 8. A; E This line follows the next two — 9. A lagada; E llagada.

Es osada
Mi lengua te presentar
El angelico cantar :
Salue Regina Sagrada.

SALUE[1]

Dios te salue, Reyna Santa,
Madre de Dios poderoso.
El nos salue, pues gozoso
El profeta de ti canta.
[f. 66 b.] De la planta
Dela rays de Jesse,
Florescio la nuestra fe
Que nos muestra gloria tanta

REGINA

Reyna de la castedat,
Por virtud muy infinita,
Alcançaste tan bendita
Inmensa virginidat;
Humildat
Que nascio quando naciste,
Causo que mereciste[2]
Conoscer la Trinidat.

MATER

Madre[3] fuiste de Sant Johan
En el dia de la cruç,
Quando el sol perdio la luç
Por el peccado de Adan.
Sentiran[4]
Los que[5] creen tal misterio, Animable refrigerio
Por el qual se saluaran.

1. A ; E Salue Regina— 2. A This line is lacking — 3. A Mater — 4. H sentian ; A this line reads by mistake : Sentiran los que creen (sic) — 5. H lacking.

MISERICORDIE

Luç de mucha claridat,
Madre de misericordia,
Tu causante la concordia
De Dios con la humanidat.
Santidat
De tan santo nascimiento
Nos libro de perdimiento
De la graue crueldat.

VITA [1]

Vida, gracia, virtut, gloria,
Sentimos, quando traxiste [2]
[f. 66. v. a.] A offrecer el que pariste
Segund quenta la istoria.
Que victoria
Alcanço, bien esperando,
El justo profetizando,
Simeon, de gran memoria!

DULÇEDO

O muy dulce el cordero
Que sin manzilla pariste
E sin culpa padecer [3] viste [4]
Enclauado en el madero!
Verdadero
Es el nuestro Redentor [5],
En tu seno sin pudor
Concepto por mensagero.

SPES NOSTRA

Muy extensa bienandança
Sentimos por que esperaste

1. H vite — 2. H truxiste — 3. E padacer (sic); H padesçio — 4. H lacking — 5. A maestro; E maestre.

Que saldria el que criaste
Del sepulcro syn dubdança,
Esperança
Que speraste con grand seso [1],
Esta tiene la fe en peso,
E muy queda la valança.

SALUE

Muy santa saluacion
Es aquella que hoiste [2]
Del angel, quando temiste
Por la su denunciacion;
Infusion
Que sensiste spiritual,
[f. 66 v. b.] Nos libre dela [3] infernal Pena de grand damnacion.

AD TE

E tu eras la singular
Escogida [4] por Dios Padre, Tu eras la alta madre
Del [5] que nos quiso saluar
E librar
Con poder tan infinito,
Del orrible e gran delito
Que nos quiso encadenar.

CLAMAMUS

Angustiados [6], muy aflitos,
Perdidos por negligencia,
Imploramus (sic) tu clemencia
Que nos munde [7] de delitos,

1. A desseo ; E deceo — 2. E oyeste ; H oyste — 3. A ; E delo (sic) — 4. A Edescogida — 5. A ; E De — 6. A ; E Angustiamos — 7. A ; H mude.

E contritos
Ser nos faga con gemido,
Que cobremos lo perdido
Delos angeles [1] malditos

EXULES

Desterrados por pecado
Dela triste madre Eua,
Necessario assi se prueua
Morir el profetizado, Condempnado
Por Adan que nos perdio.
El Justo nos redemio
Por la sangre del costado.

FILIJ

Fijos somos dela triste
Causadora por su mal [f. 67 a.] Del peccado original,
Segund por Dauid leyste;
Tu podiste
Reparar nuestra tristeza
Santa Virgen, con riqueza
De Jhesu que concebiste.

EUE

O que madre tan cruel
Que por vn solo bocado
Fize (sic) ser desemparado (sic)
El gran pueblo d'Israel!
Hemanuel,
Que es tu fijo Jhesu Christo,
Nos libro por el comisto
Del ácito [2] con la fiel [3].

1. H anieles — 2. H azeto — 3. E fel.

AD TE

Tu guardaste bien guardado [1]
El Auctor de la salut, Que por maxima virtut
A ti quiso ser envyado
Adeudado
Recebir circuncision,
Por la proycacion (sic) [2]
Del primer [3] padre criado.

SUSPIRAMOS

Suspiramos desseando Que pues de tu poderio
Al insuelto aluidrio [4]
Que nos danya cauillando
Pues lamando [5]
El tu fijo, Heli, Heli,
Nos [6] quiso doctrinar asi
Su cabeça inclinando.

[f. 67. b.]

GEMENTES

Necessario es gemir
Pues Eua nos condemno;
E gozar, pues que [7] causo
A [8] tu fijo resurgir
E venir
A juzgar [9] a todo el mundo,
Juez justo, furibundo [10],
Que non hauera [11] quien resistir [12].

ET FLENTES

Loremos [13] pues que loro [14]
El que nascio en Bethlem,

1. H guardando — 2. A, E preuaricacion — 3. H primero — 4. E; A aluedrio — 5. E; H llamando — 6. A; E non — 7. H lacking — 8. H al — 9. E jutiar — 10. A; E feribundo — 11. E houiera; H aura — 12. H regestir — 13. E; H Lloremos — 14. E; H lloro.

Quando vino a [1] Jherusalem [2]
Do Pilato se lauo
E mando [3]
Al pueblo que le [4] juzgasse [5]
O Virgen, quien contemplasse·!
El dolor que ati lego. [6]

IN HAC

Cruel [7] valle comprehenso
De maldat e gran astucia [8]
Consiente nuestra [9] fiducia,
Oluidando el bien extenso
Tan inmenso
Que nos quiso demostrar
El tu fijo, que gustar
Tal muerte quiso suspenso.

LACRIMARUM VALLE

Persuadente la razon
El prepucio fue auciso [10]
Al infante indeniso [11]
Hombre Dios por vnion.
Impleccion
Alcanso la vieja ley,
[f. 67 v. a.] Por las [12] lagrimas del Rey
Que pariste sin [13] passion.

EYA ERGO

Eya es interjeccion
Que demuestra gran desseo ;
Ergo es, segund que leo,
Verdadera conclusion

1. A ; E en — 2. E lacks this line — 3. A ; E read : Las manos e mando — 4. H lo — 5. E jutiasse — 6. E ; H llego — 7. H En el — 8. H dastriçia (sic) — 9. E nostra — 10. H abciso — 11. H indiuiso — 12. A ; E lacking — 13. E paristes.

Que tal vision
Alcançamos de tu fijo
Quel [1] diablo tan [2] infligio [3]
Non nos traya [4] en conclusion.

ADUOCATA

O illustre aduocada [5],
Non quieras aborreçer
Humanidat que merescer
Te causa [6] ser illustrada, Enxalçada [7]
Encima delos [8] cherubines,
E sobre los serafines
Que circundan tu morada.

NOSTRA

Si Eua non se perdiera,
Adam nin sus descendientes [9],
Non hay razones concluyentes
Quel peccado non venciera.
Medianera
Deueys [10] ser, Senyora nuestra [11],
Pues [12] por ley se nos demuestra
Tu esser (sic) madre verdadera [f.67.v.b.] Illos tuos misericordes oculos, Misericordes, sin furor
Muy suaues demostraste [13]
Tus hojos quando miraste
Al bendicto [14] Embaxador [15].

1. H que — 2. H muy — 3. H inflicto — 4. H trayga — 5. H abogada — 6. H causo — 7. H enfançada — 8. H de lacking — 9. E decenciones — 10. H deue — 11. E nostra — 12. H f. — 13. E demostra se — 14. A vencido ; E vendicto — 15. E enbaixador; H enbaxador.

En amor
Incensa como sentilla [1] (sic), Respondiste : ecce ancilla [2],
A mandado del Senyor.

AD NOS CONUERTE

Vuelue ya con piedad
Los tus ojos muy benignos
A nos tristes, tan indignos, Menguados de caridat.
De maldat
Que nos tiene encadenada [3]
Por la conuersion emanada [4]
Hayamos sinceridat.

ET JHESUM

El que seyendo concebido
Por palabra muy jocunda [5]
Quiso que fuesses fecunda [6]
De Dios, en carne vestido;
E nascido,
Non ribo [7] la excellencia
Virginal, que en tu presencia
Houo el angel asertido [8].

BENEDICTUM

Bendito por quien saliente [9]
La estrella[10] parescio
Alos Reyes, e denuncio
[f. 68 a.] En las partes doriente

1. E sentella ; H çentella — 2. H ançila — 3. A An additional incomplete lines follows this one : por la conseruacio, evidently a mistake and underlined — 4. H humana — 5. A ; E complida — 6. A ; E segunda — 7. A cibo — 8. A assentido — 9. H soliente — 10. A La strella ; H Las (sic) strella.

Eminente,
Ser nascido Dios e hombre
De ti, Virgen, e su nombre Ser Jhesu omnipotente [1].

FRUCTUM

O fructo celestial
El que ante que naciesse
Fue escoger [2] do floresciesse
Noble arbol [3] virginal!
Humanal
Lo mostraste en el suelo,
Dando gloria en el cielo,
E paç en lo terrenal.

VENTRIS [4] TUI

Por misterio incessando [5]
Trinidat purificado [6]
Pudo ser aposentado,
En tu seno venerando [7],
Sojuzgando
Al mundo, que comprender
Non pudo, nin conoscer
Al Senyor tan admirando.

NOBIS POST HOC EXILIUM

Despues dela perdicion,
Del destierro que sentimos,
Santa Virgen, te pedimos
Graciosa resureccion
E bendicion
De Jhesu crucificado,

1. A omniponte — 2. H coger — 3. E albor — 4. H ventrix — 5. H incesante — 6. H purificando — 7. E venerado (sic).

[f. 68. b.] Fijo tuyo coronado
Con espinas [1] de vlison [2].

OSTENDE

Muestra nos lo [3], pues alço [4]
El vexillo triunfante,
El con mano militante
Ante que resucito,
Quebranto
Las clausuras [5] infernales,
E los padres principales
Del profundo los libro.

O CLEMENS

Por el Senyor de Castilla,
Rey de gran prosperidat,
Que haya tranquillidat,
Santa Virgen, pues humilla
La rodilla
Ante ti con reuerencia
Por ti sienta conueniencia
En su reyno [6] sin manzilla.

O PIA

Houiste muy visceral
Piedat quando pariste
A Jhesu, que tu cobriste
El pesebre temporal,
Animal;
Si desuiando sapiençia [7],

Conoscio la gran potencia
Del misterio diuinal.

O DULCIS

Que dulçor insaciable
Del paraclito sentiste,
[f. 68. v. a.] Quando a Elizabet [1] dixiste
Con vulto tan amigable, Razonable:
"Mi anima engrandesce [2]
Al Senyor, por quien padesce
El peccado perdurable".

O [3] UIRGO

Dios que pudo conseruar
La çarça [4] que se mostraua Visible [5] que se quemaua [6]
Yleza, sin se quemar
Preseruar [7]
Te pudo [8] por tal manera
Que pariestes [9], y sincera[10]
Sola fuesses de loar.

SEMPER

Ante del [11] parte te departo
Ser virgen por marauilla,
En el parto sin manzilla,
E virgen despues del parto.
Si coharto
Mis sentidos a pensar,
No es nascido quien contar
De tus bienes pueda el quarto.

MARIA

Por primera imposicion
Segund[a] alegria [1]
Es el tu nombre Maria,
Luç de nuesta redempcion.
[f. 68, v. b.] Por vision
Los nascidos non veran, Menos los que nascieran,
Nombre de tal perpeccion.

ORA PRO NOBIS, SANCTA DEI GENITRIX

Por el Rey que(s) muy deuoto
Es a ti, con gran solercia
Pospuesta mayor inercia
Mundana, segund que voto
E [2] subnoto,
Ruega tu, Madre de Dios,
E despues, ora pro nos [3]
Pueblo tuyo tan innoto.

UT DIGNI EFFICIAMUR PROMISSIONIBUS CHRISTI

Por que siempre digna [4] sea
Dela gloria sempiterna
Su anima e vita eterna,
Que por nuestra fe guerrea [5],
Pues prouea [6]
Tu merced al Rey primero,
Lo segundo [7] e postrimero,
Al pueblo que te dessea.

La bendita Elizabed [1],
Que de tu vista [2] gozosa,
Muy graciosa
[f. 69. a.] Te dixo : bendita eres
[3]Sobre [4] todas las mugeres,
E al mundo piadosa.

PER OMNIA SECULA SECULORUM

Por siempre e toda via Continue seruir a ti
El buen Rey, que fasta aqui [5]
Con porfia
De guerrear los infieles,
Con batallas muy crueles
Cansando su [6] tirania.

AMEN.

Amen digo con temor
Por fazer aqui [7] diceso [8].
Bienmiran [9] si hay excesso [10]
Que colluda [11] con error
En tu leor [12];
Que mi mano no lo sienta
Protesto [13], que non consienta
Mi seso tu desleor [14].

FIN

Fin sea [15] a honor
Dela Virgen afluenta.
Esta letra se presenta [16]
Al gran Rey nuestro Senyor.

[G. f. 97.]

COPLAS QUE FIZO PEDRO DE RIBERA, EL DE CORDOUA, ALA MUERTE DEL MARQUES DE SANTILLANA, SEÑOR DELA VEGA, DIRIGIDAS AL PRIOR DE SANT JOHAN [1].

Por que toda grant virtud
De virtude ha plazer,
Y pesar en multitud
Quando mengua de salud
Virtud faze falleçer,
Aveys pesares avido
Por el marques syngular
Ser del mundo falleçido,
Do se muestra ser perdido
Grant parte del bien obrar.

Y desto, noble prior,
Prior en toda bondat,
Bondat os mouio dolor,
Dolor por la fin, señor,
De su noble humanidat.
Por lo qual fue vuestro mando
[f. 97 v.] Ami que de su valer Loase mitrificando (sic);
Mas mill perdones demando
Por mi no satisfazer.

Muchos fueron los actores
Que las artes asayaron;
Non son dichos ynuentores,
Sy no aquellos subçesores
Que mas las perfecçionaron;
Asy quien respecto fundo,

1. In R² no. 21 (Cf. Mussafia, loc. cit., p. 18).

Este muy grant orador
Por su buen obrar jocundo,
Deuia ser dicho enel mundo De virtudes ynuentor.

Era todo por entero
En qual quiera noble fecho Varonil muy verdadero,
Y en obras de cauallero
Cauallero muy derecho;
De coraçon y de manos
Era tan grant esforçado,
Que por sus fechos humanos,
Siendo en tienpo de Romanos,
Fuera dictador fallado.

[f. 98.] Ya de franquezas conplidas
El las fazia tanto llenas,
Que estauan bien conosçidas
Para ganar las dos vidas
Ser conplida mente buenas:
Esta vida con los dones
Que se muestran en presencia;
La otra con las razones,
Dotrinas, ꝛ perfecçiones
Que proçeden de prudençia.

Yendo tras buenos consejos
Fuya de fazer dolo,
Sus obras eran espejos,
Y muy mas que de mill viejos
Valia su consejo solo;
Cosa nunca lo alteraua
Asalyr de ser temprado,
Con justiçia se juzgaua,

Y con caridat amaua,
Con caridad era amado.

I fortaleza lo tenia
En vna firmeza fuerte;
Por virtud, virtud siguia (sic);
Y syntie ser alegria Yr atomar buena muerte.
Si le plaze desta vida,
Era por fin que entre nos
Sus virtudes syn medida
Ganasen aver cabida
Ante la vision de Dios.

[f. 98 v.] Si fue bueno su exerçer
La fe lo puede dezir,
Pues que dezir ꝛ fazer
Non falto de sostener
Quanto duro su beuir.
Es de tener confiança
Por sus obras con nobleza.
Todas llenas de esperança,
Que ya tiene la folgança Resçebida enel alteza.

Y atal persona llorar
Se deue mucho por obras,
Pues su noble dotrinar
Nos fazia exerçitar
Virtudes en todas sobras.
Lloren aquellos que rigen
Taṇ bien gentes como templos,
Y aquellos aquien corrigen,
Pues por su muerte se afligen
Los mas de buenos enxenplos.

Y pasado algunt pesar,
Por lo dicho non çesemos
Nueuo plazer de tomar,
Por ques ydo atal lugar
Qual plega a Dios que cobremos.
Que quier dezimos murio,
Entendído mas profundo,
Como se desanimo,
Pueden dezir que nasçio
Su nasçimiento segundo.

[f. 99.] Si plugo nuestro nasçer,
Plega nos mill tanto al doble,
Pues partidos deste ser,
Bien vsando, el renasçer
Es para vida mas noble.
Por eso, noble varon,
Quered de vos despedir
La pena desto y pasion,
Pues vos dize la razon
Que alegreys vuestro sentir.

CABO

Dios, que esta vida le dio
Con grandes prosperidades,
Y por las obras que obro
Ala mejor lo lleuo, Segunt dizen sus bondades,
Avos, señor, quiera dar
Entramas en perfecçion,
Por que vuestro desear
Se pueda bien entregar
Del deuido galardon.

Non dessea otra riqueza
Sino hauer por gentileza
Tal respuesta de su dama.
De lo al [7] non curaria,
Si este [8] pecho acabasse
Mi senyora, que [9] jurasse Que nunca me dexaria[10].

Deue los [10] llamar grosseros [11].

El [12] galan en ningun dia
Non deue comer cosido [13]
Sino fruyta e rostido [14],
Que quita malencolia [15];
Pero cenar toda via Esto poco e non abasto [16];
Non tomar cuenta del gasto,
Ques modo de grosseria.

Ha [17] de ser [18] muy mesurado
El galan [19] en el beuer;
Por causa de bien oler,
De toda salça quitado.

DEZIR QUE FIZO FERNAN SANCHEZ QUANDO FUE AL LUGAR DO FUE NAÇIDO ꝛ FALLO LOS ONBRES TODO VIEJOS.

Dezid amigos, parientes, señores,
Daquesta villa del mi naçimiento,
Do vin por rreposo del mi entendimiento, ꝛ voy con angustias ꝛ grandes dolores,
Que mudamiento es este que veo
En vuestros senblantes, jesto, meneo?
Quanto mas firme miro ꝛ oteo,
Mi coraçon syente mayores tenblores.

Que vos conoçi los tyenpos pasados
Cuerpos derechos, gruesos, loçanos,
Fuertes, fermosos, graçiosos, vfanos,
Sueltos, ardidos, de vos muy pagados;
Agora vos fallo los dientes podridos,
Los ojos muy fondos en sy encogidos,
Los vuestros colores buenos perdidos,
Secos ꝛ canos ꝛ muy arrugados.

Caydos las çejas, las fazes turbadas,
Los pasos cortillos ꝛ bien vagarosos,
Y los contynentes no muy donosos,
Las vuestras brauezas ya sosegadas;

El vno fablando vn poco çaçea (sic),
El otro andando avezes coxquea,
El otro se pone antojos que vea,
De dya en dia pasando jornadas.

[f. 135.] El vno se quexa de mal dela yjada,
El otro se syente delos pulmones,
El otro padeçe mal de rriñones,
El otro de gota [es] muy afincada,
El otro no tyene quixal enla boca,
El otro se syente la vista muy poca,
El otro sy come, luego lo troca,
El otro escupe flema salada.

Lo mas que me pesa daquesta fazienda Es que me cabe dende gran parte, ꝛ que no se via megia ni arte
Por do estos males rreçiban enmienda;
Mas antes y tan de mal en peor
Asy avasallo como a señor, Fasta que venga el gran segador,
Que de fin a todo segun la leyenda.

Y pues enesto la nuestra rriqueza
No pone cobro, segun que pareçe,
Mas ella ꝛ nos de todo pareçe,
Conviene que luego, syn otra pereça,
Fagamos enmienda de nuestros pecados
Con muchas limosnas bien confesados,
Por que del fuego do van los dañados
Nos lybrel Señor por su gran nobleza.

[C. 133 a.] DEZIR QUÉ FIZO EL BACHILLER JUAN DE SAN PEDRO FABLANDO CONLA SEPOLTURA DE MAÇIAS [1]

— Sepoltura de Maçias, Salueos Dios.
— Ayays alegres dias.
Quien soys vos?
— Vn onbre desconsolado Quelo vengo buscar, ꝛ supe queneste lugar
Lo teniades guardado.
— Verdad es que yo lo tengo.
Quelo queres?
— El dolor con quel (sic) vengo,
No podeys
Saberlo vos que soys tierra, ꝛ de gran enemistad,
Que tragays syn piedad
Al bueno como al que yerra.
— Por que dezis tanto mal?
Que pecays.
— Mas, quien nunca vido tal Como vsays?
— Que mal vso que dezis?
— Digo bien que al valiente,
Y al fermoso, y al prudente,
A todos consumys.
— A que mal aves fablado?
— Antes bien.
— No sabes que mes mandado?
— Y de quien?

1. Cf. Ríos, loc. cit., vol. VI. p. 72, note 1; also A. Wittstein, loc. cit., p. 328, and note 3: X^2 attributes this poem to Diego de San Pedro.

[f. 133 b.] — Del que lo puede mandar;
Por ende ver no podres
Al que buscays ꝛ queres, Ni menos conel estar.
— O que pesar maves dado!
— Y por que?
— Sy con cuyta vine cuytado,
Tal mire;
Caun sy con mi mano
Algun su hueso tañera,
Çierta mente yo fuera
De todos mis males sano.
— Y el muerto tyen virtud?
— Este sy,
Que sus dichos dan salud,
Yo lo oy,
A los que damor son llagados;
ꝛ los finados an gloria Quando leyen su estoria
Los tristes enamorados.
— Y tanto mal es el vuestro?
— Sy, en verdad,
Que sienpre me fue syniestro
ꝛ syn bondad
El amor que da mal fin
Aquien faze su mandado,
Como dio aeste cuytado Maçias, a quien yo vin.
— Sy os fabla avnque muerto, Folgares?
[f. 133 v. a.] — Sy dello me fazes çierto, Ver lo es.
— Yo vos lo traere; llamalde, Que el vos rrespondera.

— Sy asy fuere, no sera Aqui mi venida enbalde.
— Llamaldo, que helo aqui Ya comigo.
— Maçias ¿estays ay?
— Sy amigo;
Que queres o aque venis?
— A ver vuestro monumento,
Y a contaruos el tormento
En que biuo, sy morys.
— Ya vos oy, avnque pensastes Que non oya.
— Pues mis males escuchastes, Dadme via Por vuestra merçed, señor,
Como sea rreleuado
Algun tanto de cuydado, De pena y de dolor.
— Ya vos dezis quel amor
Trae daño
Al ques amador con engaño?
— Antes digo que trae muerte.
— Pues que mas queres saber Para de uos defender
De qual quier congoxa fuerte?
[f. 133. v. b.] — Y vos me days tal consuelo?
— Por que no?
— Por que no he parte dun pelo
En mi yo Desque al amor me dy;
ꝛ vos por eso moristes,
Avnque no como quisystes, Segun lo yo aprendy.
— Verdad es que por seruirllo

Me perdy,
Como quier que deseruirllo Fue en mi,
ꝛ Dios me dio aluedrio
Para poderlo escusar,
Mas quise morir por amar Jentil dona de gran brio.
— Agora, que deuo fazer Segun desto ?
Callarme ꝛ padeçer
Con buen gesto ?
O del todo amor dexar ?
Lo qual es feo ꝛ graueza
ꝛ pecar en jentyleza,
Do se bana (sic) el buen fablar.
— Agora doy mas, ved Lo mejor.
— Mas quiero morir, sabes, Syn fauor,
E segir vuestras pisadas,
Oue no topar en vileza;
Pues buen amar es proeza,
Sy quier con cuytas dobladas.
— Y vos, ya que vos tardays ?
[f. 134. a.] Yo lo vy,
Mas tanto me consolays,
Que daqui
No me querria partir ;
Pero pues vos enojays,
Quiero meyr; ved que mandays
En que vos pueda seruir.

FIN

— Dios vos dexe alegre yr

Por do quier que deseays.
— Y avos, sy en pena andays, Enbreue della salir.

EL C^dor^ STELA

[D. 79 v.] Tan gran byen vy en vos ver, Y tal mal del partir syento,
Que dexando my querer
Partire con el tormento.

Como al cuytado doliente
Lo que mas daña mas plaze,
Assi al triste dausente
La salut se contrafaze,
Affin que vuestro valer
Por vn tal consentimyento
No quede syn my querer,
Hy yo parta syn tormento.

OTRO SUYO.

Soledat y nueuas quexas:
Ho se triste sy te sigua,
O que sospirando digua:
O vida, adonde me dexas?

Seguyendo, delegara
La triste cuytada vida,
Quedando, fenescera
Con dolor de tu partida.
A desseo byen me aquexas
En querer, my enemigua, Faziendo que ausente digua:
O vida, adonde me dexas?

[C. 138 b.] DEZIR QUE FIZO EL BACHILLER DELA TORRE

No pueden masençelarse
Ya mis daños tan estremos,
Ni dolores tan supremos Sufren mas desymularse;
O sy pudiesen pintarse
Mis males en vna tabla!
Pues por escrito ni fabla
No pueden manifestarse.

Ved, sèñores, açidente
De muerte nunca plañida, ȝ plañid incouiniente
De plaga tan dolorida, De mi, que tengo la vida
ȝ todo mi bien ausente, ȝ soy, aquella presente,
La cosa mas aborrida.

La pena que mas terresco
Es vida tanto complida,
Y el tormento que padesco
Es la piensa no finida.
O muerte mal comedida
Que matas alos gozosos,
Alos tristes ȝ llorosos
Es tan tarde tu venida!

No rreposan los sentidos
De sy mismos alongados,
Mas penan, pues destruydos
Son de do son sytuados;

[f. 138 v. a.] Atal punto son llegados Que quieren lo que no quieren, ꝛ los daños se rrefieren
Alos syenpre najenados.

Dy, voluntad no bien sana,
Que te mata y atormenta,
Que tristeza te rrezienta, Noche ꝛ dia ꝛ mañana?
Sy es esperança vana,
ꝛ temor ꝛ gran dolor,
Osy te priso el amor
De señora invmana.

Di si gozes, coraçon,
De cuerdo fecho sandio;
Di quien te fizo judio,
De fiero como leon?
Confiessa tu intencion:
En callar synse folgança,
O fablar syn esperança,
Do sufres mayor pasyon?

No temas pueblo ny jente
Que te dygan voluntario,
Que lamor es neçesario,
Tan onesto conueniente;
Ca forma tanto plaziente,
ꝛ donayre tan açepto,
Tanta graçia en vn sujeto
Forçara todo biuiente.

[f. 138 v. b.] Los que miran el rrestante
De todo el syglo mundano,

Veran que buscar senblante
Sera trabajar en vano ;
Ca natura dio su mano
Atanta soliçitud,
Que nunca tanta virtud
Puso notro cuerpo vmano.

Señora, ya rresplandeçe
Vuestra syngularidad
Tanto que la claridad
Alas otras escureçe ; Si a quien vos ama matades,
Por mi fe mal vos pareçe ;
Yo pregunto : que guardades
Para quien vos aborreçe ?

Profunda naturaleza
Que solia ser escasa
Puso enesa uestra masa
Todo su bien y franqueza,
La qual no fue gran sabieza ;
Quanto rrica si beuides,
Tanto sera, sy morides,
Mas pobre quela pobreza.

[f. 139 a.] Sy Dios queria con su syllo
Formar vna tal figura,
Yo me mucho marauillo
Ser tan podriga (sic) natura.
El que vuestra fermosura
ꝛ virtud no conoçio, Aquel solo careçio
De ser triste syn ventura.

Ved mis males començados,
Y mis bienes ya finidos,

Mis plazeres desdeñados,
Mis enojos fauoridos.
No senbleys los descreydos, Qua (sic) creer acada vno,
ꝛ creer a no ninguno,
Vyçios son rrepreendidos.

No es virtud de fortaleza
Afligir al afligido,
Ni vsar de jentileza
Al enemigo vençido,
Mas punir, pues es punido;
Sy vuestra merçed acata,
El lobo fasta la mata
Avn no deue ser corrido.

FIN

[G. f. 78. v.] PORQUE DE MOSEN DIEGO DE VALERA [1]

Por non tener que librar
ꝛ me fallar oçioso,
Avn que no con grant reposo,
He pensado preguntar:
Por que anda de vagar
Alguno mas que solia?
Y por que tan mal se guia
Alguna que es muy loada?
Y por que non dan posada
En la corte syn dinero?
Y por que tanto vandero
Dizen ques nuestro señor?

1. In R^2 no. 24 (Cf. Mussafia, loc. cit., p. 27). Ochoa, loc. cit., p. 467, prints the first 12 and last 4 lines of this poem.

Y por ques tan syn sabor
En Castilla la librança ?
[f. 79.] Por que andan en balança
Algunos que non lo saben ?
Y por que los malos caben
Donde no deuien caber ?
Por que tiene grant poder
Quien non sabe esecutar ?
Y por que se da lugar
Aque sienpre desmedremos ?
Y por que menos valemos, Sienpre siruiendo mejor ?
Y por que el buen amador
Pasa pena desauida ?
Y por que tan mala vida
Pasamos en esta corte ?
Y por que tiene deporte
Alguno que non meresçe?
Y por que sienpre padesçe
El que dize la verdat ?
Y por ques oy la maldat
Auida por sotileza ?
Y por que la gentileza
Es agora destruyda?
Y por ques tanto cayda
La virtud en nuestra España ?
Y por que tanto nos daña
Sin reparo el auariçia ?
Por que tiene grant cobdiçia
Quien tiene mas que penso?
Y por que tanto valio Alguno por lisonjero ?
[f. 79 v.] Y por ques tanto parlero
Quien dize lo que soño

Y por que nunca medro,
Bien seruiendo, el de Valderas?
Y por que buscan maneras
Algunos para medrar?
Y por que de mucho amar
Fingen algunos syn gana?
Y por que esperança vana
Trae amuchos engañados?
Y por que tanto burlados
Se fallan oy en Castilla?
Por que non es marauilla
Que se pierda quanto vedes?
Y por que pescan syn redes Algunos a manos llenas?
Y por que dan graues penas
A vezes por chico error?
Por que de mal en peor
Andamos de cada dia?
Y por que la cortesia
Aprouecha tanto poco?
Y por que tienen por loco
Al que no sabe engañar?
Y por que ya el baratar
Es conuertido en costunbre?
Y por que tiene la cunbre
De belleza quien no digo?
Y por ques de sy enemigo
[f. 80.] Quien busca mas que perdio?
Y por que me parto yo Para nunca mas tornar
Tan alegre como vo,
Despedido de medrar?

YSTORIA
DEL NOBLE VESPESIANO

Dans la deuxième partie des Libros de caballerias [1] publiée en 1908 par M. Adolfo Bonilla y San Martín se trouve, aux pages 377-401, La destruicion de Jerusalem. Ce texte, placé en tête des Extravagantes par l'éminent érudit madrilène et publié par lui avec le soin dont il est coutumier, est traduit d'une œuvre française, Destruction de Jerusalem, qui fut imprimée sept ou huit fois au moins au XVe siècle [2]. Les deux plus anciennes éditions castillanes dont il ait été fait mention jusqu'ici furent imprimées, l'une à Tolède, par Juan Vazquez, vers 1490, l'autre à Séville, par Pierre Brun, en 1499. Chacune de ces éditions ne nous est connue que par un seul exemplaire [3]. M. Bonilla y San Martín s'étant servi, pour sa réimpression, d'une édition postérieure, il m'a semblé qu'il ne serait pas sans intérêt de reproduire l'incunable sévillan, conservé au British Museum [4].

A cabo de quarenta ℣ dos años que Jhesu Cristo nuestro señor fue puesto enla cruz, auia vn hombre que era emperador en Roma, el qual auia nombre Vespesiano, el qual señoreaua el inperio Romano, ℣ Lonbardia, ℣ Tuscana, ℣ Jherusalem, ℣ muchas partidas del mundo, ℣ auia vn fijo que auia nombre Titus. Este emperador Vespesiano adoraua los ydolos, ℣ auia grandes riquezas, ℣ deleytaua se enlos vicios carnales deste mundo. E por el pecado en que biuia, nuestro señor Jesu Cristo embio le vna enfermedad muy grande enla su faz, ℣ aquesta enfermedad [o] llaga que tenia, todos dias le crescia tanto, que todos los de la corte del Emperador veyan que cada dia empeoraua, ℣ houieron de acuerdo que ouiessen fisicos ℣ çurujanos, los mejores que pudiessen auer, assi que houieron de embiar por muchas partes del imperio que viniessen los mejores fisicos ℣ çurujanos a Roma por sanar al Emperador, assi que en pocos dias fueron ayuntados muchos fisicos ℣ çurujanos en Roma por sanar al Emperador, ℣ assi como fueron ayuntados houieron de consejo que fuessen todos a ver al Emperador. E quando fueron ante el, ℣ vieron la su dolencia, acordaron cada vno por si que todos en vno curassen del Emperador. E quando mas le fazian, mas crescia, e tanto, que hombre no le podia ver los dientes ℣ los quexares. Assi que los fisicos, des que vieron que no lo podian sanar ni guarescer, de todos dias se yuan para sus tierras, de manera que no quedo fisico ninguno ni çurujano en Roma, que todos le desampararon, ℣ por miedo del Emperador ày no quedaron. E desque vido el Emperador que todos los fesicos ꝛ çurujanos lo avian desamparado, penso entre si que no seria mucho la su vida, pero que antes que muriesse queria que fuesse su hijo Titus emperador, porque rigiese ꝛ gouernasse todo el imperio. ꝛ fizo venir ante si el su senescal, el qual avia nombre Gays, ꝛ mando le que fiziesse fazer cartas, ꝛ mando por todo el jmperio de parte del Emperador a todos los Reyes ꝛ duques ꝛ condes que dende en ciertos dias fuesen juntados en Roma, por razon que el Emperador queria tener cortes ꝛ queria coronar a su hijo Titus emperador. E assi que las cartas ꝛ los mandados se fizieron por todo el imperio, e en pocos dias fueron ajuntados en Roma reyes ꝛ duques ꝛ condes, ꝛ de otros muchos grandes hombres ꝛ muy muchas compañas. ꝛ quando fueron llegados, fueron a ver al Emperador a los palacios donde estaua, ꝛ fizieron le reuerencia, ꝛ miraron le enla su faz, ꝛ vieron le tan feo ꝛ de mala dolencia, que no pudieron estar que no llorassen del fiero mal del su señor; ꝛ el Emperador, quando los vido assi llorar a todos, empeço les de dezir tales palabras: « Nobles reyes ꝛ hermanos, no lloredes por esta dolencia que los nuestros dioses nos han dado, mas quando a ellos plazera, ellos nos sanaran, mas rogad les que nos quieran dar salud. »

[I.] De la respuesta que dio el senescal al Enperador.

Estonces respondio Gays su senescal, que estaua delante del Emperador, ꝛ en presencia ꝛ delante de todos, ꝛ dixo al Emperador: « De vos me marauillo mucho, señor, como podeys dezir que los vuestros dioses, que son ydolos, ayan poder de vos sanar dela vuestra dolencia, ca ellos no han poder de fazer bien, si no todo mal; la razon, por que enel mundo no ay sino vn dios todo poderoso, el qual hizo ꝛ formo todo el mundo, ꝛ es mucho mayor que los vuestros dioses, que no han poder de vos sanar, mas de vos hazer mucho mal. »

[II.] De las palabras que eran entre el Emperador ℣ el su senescal.

Respondio el Emperador a Gays su senescal, ℣ dixo le : « Como sabes tu que otro dios ay sino los nuestros ? » « Señor, yo lo se muy bien, ℣ dezir vos lo he como lo se oy. Deuedes de saber, señor, que enel tiempo que vuestro padre Cesar Agusto era biuo ℣ era emperador, aqui en Roma avia vn hombre que era discipulo de vn grand profeta que mataron los judios en Jherusalem, ℣ predicaua aqui en Roma a mochas gentes escondidamente, por miedo de vuestro padre ℣ delas sus gentes que no lo matassen ; ℣ dezia como en Jherusalem avia estado vn grande profeta, el qual avia nombre Jesu Cristo, ℣ que este sancto profeta, que auia setenta ℣ dos discipulos que yuan conel, ℣ que entre estos dicipulos eran los doze de su secreto, ℣ de aquestos doze fue el vno que lo vendio a los judios por treynta dineros ; el qual avia nombre Judas Escariote. ℣ quando ouo rescebido los treynta dineros, que se arrepintio dela traycion ℣ del mal que avia fecho, ℣ que torno los dineros a los judios, mas ellos no los quisieron tomar, ℣ que el los echara enel templo de Salamon ℣ que se fue a colgar, ℣ que los diablos le lleuaron la su anima a los jnfiernos para siempre, ℣ que los judios traydores tomaron al sancto profeta muy abiltadamente por los milagros que el fazia, ca el sanaua los enfermos de qualquier enfermedad que fuesse, ℣ sanaua los contrechos ℣ sanaua los endemoniados, ℣ resuscitaua los muertos. Asi, señor, por el bien que aquel sancto profeta fazia, ouieronle muy grande enbidia los traydores delos judios, ℣ assi que lo acusaron ante el adelantado Pilatos, ℣ luego Pilatos juzgo lo ℣ atormento lo muy mal ; ca el fue açotado ℣ coronado de espinas, ℣ fue enclauado con grandes clauos por los pies ℣ por las manos en vna cruz ; ℣ mas avia, que le dieron a beuer fiel ℣ vinagre ; ℣ avia mas, señor, que le dieron vna lançada por el costado. E assi, señor, vos ved el gualardon que le dieronpor el bien que les fazia. E por tanto, señor, yo no se otro dios enel mundo sino vn solo dios todo poderoso, que

fizo el cielo ℣ la tierra, ℣ todos los hombres, ℣ es mayor que todos los vuestros dioses : por que, señor, yo no veo mejor si no que embies en Jherusalem, a donde fue aquel santo profeta crucificado, si por ventura pudiessen auer algunas cosas o reliquias que ouiessen estado de aquel sancto profeta, o que el ouiese tocado, que creo yo que luego que vos, señor, la viesedes, que luego seriades sano, hauiendo vos, señor, firme fe, ℣ esperança, ℣ firme querencia en aquel santo profeta Jesu Cristo como es verdadero Dios todo poderoso. »

[III.] De como el Emperador pregunto si Jesu Cristo creya enlos ydolos.

« Amigo Gays, di me tu si este santo profeta si creya en los nuestros dioses » ; e respondio Gays el senescal, ℣ dixo : « De vos me marauillo, señor, como podeys dezir que el señor de todo el mundo crea enlos ydolos ni enlos vuestros dioses, que el es señor delos dioses ℣ mayor que no ellos. »

[IV.] Como el Emperador enbio buscar las reliquias de Jesu Cristo por su senescal Gays.

Respondio el Enperador al senescal : « Yo vos digo ℣ vos mando que si ello assi es como dezides, que luego agora vos os aparejedes para pasar en Jherusalem alli donde era aquel sancto profeta, ca yo prometo que si este santo profeta me guaresce de aquesta enfermedad ℣ de aquesta dolencia, que yo vengare la su muerte. ℣ dezid a Pilatos mi adelantado, que como no me ha embiado el tributo que me deue de siete años, ℣ dalde esta carta mia. » E luego Gays el senescal se apareja para passar en Jherusalem por mandado del Emperador. E Gays tomo cinco caualleros que lo acompañaron, e despidieron se del Emperador, ℣ caualgaron fasta vn lugar que ha nombre Barlec ℣ es puerto de mar. ℣ quando Gays el senescal fue llegado al lugar, fizo armar vna fusta para passar en Jherusalem : assi fue en quinze dias armada, ꝛ fizo poner enella muchas viandas que fueron menester, ꝛ desque fue bastecida, metieron se dentro; e nuestro señor Dios quiso que tomassen tierra en la cibdad de Acre, e despues partieron de la cibdad de Acre ꝛ arribaron al puerto de Jafa, que es a tres jornadas de Jerusalem. E quando fueron en Jafa, estouieron ay tres dias, ꝛ de alli caualgaron fasta Jerusalem tan solamente el senescal Gays ꝛ los cinco caualleros, ꝛ toda la otra compaña quedo en Jafa.

[V.] De como llego Gays en Jherusalem, ꝛ de como lo acogio Jacob en su casa, ꝛ de como dixo el senescal Gays a Jacob el porque avia venido a Jherusalem.

E al tercero dia llegaron a las puertas de Jherusalem, ꝛ alli fallaron vn hombre que avia nombre Jacob, el qual era padre de Maria Jacobi, ꝛ el senescal demando a Jacob adonde avia posada. ꝛ Jacob respondio al Senescal, ꝛ dixo : « Señor, vos venid comigo, que yo vos mostrare buena posada » ; ꝛ Jacob leuo lo a su casa, ꝛ ouieron viandas, ꝛ refrescaron ꝛ folgaron todo aquel dia, ꝛ des que vino a la noche durmieron ꝛ folgaron ; ꝛ quando vino ala mañana, Jacob se leuanto antes quel senescal, ꝛ des que se leuanto el senescal, Jacob lo tomo por la mano ꝛ dixo le: « Señor huesped, vos seades mucho bien venido ꝛ toda vuestra compaña, porque vos ruego que me digades donde sodes, ꝛ como vos dizen, ꝛ por que causa sodes venido a esta cibdad, ca por ventura yo vos daria recabdo, ꝛ no quedara por mi de vos dar buena endereça de todo, assi como si fuessedes mi hermano, ꝛ desto aved vuestro acuerdo, que no se al que vos diga. » Respondio el senescal, ꝛ dixo a Jacob : « Señor, ami dizen Gays, ꝛ so de Roma, ꝛ senescal de mi señor ꝛ vuestro el Emperador, ꝛ so venido enesta tierra por mensajero de mi señor ꝛ por fallar algunas cosas que sean prouechosas a el. Por que vos deuedes de saber que mi señor el Emperador ha vna dolencia muy fuerte en la su faz, ꝛ no se han podido hallar fisicos ni curujanos enel mundo que lo puedan guarescer, porque aquella dolencia de todos dias cresce, assi que le ha gastado ꝛ comido la su faz de manera, que le parescen los dientes ꝛ los quexares; ꝛ quanto mas melezinas le ponen enla llaga, mas cresce e empeora. Por que sepades que yo soy venido enesta tierra, que si por aventura podria hallar aqui algunas cosas que fuessen prouechosas ami señor, para lo sanar de aquella fuerte dolencia, porque vos ruego que no sea celado ninguna cosa que sea prouechosa para mi señor, ꝛ sabed que yo no tornare jamas en Roma fasta que falle recabdo para sanar al mi señor el Emperador; por que, señor, vos plega que si sabedes algunas cosas que sean prouechosas, a mi que no me sean celadas, ꝛ yo fazer vos he el mayor de la casa de mi señor el Emperador sobre quantos enella son. »

[VI.] De las palabras que dezia Jacob al senescal que si creya el Emperador en Jesu Cristo.

Respondio Jacob, ꝛ dixo al senescal : « Señor huesped, sabedes vos si mi señor el Emperador si cree en aquel sancto profeta que aqui enesta cibdad tomo muerte ꝛ passion, que yo lo vi ꝛ lo ayude a descender de la cruz, ꝛ otro su amigo, que avia nombre Joseb Abarimathia, ꝛ lo pusimos en vn monumento que Joseb auia fecho fazer para si, ꝛ resuscito al tercero dia ? » Dixo el senescal : « Señor, mi señor adora los ydolos, ꝛ no dexaria por ninguna guisa el adorar de aquellos. » E respondio Jacob, ꝛ dixo : « Señor, tornad vos para Roma a mi señor el Emperador, ꝛ dezilde que si no cree enel sancto profeta, que por ningund tiempo no guarescera; mas que si el cree quel es verdadero dios todo poderoso, luego sera sano dela su enfermedad, assi como muchos otros son sanos por la su crehencia. ꝛ contar vos he vn grand milagro que enesta cibdad acaescio. Vna muger que auia nombre Veronica, ꝛ fue de tierra de Galilea, la qual auia muy grande enfermedad ꝛ fuerte, de guisa que no osaua estar entre las gentes, ꝛ como ella supo que el sancto profeta leuauan a la cruz, ouo muy grande dolor; como ella creya en su coraçon que aquel señor la sanaria dela su enfermedad, ꝛ llorando vino se para el lugar del monte Caluario, a donde los judios auian de poner a Jesu Cristo enla cruz, ꝛ al pie de aquella cruz estaua atendiendo su madre con vn discipulo que dezian Juan. ꝛ la Veronica, desque oyo de como le lleuauan tan abiltadamente, tenia en su mano vn paño de lino, ꝛ quando el sancto profeta emparejo con ella, dixole: « Muger, dame esse paño con que me alimpie la faz »; ꝛ la sancta Veronica diogelo; ꝛ quando el sancto profeta ouo alimpiado la su faz, torno gelo; ꝛ dixo le assi: « Muger, alça esse paño, que con esse sanaras. » ꝛ quando la Veronica lo touo assi, abrio el paño ꝛ vido enel la faz del sancto profeta, ꝛ luego fue sana ꝛ limpia de toda dolencia, bien assi como el dia en que nascio, por la buena crehencia que ella auia enel sancto profeta Jesu Cristo todo poderoso, que es ꝛ sera por siempre. »

Respondio Gays el senescal a Iacob, ꝛ dixo le: « Señor, todo esto creo yo verdaderamente, mas yo vos ruego que embiedes por essa muger Veronica, ꝛ yo leuar la he a mi señor el Emperador, ca yo se bien que el crera firmemente todas estas cosas quando el sera sano dela su enfermedad. E toda la cristiandad sera ensalçada. E aun que yo creo quel vengara la muerte del sancto profeta. » Jacob luego embio por la Veronica que viniesse a el; ꝛ ella luego vino ante el senescal del Emperador que la avia menester. E quando Veronica fue delante el senescal, Jacob le dixo la razon porque el senescal era alli venido, ꝛ de como ella avia de yr en Roma para guarescer ꝛ sanar al Emperador, que estaua muy mal enfermo de fuerte dolencia; ꝛ Veronica dixo que le plazia de yr a Roma, que ella creya con la virtud de Dios, con la qual ella guaresciera ꝛ sanara, que el Emperador guaresceria, ꝛ todo el pueblo creeria en Jhesu Cristo si el Emperador quisiere creer firmemente al sancto profeta; ꝛ Gays el senescal ouo grande gozo quando vido la buena voluntad de Veronica, ꝛ se aparejo para tornar en Roma a su señor el Emperador. ꝛ Gays el senescal se acordo ꝛ dixo a Jacob: « Yo quiero fablar con Pilatos »; ꝛ Jacob le dixo: « Yo jre con vos »; e amosados vanse a Pilatos, ꝛ fablaron le delante del templo de Salamon, ꝛ el senescal saludo le, ꝛ dixo le: « Pilatos, yo mensajero del Emperador mi señor ꝛ vuestro que es; ꝛ manda vos por mi que le embiedes el tributo que le deuedes de siete años, ꝛ auedes fecho muy mal como no le embiades el tributo de cada año, ꝛ por cierto el Emperador se tiene de vos por mal pagado; mas empero por quanto esta tierra es tan lueñe, yo vos escusare lo mas que yo pudiere, en tal manera que no vos lo terna en mal; ꝛ desto aued vuestro acuerdo ꝛ consejo; catad aqui yo soy el su senescal, ꝛ creed me lo que vos digo por mi señor, ꝛ aya vuestra respuesta.» E quando Pilatos ouo entendido al senescal, rescibio la carta, ꝛ fizo le mal rrostro, ꝛ respondio le muy altiuamente ꝛ amenazando le, ꝛ dixo le que auria su acuerdo. E luego Pilatos se aparto con vn mal hombre que era su senescal que auia nombre Barrabas, el qual leyo la carta del Emperador, ꝛ quando ouieron amosados fablado, tornaron se a la otra gente alla donde estaua el mensagero del Emperador con Jacob; ꝛ en presencia de todos dixo Barrabas: « Señor Pilatos, yo vos do por consejo que no embiedes el tributo al Emperador nin lo tengades por señor, mas le cumple ael que sea señor de Roma ꝛ de Lombardia; ꝛ aun vos digo mas, que seguro podes estar desto: que si el Emperador aca quisiere venir o passar con sus compañas, que por mengua de agua no puede mucho estar ni biuir enesta tierra, ꝛ quando mayor poder viniere, mayor daño sera suyo, ca se perderan de sed las sus compañas; por lo qual, señor, no vos cale tener ni auer miedo del Emperador »; e Pilatos touo por bueno el consejo que le dio Barrabas, ꝛ quiso prender al senescal del Emperador por lo matar. Mas Barrabas le dixo: « Señor, no lo fagades; ca mensagero no deue tomar ni oyr mal, antes puede dezir todo quanto quiere del

Emperador ꝛ de qualquier que le embia en la mensageria »; ꝛ con tanto se partio Gays el senescal de Pilatos mal pagado, ꝛ salio se diziendo que mal consejo auia tomado Pilatos. E quando fue a casa de Jacob, tomo licencia de Jacob ꝛ de toda su compaña, ꝛ prometio le que lo pornia en gracia ꝛ merçed del Emperador, ꝛ fizo le gracias ꝛ merçedes del seruicio que fecho le avia. E salio de Jherusalem con la muger Veronica ꝛ con los cinco caualleros que lo aconpañauan, ꝛ van se por sus jornadas fasta que fueron en Sessarea, ꝛ alli entraron en la fusta con que vinieran, ꝛ fueron su via fasta que fueron en Acre. E nuestro señor Dios quiso les dar tan buen tiempo que en pocos dias llegaron a Barlec, donde llegaron con grand gozo que avian de tornar en su tierra. E alli estouieron dos dias, ꝛ al tercero dia caualgaron en sus palafrenos, ꝛ van se para Roma; ꝛ el senescal avia grande esperança, ca creya que Dios le faria tan gran hombre ꝛ con tanta honrra que los sus trabajos no fuessen de balde. E quando fueron en Roma en donde estaua el Emperador mucho mal dela su enfermedad ꝛ cobdiciaua mucho su salud. E quando Gays el senescal fue tornado de Jerusalem en Roma con la sancta Veronica que con ella traya el sancto paño donde era la faz de Jesu Cristo nuestro redentor.

Quando el Emperador oyo dezir que Gays su senescal era venido, ouo muy grande gozo ꝛ plazer, ꝛ deseaua mucho fablar con el por la su salud. En aquella sazon Gays su senescal fue llegado a Roma, el Emperador auia fecho juntar sus cortes de todos los nobles de su jmperio, assi de Reyes como de duques ꝛ de contes, ꝛ viscondes ꝛ caualleros, por quanto el Emperador estaua mucho mal de su dolencia, ꝛ temia que no seria mucho su vida; e por esto queria coronar a su fijo Titus emperador, por tal que regiesse todo el imperio. ꝛ el segundo dia que Gays el senescal fue llegado a Roma, auia de ser Titus coronado Emperador, e quando el Emperador vido a Gays su senescal, ouo muy grand plazer, ꝛ demando le que si auia hallado qualquier cosa con que el ouiesse salud ꝛ sanasse de su enfermedad, ꝛ el senescal le respondio : « Señor, alegrad vos ꝛ fazed gracias a aquel sancto profeta Jesu Cristo, el qual por los falsos judios fue lleuado a la muerte en Jherusalem a grand tuerto. Ca yo he hallado vna muger del sancto Jesu Cristo, la qual me mostro Jacob, vuestro leal seruidor ꝛ vasallo vuestro, el qual es amigo de aquel sancto propheta ; ꝛ aquesta muger he traydo, la qual trahe vn paño, enel qual es fascionada la faz de aquel señor todo poderoso que enla cruz murio. Luego, señor, que vos veades aquel sancto paño, auiendo firme crehencia en aquel sancto propheta que puede fazer todas estas cosas en vos dar salud a vos ꝛ a todos los enfermos, ꝛ demandando le merced, seredes luego sano, ꝛ limpio dela vuestra enfermedad, bien assi como aquella muger que vos he aqui traydo, que estaua bien asi como uos, ꝛ con aquella señal de Jesu Cristo guarescio ꝛ sano ; porque vos digo en verdad, señor, que vos adorando en aquel que es verdadero dios ꝛ verdadero hombre todo poderoso, ꝛ que tomo carne humana dela virgen sancta Maria, ꝛ nascio sin dolor ꝛ sin corrompimiento que aquella no ovo. E quiso morir enla cruz por saluar el humanal linaje, ꝛ despues resuscito al tercero dia, ꝛ a los quarenta dias se subio a los cielos despues que fue resuscitado en presencia delos sus [1] apostoles. E despues, a cabo de los .x. dias de subido, embio el Espiritu Sancto sobre los apostoles, e descendera el dia del juyzio, verdadero Dios e verdadero hombre, e juzgara los buenos e los malos, e a cada vno dara su galardon segun que aura seruido e fecho. E despues, señor, es menester que os baptizedes con el agua del Espiritu Sancto, bien assi como los vuestros christianos, e luego sereys sano, e si todas aquestas cosas vos no hazeys, no podreys guarecer de la vuestra enfermedad e de la vuestra dolencia por ningun tiempo. Y todas estas cosas he deprendido, señor, de vn sermon que yo oy predicar en esta cibdad en el tienpo de vuestro padre, e avn mas en Jerusalen de Jacob, el vuestro leal vasallo, e amigo del sancto profeta Jesu Christo. »

[IX.] De como dixo el Emperador que si Dios le daua salud, que el vengaria la muerte de aquel sancto propheta Jesu Christo.

Respondio el Emperador : « Todas estas cosas que me aueys dicho creo yo firmemente, e digovos en verdad que si el sancto propheta Jesu Christo todo poderoso me quisiere dar salud en el mi cuerpo, segun que yo la auia, que yo vengare la su muerte e le conplire todo quanto yo le he prometido, e ruegovos que me fagades venir la muger que traxistes de Jerusalem, e trayga el santo paño que dezis muy santamente e ordenadamente, assi como pertenesce a tan santo profeta. » E el senescal le respondio : « Señor, si a vos plaze, de mañana quando sera toda la gente llegada, yo traere la santa muger delante vos, e todas las gentes veran el grandissimo milagro, e creeran mejor en el santo profeta Jesu Christo, e quando vos, señor, sereys sano, podreys mejor coronar el vuestro noble hijo Titus emperador. » Y el Emperador Vespasiano tuuo por bueno el consejo que le dio el senescal, e dixo que a honrra e gloria de Dios sea hecho. El senescal se torno, e quando fue en su casa, dixo a la sancta muger Veronica : « Mi señor el Emperador vos ruega que de mañana en amaneciendo que vays ante el; e aparejadvos e rogad aquel santo propheta Jesu Christo que por la su piedad quiera mostrar el su poder e mostrar milagro en el Emperador, segun que en vos lo mostro en este sancto paño, por que todo el pueblo crea firmemente en Dios todo poderoso. » La santa muger Veronica no lo puso en oluido, antes se entro luego en vna camara que le fue dada por el senescal, e alli estuuo toda la noche, las rodillas e los codos hincados en tierra delante del santo paño do estaua la faz de Jesu Christo, haziendo su oracion muy deuotamente a nuestro señor Jesu Christo, e la oracion es esta en que se sigue.

[X.] De la oracion que hizo la santa Veronica.

« Señor, verdadero Dios, que acogiste al tu sancto nonbre e diste la tu gracia a los tus apostoles sant Pedro e sant Pablo, e a todos los otros martires : Tu, señor, sana a este noble Emperador de la fuerte enfermedad que tiene, por que creya e adore a vn Dios todo poderoso, verdadero Dios e verdadero honbre, e porque todo el su pueblo en vno venga al santo baptismo. Señor, verdadero Dios, sanalo bien assi como sanaste a mi; e por la tu piedad e honrra de la bienauenturada virgen santa Maria tu madre ! » E toda la noche estando la santa muger en la dicha oracion, el Enperador estuuo pensando toda la noche en las palabras que el su senescal le auia dicho; e dezia entre si mesmo que como se podia hazer que nuestro señor Dios descendiesse del cielo, e que [1] enel vientre dela virgen tomasse carne humana ; ⁊ que muger virgen pudiese concebir sin corrompimiento, ⁊ sin simiente de hombre pudiese parir; ⁊ aun se marauillaua mucho como pudiese ser que ninguno otro lo leuasse ala muerte ⁊ el lo quisiese; ⁊ que el cryador de todo el mundo pudiese morir por ninguna persona, como era contra derecho ; e avn pensaua mas enla resureccion ⁊ enla asumcion. ⁊ estando assi adurmio se, ⁊ fue le semejante que el fuese en vn palacio, ⁊ que en aquel palacio auia vna camara mucho ricamente labrada, ⁊ que las puertas de aquella camara que eran tan bien puestas ⁊ juntadas, que hombre no las pudia conoscer que alli pudiesse aver puertas. Ca ella era muy bien cerrada, sin finiestra ⁊ sin forado ni agujero ; ⁊ estando assy el Emperador, vino a el vn infante, ⁊ entro se por la camara. E quando el Emperador esto vido, fue mucho marauillado, ꝛ acosto se al lugar porel qual aquel jnfante era entrado, ꝛ paro mientes por toda la camara, assi enderredor como de arriba ꝛ de ayuso, ꝛ no hallo lugar ni señal por donde aquel jnfante fuesse entrado. E pensando enesto, fuese fasta al cabo del palacio, ꝛ quando el se boluio, vido el jnfante. E el Emperador marauillo se mucho delo que auia visto, ꝛ dixo entre si : « Que cosa es esta ? o que milagro es este deste jnfante ? o por donde entro ? » E el infante le dixo : « Emperador, no dubdes enla encarnacion del fijo de Dios Jesu Cristo, ꝛ miembra se te de todo esto que as visto, ꝛ cree las palabras que el tu senescal te ha dichas; ꝛ escucha ꝛ cree las palabras que los mis discipulos te diran, predicando en mi nombre » ; ꝛ con tanto desaparesciole el jnfante. ꝛ quando el Emperador desperto, fue mucho marauillado desto que auia visto; ꝛ dixo en su coraçon : « Si aquel santo profeta, que fue muerto en Jerusalem ꝛ fue juzgado a grand tuerto por Pilatos mi adelantado a requirimiento delos judios, ꝛ resuscito al tercero dia que fue muerto, me da salud, yo tomare vengança delos falsos judios que lo mataron, luego que sea sano. E como aya tomado vengança en Jerusalem, ꝛ sere tornado en Roma, sj a Dios plaze, yo me fare baptizar, ꝛ todo el pueblo ꝛ todos los mis caualleros. »

[XI.] De la boz del angel que dixo a Veronica en como fallaria de mañana a sant Clemente ala puerta.

E mientra que Veronica estaua enla oracion, vino le vna boz del cielo, la qual le dixo : « Muger, buenas obras fazes ; leuantate de mañana, ꝛ saldras fuera de casa, ꝛ encuentraras vn amigo de Dios, el qual ha nombre Clemente, ꝛ llama lo por su nombre » ; ꝛ luego desaparescio la boz. E quando fue de dia claro, sant Clemente fue leuantado a fazer oracion, ꝛ vino vna boz del cielo que le dixo : « Clemente, vete ꝛ passa por delante la puerta del senescal del Emperador, ꝛ pon tu coraçon enesto que te sera mostrado. » E sant Clemente fizo lo que la boz le dixo ; ꝛ fue se a la puerta del senescal, ꝛ fue salida Veronica de fuera de la puerta, ꝛ fallo ay al santo hombre, ꝛ dixo le : « Hermano Clemente, Jesu Cristo sea contigo. » ꝛ el santo ombre ovo muy grand gozo como oyo hablar de Jesu Cristo, ꝛ marauillo se como la sancta muger lo llamo por su nombre ; ꝛ ella le dixo : « Hermano, no temas, que oy sera ensalçada la cristiandad por ti. Ca sepas que yo soy aquella muger que estaua enferma en Galilea, ꝛ me guarescio el santo profeta Jesu Cristo con vn santo paño, el qual yo le di quando lo lleuauan a crucificar enla cruz ; ꝛ sepas que eneste paño esta la figurada faz del santo profeta ; ꝛ yo so aqui venida por guarescer al Emperador segund que yo guaresci por virtud del santo profeta Jesu Cristo ; ꝛ vos aparejad vos de fazer vuestro sermon al Emperador ꝛ a todo el su pueblo enel nombre de nuestro señor Jesu Cristo. » E sant Clemente conoscio que por voluntad ꝛ por mandamiento de Dios era fecho. E dixo : « Muger, a plazer de Dios sea ; mas ruego vos que me digades vuestro nonbre. » E ella le dixo que Veronica auia nombre. Con tanto el santo hombre tomo licencia de Veronica, ꝛ puso se en oracion por tal que Dios le ayudasse en el sermon que auia de fazer ante el Emperador ꝛ del su pueblo, porque el fuesse tal que fuessen dadas gracias ꝛ loores a Dios ꝛ ala sancta fe catolica, ꝛ por que ella fuesse ensalçada.

[XII.] De como el Emperador no quiso adorar los ydolos ꝛ fue sano con el sancto paño de la Veronica.

Quando el dia fue claro ꝛ el sol fue salido, el Emperador no quiso adorar los ydolos como solia, por quanto no auia enellos firme creencia por las palabras que su senescal le auia dicho. Y el senescal fue apareyado con sant Clemente ꝛ con Veronica, ꝛ vinieron delante el Emperador ; ꝛ aqui fue juntado el pueblo ꝛ toda la corte para coronar a Titus ; ꝛ Veronica traxo el santo paño enla su mano derecha mucho onrradamente. E quando fueron delante del Emperador, Veronica dio el santo paño a sant Clemente, ꝛ todos en vno fincaron las rodillas delante el Emperador. Y Veronica saludo le mucho honrradamente, ꝛ dixo le : « Señor, escucha de coraçon el sermon de aqueste santo hombre que es dicipulo del santo profeta Jesu Cristo, ꝛ despues del sermon, vos creed en todas las cosas que uos el dixere, ꝛ seredes sano ꝛ limpio dela vuestra dolencia, si a Dios plaze. » Y el Emperador mando a todo el su pueblo ꝛ a toda su corte que escuchasen el sermon de sant Clemente, ꝛ el santo hombre començo de predicar dela encarnacion de Jesu Cristo ꝛ dela natiuidad, ꝛ dela circonçission, ꝛ del baptismo, como fue baptizado enel fuen Jordan, ꝛ dela santa quaresma quel ayuno enel desierto, ꝛ como lo quiso tentar el diablo, ꝛ como Judas lo vendio alos judios por treynta dineros, ꝛ dela su passion, ꝛ como los judios lo pusieron enla cruz, ꝛ como Pilatos lo juzgo a muerte en Jerusalen, ꝛ como Joseb Abarimatia, ꝛ Nicodemus, ꝛ otro cauallero que auia nombre Jacob, como descendieron el cuerpo del sancto profeta dela cruz, ꝛ lo pusieron enel sancto sepulcro que Joseb auia fecho para si, ꝛ dela resureccion, como resuscito al tercero dia, ꝛ como Jesu Cristo descendio a los infiernos, ꝛ saco dende alos sanctos padres Adan ꝛ Eua, ꝛ alos patriarcas, ꝛ a todos los sus amigos, ꝛ dela ascencion, como subio alos cielos, ꝛ como embio el Espiritu Sancto sobre los apostoles, ꝛ como descendira el dia del juyzio verdadero hombre por juzgar los biuos ꝛ los muertos. ꝛ quando ouo luengamente predicado, fenescio el sermon diziendo amen. Tan grande fue el plazer del Emperador ꝛ de todo el pueblo ꝛ de toda la corte que ay estaua, que ouieron del sermon de sant Clemiente, que fue marauilla. ꝛ quando san Clemyente ouo acabado el sermon, vinieron se Veronica ꝛ el delante del Emperador, ꝛ fincaron las rrodillas amos a dos ante el Emperador, demandando merced a nuestro señor Dios, ꝛ faziendo su oracion. ꝛ sant Clemyente desenboluio el sancto paño a vista de todos, ꝛ llegaron se al Emperador, ꝛ fizo le adorar la figura dela faz de Jesu Cristo. E como el Emperador ouo adorado el sancto paño en virtud del sancto profeta, sant Clemyente lo puso enla cara del Emperador. E luego en essa hora fue sano ꝛ limpio dela su dolencia, bien ansi como si en algund tiempo no ouiesse auido dolencia alguna, ꝛ fue ligero ꝛ fuerte como qualquier mançebo que fuesse.

[XIII.] Dela grande alegria que fue enla corte del Emperador por la salud de su señor.

Mucha fue el alegria ꝛ gozo del Emperador ꝛ de toda su corte de como lo vieron sano, que por la su salud muchos fueron ensalçados enel amor de Jesu Cristo nuestro señor por la salud del Emperador, segund que sant Clemyente lo mostraua. E el Emperador luego fizo coronar a su hijo Titus emperador con grande fiesta muy onrradamente ; ꝛ aqui pedrico sant Clemente, ꝛ fue escochado con grande deuocion del Emperador ꝛ de toda su corte, ꝛ quando ouo acabado su sermon dixo al Emperador : « Señor, pues que Dios vos a dado salud ꝛ tanta misericordia que vos a sanado de tan fuerte enfermedad, que os plega que porel su amor que vos bautizedes ꝛ vos conuertades ala fe catolica, ꝛ ensalçades la santa cristiandad, ꝛ fazed bautizar a toda la otra gente, ꝛ todos los que se quieran bautizar no sean enbargados por vos. »

[XIV.] Delas gracias que dio el Emperador ala muger Veronica por quanto fuera causa de su salud.

Respondio el Emperador ꝛ dixo : « Grandes gracias do yo a Dios ꝛ a aquesta sancta muger que tanto a trabajado por mi. » E tomo la por la mano ꝛ dixo asi : « Muger santa, vos tomad de quanto vos quisierdes saluo Roma, por quanto es cabeça de jnperio ; mas de todas las villas ꝛ castillos, vos tomad lo que quisierdes. » Respondio Veronica : « Señor, gracias a Dios ꝛ a vos desto que me queredes dar, mas, señor, saluante a vuestra onrra, yo no quiero villas ni castillos, que no los he menester, mas ruego vos que me dedes el paño con el qual vos fuestes sano ꝛ guarido, ca yo so muger para seruir aquel santo paño a honrra de mi señor Jesu Cristo ; ꝛ al de vos no quiero sino que os bautizedes con todo el pueblo vuestro » ; y el Emperador gelo otorgo. E despues dixo el Emperador a sant Clemente : « Vos, santo ombre, tomad de mi lo que quisierdes ꝛ de mi imperio. » ꝛ sant Clemente respondio al emperador : « Señor, gracias ꝛ mercedes a vos fago, mas no quiero al de vos si no que vos bautizedes con todo el vuestro pueblo ꝛ ensalçad la fe de Jesu Cristo. » Y el Enperador le dixo que le plazia de coraçon, ꝛ de alli elijo a sant Crimente por apostolico de Roma ꝛ dixo le assi : « Vos, predicad ꝛ fazed predicar a todo el imperio la sancta fe catolica, ꝛ bautizad a todos aquellos que pudierdes conuerter. Mas sabed que yo no me bautizare fasta que yo aya vengado la muerte de Jesu Cristo ; ꝛ prometo vos que luego que sea venido de Jerusalem, si a Dios plaze, ꝛ aya tomado vengança delos crueles judios, que yo me bautizare con todo el mi pueblo. Ca, por cierto, yo no sere alegre fasta auer tomado vengança, ꝛ aya complido todo lo que prometi a Nuestro Señor ; plega le que yo lo vea acabado, amen. »

[XV.] Como el Enperador mando fazer vna yglesia en Roma ꝛ mando poner el sancto paño dela Veronica.

Despues quel Emperador ouo elegido apostolico ꝛ cabeça dela cristiandad, fizo le edificar vna yglesia a honrra ꝛ seruicio de Dios, ꝛ aqui fizo poner el santo paño do estaua figurada la faz de Jesu Cristo, por que las gentes ouiessen mayor deuocion, ꝛ despues establescio las fuentes, en las quales fue bautizada Veronica primeramente, mas no les mudaron el su nombre. Y sant Clemente predicaua tanto, que muchas gentes se conuertian ala fe catolica, ꝛ se bautizauan con muy grande deuocion. Y Gays el senescal vino delante del Emperador, ꝛ dixo le : « Señor, pues Dios vos a fecho tanta merced que sodes sano muy bien, contar os e la respuesta que Pilatos vuestro adelantado fizo quando yo le di la vuestra carta, ꝛ le dixe de vuestra parte que vos enbiasse el tributo : ꝛ quando esto oyo, fizo muerta cara contra mi, ꝛ respondio me que no vos los queria embiar, ca no vos lo deuia ni os conoscia por señor. ꝛ sepades, señor, por cierto, que si el su senescal no fuera ay presente, que la su voluntad era de me matar. ꝛ yo, porel grande gozo que auia dela vuestra salud, no me quise contender con el. Porque, señor, sabed que yo lo amenaze muy mal de parte vuestra. Y demientra, señor, que yo conel auia estas palabras, sepades que Jacob el sabio y huesped mio y leal vasallo vuestro, se leuanto en pies, ꝛ dixo delante Pilatos la profecia que dixo el santo profeta Jesu Cristo el dia de Ramos, quando entro en Jerusalen, que dixo : En aquesta generacion sera tan grande careza y tan grande fanbre, que la madre comera su fijo de fambre ; y aquesta cibdad sera cercada y destruyda, y verna a tan grande destruymiento que no quedara piedra sobre ella. Y toda esta pestilencia sera en Jerusalem. Quando Pilatos oyo estas palabras, fue fuerte sañudo, ꝛ fizo mandamiento que de alli adelante no le fablase ninguno de aquel fecho ; y si lo el sabia, que lo faria matar. Assi, señor, vos ved como vos es leal Pilatos el vuestro adelantado. » Y quando el Emperador oyo la respuesta que Pilatos auia dado a Gays su senescal por el, y oyo de como Jacob le contara la profecia delante Pilatos, el Emperador fue tan fuerte ayrado que luego fizo llegar las huestes todas del jnperio, y fizo mandamiento a todos los reyes, ꝛ duques, condes ꝛ marqueses, y princepes, ꝛ a todos los otros caualleros desu ynperio, que viniesen para Roma luego, que la su voluntad era de pasar en Jerusalem ; y mando a Gays su senescal que aparejase naues, y galeas, y de otros nauios, para pasar todos en Jerusalem, y fizo juramento que poco estaria en Roma. Y a cabo de quatro meses fueron ayuntadas las huestes en Roma muy bien aparejadas, por complir el mandamiento del Emperador ; ꝛ fueron aqui de muchos caualleros, asi que fueron por cuenta cincuenta mill, ꝛ dende arriba. ꝛ las otras gentes de pie sin cuenta. E su senescal vino antel Emperador, ꝛ dixo le : « Señor, catad naues aparejadas. E sabed que son entre naues ꝛ galeas veynte mill, amenos de otros nauios mas sotiles. Porque, señor, quando vos pluguiere, recoged vos, que pan ꝛ vino ꝛ otras viandas para las gentes refrescar, cumplimiento ay dellas. » Por que el Emperador mando luego a todos los caualleros ꝛ la otra gente que se acogesen enlas fustas. Y quando todos fueron recogidos, el Emperador ꝛ su fijo Titus se recogieron alas fustas. E Nuestro Señor les dio tan buen tiempo, que en pocos dias arribaron enla cibdad de Acre, ꝛ luego de fecho, el Emperador, sin que no salieron en tierra, dexo alli el Enperador su adelantado, ꝛ de alli fueron a vn castillo que dezian Jafa, el qual castillo era muy grande ꝛ fuerte, ꝛ tenian lo los judios. Mas por quanto la mayor parte dela gente era yda a celebrar la fiesta en Jerusalem, estauan enel castillo muy pocos, ꝛ quisieron se dar, mas el Emperador no los quiso tomar a merced. ꝛ quando la hueste fue tendida al derredor del castillo, nuestro señor Dios echo tanta dela nieue ꝛ de viento, que no lo podian sofrir enlas huestes ni enel castillo. ꝛ aqueste castillo era de vn sabio judio ꝛ buen cauallero, ꝛ sabia mucho de guerra, ꝛ tenia el castillo bien bastescido de armas ꝛ de viandas, el qual avia nombre Jafel, ꝛ era primero ermano de Josep Abarimatia. ꝛ como Jafel vido que el Emperador lo tenia assi cercado tan fuertemente, vino con tres caualleros al Emperador, ꝛ dixole: « Señor, tomad me a merced, ꝛ fazed del castillo a vuestra uolontad. » ꝛ el Emperador le dixo que no lo tomaria a merced; mas a pocos dias el Emperador tomo el castillo por fuerça, ꝛ fizo matar todos los judios saluo diez que se escondieron en vna cueua, que era el vno Jafel, señor del castillo, ꝛ su sobrino conel ; ꝛ aqui estouieron tres dias que no comieron ni beuieron, que no auian de que ; ꝛ estos diez judios ouieron de acuerdo los siete entre si que pueş de fanbre auian de morir, mas valia que ellos mesmos se matassen vnos a otros con los puñales ; ꝛ luego fue fecho. ꝛ quando los judios se ouieron muertos, Jafel dixo a su sobrino ꝛ a su primo: « Amigos, quando yo era señor deste castillo, a mi tenian por grande ꝛ sabio hombre, porque no es menester que nos acaesca por semejante que acaescio a estos, por que este es mi consejo : que salgamos de aqui, ꝛ vamos demandar merçed al Emperador ; ca por ventura quando sepa que aqui somos, el Emperador nos tomara a su merçed. » E entre tanto el Enperador fizo derribar el castillo, ꝛ derribaron las cauas ; en tanto vino Jafel ꝛ los otros dos judios, ꝛ fincaron las rrodillas ante el Enperador, ꝛ dixo Jafel : « Señor, sabed que yo era señor deste castillo que vos auedes aqui fecho derribar. Y segund que yo pienso, vos sodes venido por vengar la muerte del santo profeta que a gran tuerto tomo muerto ꝛ pasion en Jherusalem ; la qual cosa, si asi es, so yo mucho pagado, ca era mucho mi amigo. Por que sepas, señor, que yo ꝛ vn primo mio que auia nombre Josep Abarimatia lo decendimos dela cruz quando le ouo dado el cuerpo, ꝛ tomo lo muy onrradamante, ꝛ puso lo en vn su monumento quel auia fecho para si, de lo qual ouieron los judios muy grande enbidia, por que, señor, vos nos auedes menester para tomar a Jesusalem, ꝛ vos consejaremos lealmente. » ꝛ el Emperador, des que oyo las buenas razones de Jafel, tomolo por la mano ꝛ dioles su gracia, ꝛ los judios demandaron le de comer, ca auian estado cinco dias que no avian comido. Y quando ouieron comido, el Enperador los fizo venir ante si, ꝛ demando les que si creyan en aquel santo profeta. ꝛ ellos dixeron que si. El Emperador les dixo : « Agora quiero que de oy en adelante que seades mis consejeros ». ꝛ despues que el Enperador ouo fecho derribar el castillo, partiose de alli con su fijo Titus, ꝛ con toda la hueste, ꝛ vinieronse en Jerusalem, por tomar vengança dela muerte de Jhesu Cristo, por que fuese complida la profeçia. Mas Pilatos ni los de Jherusalem no sabian nada de la venida del Enperador ni dela su hueste, que les venia cerca, por que tanta avia de la nieue en derredor de Jerusalem, que ningund ombre no podia salir ni entrar. ꝛ estaua alli muy muchas gentes de diuersas partidas, que eran ajuntadas por honrrar la fiesta, que era muy grande. Entre todas las otras gentes, era alli

el fijo del rey Herodes, ꝛ era coronado por rey enel reyno de su padre. Y el Emperador ꝛ su fijo asentaron su hueste fuertemente sobre la cibdad de Jerusalem, que ningun judio no podia salir ni entrar. ꝛ como Pilatos ꝛ el rey Archileus se vieron cercados, armaronse con toda la caualleria para defender ꝛ mamparar la cibdad.

[XVI.] Dela fabla quel Emperador ouo con Pilatos.

El Emperador ꝛ Titus su hijo con la grand hueste se acercaron en deredor de Jherusalem, ꝛ assentaron tan fuertemente, que ningund hombre podia salir ni entrar. ꝛ quando Pilatos vido que la cibdad era assi cercada, fue fuerte triste ꝛ desmayado. El rey Archileus paro le mientes, ꝛ dixo le : « Porque vos desmayades? no ayades pauor ni temor del Emperador ni dela su gente, ca nos somos aqui con grande ꝛ buena caualleria, que asaz les daremos que fazer. Armemos nos con toda nuestra gente, ꝛ vamos los a escometer; ꝛ saquemos tantas delas armas paraque ellos se arrepientan porque aqui vinieron, por que el Emperador ni las sus gentes no puedan aqui quedar mucho, ca por mucha mengua de agua les conuiene que mueran de sed ꝛ se tornaran en su tierra, ca nos avemos buena cibdad ꝛ fuerte, ꝛ bien guarnescida de armas ꝛ de otras cosas, por que ellos de baldes se trabajaron. » E quando Pilatos oyo el consejo de Archileus, fue mucho alegre. ꝛ fizo fazer pregund por toda la cibdad que todos se armasen de pie ꝛ de cauallo, ꝛ luego fue fecho, ꝛ vinieron antel palacio de Pilatos ; ꝛ Pilatos ꝛ el rey Archileus con toda la gente vinieron alas puertas dela cibdad defuera, por razon que diessen enla hueste del Emperador. Mas la hueste del Emperador estaua tan cerca delos adarues, que no podia ninguno salir; ꝛ des que vieron que no podian salir, ouieron de acuerdo que se desarmasen todos, ꝛ que subiessen piedras por el adarue ꝛ enlas bastidas, ca eran muy grandes en derredor de Jherusalen. E eran bien aquellos que sobian las piedras por el adarue doze mill hombres. E

Pilatos ꝛ el rey Archileus, con diez caualleros, se subieron enel adarue amosados, sin armas, ꝛ vestidos sendos briales bermejos; ꝛ Pilatos tenia vn palo en la mano. ꝛ Gays, el senescal del Emperador, dixo al Emperador : « Señor, aquel que esta enla bastida es Pilatos vuestro adelantado. » E el Emperador se allego a aquella parte del adarue donde estaua Pilatos, ꝛ dixo le tales palabras : « El noble padre mio te encomendo esta cibdad porque la guardases ꝛ la regieses porel, ꝛ quiso que fueses adelantado ꝛ gouernador porel de toda esta tierra; ꝛ despues dela su muerte, enbiaste me el tributo de tres años, el qual al noble padre mio solias enbiar de toda la tierra; ꝛ agora asme negado el señorio, ꝛ no me as enbiado el tributo; ꝛ avn mas quando te enbie el mucho amado Gays mi senescal, ꝛ te dio mi carta, ꝛ menospreciaste lo mucho mal con grandes amenazas, delas quales no te perdono. Porque te digo que me abras las puertas de mi cibdad, ca yo quiero fazer de ti la mi voluntad, ꝛ de todos los otros que dentro son. » E quando Pilatos oyo estas palabras del Emperador, respondio ꝛ dixo quel ternia su acuerdo ꝛ consejo, ꝛ luego descendio del adarue ꝛ entro se enla cibdad, ꝛ fizo juntar su consejo, ꝛ dixo a sus caualleros que le diesen consejo el mejor que pudiessen ꝛ supiesen, por quel pudiese responder al Emperador. E leuanto se el rey Archileus ꝛ dixo a Pilatos : « Señor, no temades ni ayades miedo delas amenazas del Emperador, que vos os podedes bien defender del con la gente que esta enla cibdad, porque sera verguença ꝛ escarño que sin golpes ni feridas nos diessemos al Emperador por fazer sus voluntades; ꝛ mal aya quien otro consejo vos diere. » Despues leuanto se Barrabas, el senescal de Pilatos, el qual el creya mucho, ꝛ dixo : « Señor, bien podeys vos conoscer quel Enperador no puede estar en deredor desta cibdad dos meses complidos, por mengua de agua, que no la ay si no van al flumen Jordan o al rio del Diablo, que es bien a media jornada, alli donde se perdieron las dos cibdades que avian nombre Sodoma ꝛ Gomorra; ꝛ es les mucho lexos el agua para tanta muchedumbre de gentes; porque vos do por consejo que lo defendades, ꝛ lo desafiedes ꝛ no ayades miedo del; mas faga quanto pueda, ca bien sabedes vos quel rey Herodes, en aquel tiempo que fizo matar los ynocentes, no oso aqui venir. » Y por esta razon Pilatos, ꝛ el rey Archileus, ꝛ todos los otros que ally eran ayuntados, loaron mucho el consejo de Barrabas. E luego se partieron Pilatos ꝛ el rey Archileus del consejo, ꝛ con otros caualleros, ꝛ subieron enel adarue ala parte do el enperador atendia la respuesta. Pilatos respondio al Emperador ꝛ dixo : « Señor Emperador, no vos entregare yo la cibdad de la manera que la vos demandades, ni en otra manera, mas si vos queredes, yo vos dare buen consejo : ꝛ es que vos querades tornar en Roma, ꝛ no querades aqui ser destruydo con tantas gentes. ꝛ guardad bien vuestra tierra, que assi hare yo esta de vos ꝛ de todos mis enemigos, ꝛ de aqui adelante tened vos por desafiado de mi ꝛ de todos los dela cibdad. » E quando el Emperador oyo sus vanas palabras, tomo se a reyr, ꝛ dixo a Pilatos : « Bien me tengo por sañudo delas palabras que has dicho, ꝛ avn mas por quanto me mandas tornar a Roma; mas di me si me entregaras la mi cibdad assi como a tu señor, ꝛ por aquel por quien tu la tienes assi, pero que tu ni los otros no seades tomados en ninguna merced. Ca no vos precio en vn dinero, ꝛ agora vere para quanto sera Jherusalem. »

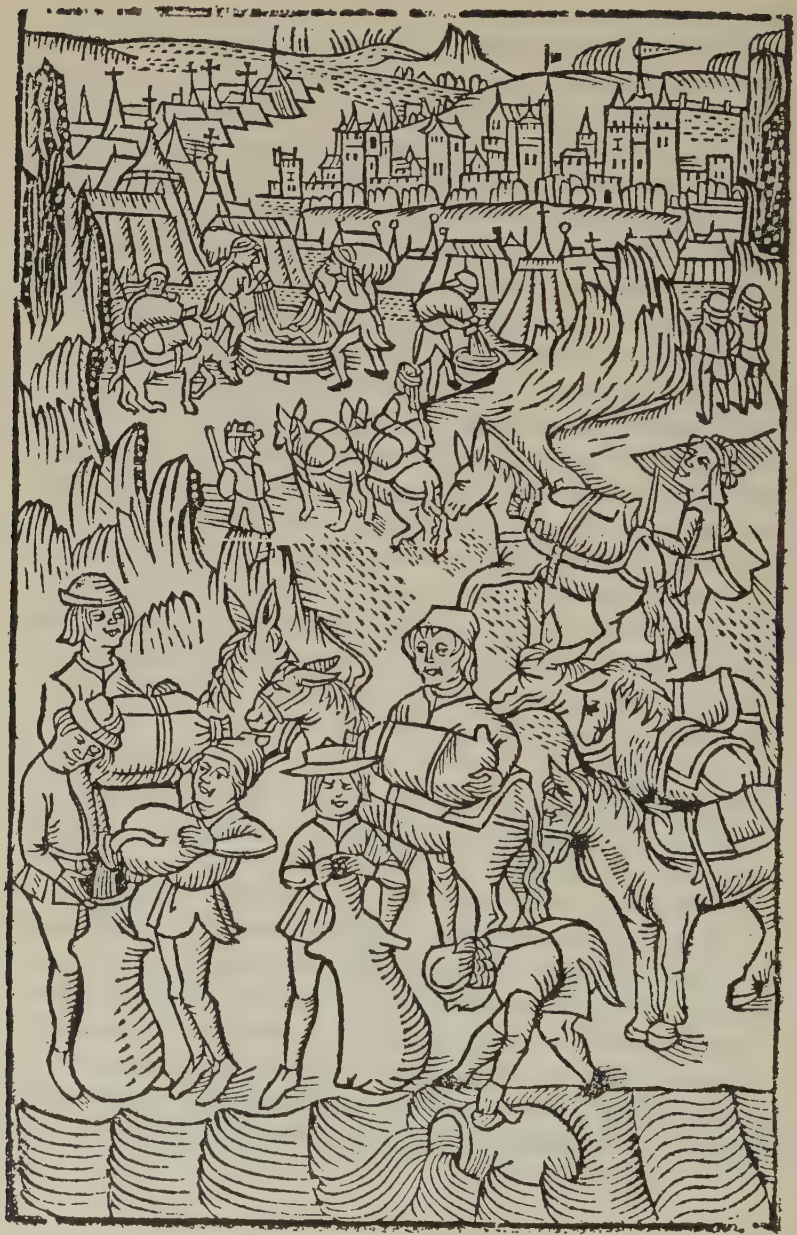
[XVII.] De como conto el Emperador a su fijo Titus las palabras que con Pilatos ouo, ꝛ del plazer que ouieron.

El Emperador se partio de Pilatos, ꝛ tornose a su tienda do estaua su fijo, ꝛ conto le las palabras que auia auido con Pilatos, dela qual cosa Titus ouo grand plazer ꝛ gozo, ꝛ dixo : « Bendicto sea el Nuestro Señor como el traydor de Pilatos no verna a nuestra merced, ca yo auia grand miedo que vos lo tomariades a merced, mas yo creo que Dios lo a fecho ꝛ hordenado por quanto el no la ouo de aquel que era saluador de todo el mundo. ꝛ de aqui adelante no se puede fazer que el con vos



pueda auer merced, por quanto el consintio enla muerte del santo profeta. Ca bien sabia el que a grande tuerto lo acusauan los judios, ca ningund mal no merescia, ca bien lo pudiera el absoluer de muerte, pues lugar de señorio tenia, de como sea en derecho que mejor cosa es absoluer el culpado quel inocente condenar; porque vos ruego, señor, que de aqui adelante con nos no aya ninguna merced; ante que sea librado ala muerte con los otros, ꝛ la cibdad sea derribada por grande traycion que ellos fizieron al santo profeta. » Estando en estas palabras Titus con su padre, vinieron los azemileros que pensauan las bestias, ꝛ dixeron al Emperador : « Señor, que haremos que no podemos fallar ni auer agua de aqui a media jornada, porque nos es muy grande afan, que partimos al alua dela hueste, ꝛ es ora de nona quando tornamos de abeurar las bestias, porque la hueste no lo podria sofrir, si mas cerca no auemos agua? » Y el Emperador fue fuerte marauillado desto que oyo dezir, ꝛ fizo venir a Jafel, ꝛ dixo le : « Que consejo me daras, Jafel? la hueste a mengua de agua. » ꝛ Jafel respondio, ꝛ dixo : « Señor, nos auemos muchas bestias, asi como son bufanos, ꝛ bueyes, ꝛ azemilas, ꝛ cauallos; fazed matar las que son demasiado, ꝛ los cueros dellos fazeldos adobar muy bien ꝛ coser el vno con el otro; ꝛ assi encoraran todo aquel valle de Josafad; ꝛ despues, señor, fazed que dos mill azemilas traygan agua; ꝛ assi abondareys toda la hueste, ꝛ esto se faga de cada dia. » Y el Enperador touolo por buen consejo, ꝛ luego mando que se feziese ; ꝛ luego fue fecho. ꝛ quando la hueste vido el valle lleno de agua ouieron grande gozo, ꝛ dixeron que buen consejo auia dado Jafel, ꝛ que bien parescia que era ombre entendido. Y quando el valle fue lleno de agua, ꝛ estaua assi como si fuese vn rio de vna grande fuente, dela qual cosa el Emperador ꝛ todos los otros ouieron muy grande gozo. E quando Pilatos ꝛ el rey Archileus que estauan dentro de Jherusalem vieron el valle de Josafad lleno de agua, ouieron muy grande pesar, ꝛ dixeron entre si que aquel consejo era salido dela cabeça de Jafel, ca todos sabian que el era hombre mucho sabio, ꝛ sabia mucho de guerra. Y Pilatos fue arrepiso mucho como no auia entregado la cibdad al Emperador para fazer su voluntad, ꝛ dezia : « Si el Emperador me ouiera assegurado de muerte, assi como a Jafel, yo me pusiera en su merced. » Y el rey Archileus, ꝛ Barrabas, que le auian dado el consejo, vinieron a conortar a Pilatos, que estaua mucho triste, ꝛ dixeron le : « Por que vos desmayades? no vedes vos que el Emperador no puede tomar esta cibdad por fuerça? ꝛ en otra manera no la tomara destos siete años; ꝛ por esto el non puede mucho aqui estar, porque vos deuedes mucho alegrar por la su venida, porque seremos todos honrrados. »

[XVIII.] De como ouo pesar Jacob delas palabras que dezia el rey Archileus ꝛ Barrabas a Pilatos.

Quando Jacob, padre de Maria Jacobi, oyo las palabras que el rey Archileus ꝛ Barrabas dixeron a Pilatos, tomo grand pesar, por quanto era delos sabios judios que fuessen enla cibdad, ꝛ dixo a Pilatos : « Como podeys vos creer lo que estos caualleros vos dizen? por cierto vos no podedes tener contra el Emperador nuestro señor, mas yo vos dare consejo si lo quisierdes tomar. » Y Pilatos quiso saber que consejo daria, pero que ya era mucho con grande saña contra Jacob por las palabras que auia dicho. Y Jacob dixo : « Señor, enbiad vuestro mensajero al Emperador que vos le queredes entregar la cibdad por fazer su voluntad, ꝛ yo creo quel vos perdonara su mal talante de vos. » Mas Pilatos era tan mal sañoso contra Jacob, ꝛ dixo le con grand saña : « Jacob, condenado eres a muerte por quanto has renegado la nuestra ley, ꝛ no creere a ti ni tomare consejo, ca luego que el emperador touiese esta cibdad, luego creerias en su ley; avn se deue ombre menos creer por esta razon, por quanto sin mi mandamiento acogiste al senescal del Enperador en tu casa, ꝛ lo enbiaste ala muger del diablo, ꝛ con sorterias ꝛ encantamientos a guarecido al Emperador, ꝛ por tanto yo tomare vengança de ti. » E luego lo fizo prender ꝛ poner en la carcel con vna cadena muy grande, la qual prision estaua de fondon del palacio mayor de Pilatos. Y quando Joseb fue en prision, començo de rogar a Dios que fuesse la su merçed que no muriesse en aquel lugar, ꝛ siempre el fazia su oracion muy deuotamente. Y Maria Jacobi su fija, quando lo supo que su padre era preso tan fuertemente, dixo assi : « O verdadero Dios Jesu Cristo, para mientes quel mi padre ꝛ tu amigo que por ti es en prision! Señor, libra lo que no le puedan fazer mal los tus enemigos, assi como libraste a Josep dela prision de Pilatos, quando los malos delos judios lo quisieron matar por el seruicio que te auia fecho; ca tu delas sus manos lo libraste! Señor, por la tu merced libra al mi padre! » Y demientra que Jacob estaua en oracion dentro enla prision, vino vn angel, ꝛ llamo lo por su nombre; ꝛ Jacob paro mientes por la prision quien lo llamaua, ꝛ vido grand resplandor del angel, ꝛ ouo grand miedo; mas el angel le conforto, ꝛ dixo le : « No ayas miedo, amigo de Dios, ꝛ sepas que por las oraciones de tu fija me enbio nuestro señor Dios a ti que te libre desta prision; e leuantate ꝛ sal de prision sin miedo. » Y Jacob respondio al angel, ꝛ dixo le : « Sepas que no puedo; ca las prisiones no me dexan. » ꝛ el angel tomo lo por la mano, ꝛ delante todos lo saco dela prision, ꝛ leuo lo ala tienda del Emperador, que el que lo guardaua ni otro ninguno no lo vido ; ꝛ quando el angel ouo metido a Jacob dentro enla tienda del Emperador, desaparescio le. E Gays el senescal paro mientes ꝛ conoscio lo, ꝛ tomo lo por la mano ꝛ ouo con el mayor goze que por algund tienpo oviese ; ꝛ començo a abraçar lo ꝛ besar lo, ꝛ tomo lo por la mano, lleuo lo ante del Emperador, ꝛ dixo : « Señor, este es el mi huesped Jacob, el leal vasallo vuestro, el qual, señor, por amor de vos sanar me mostro la muger Veronica. » Y el Emperador ouo muy grande gozo ꝛ plazer conel; ꝛ prometio le grandes honrras ꝛ fizo le de su secreto, con Jafel ꝛ con los otros de su consejo; ꝛ despues demando le como auia salido dela cibdad, que el avia oydo dezir que Pilatos lo auia puesto en prision ; ꝛ

Jacob conto le como nuestro señor Dios no oluida los sus amigos, ꝛ de como le enbio vn angel, el qual, delante de todos aquellos que lo guardauan, lo saco dela prision, ꝛ lo puso en la tienda del Emperador, ꝛ como despues le desaparescio.

[XIX.] De como el Emperador mando fazer grandes valles en derredor dela cibdad.

El Emperador quiso auer consejo con aquellos que eran de su secreto en como pudiesse tomar la cibdad, ꝛ quiso que primero fablasse Jacob, al qual Dios auia fecho mucho bien aquel dia; ꝛ conto le delante todos lo que le acahesciera; ꝛ el Emperador tomo muy grande plazer, ꝛ dixo: « Contad nos de Pilatos ꝛ de todos los otros que dentro son, ꝛ que fablan de nos. » « Señor, dixo Jacob, en la cibdad ay pocas viandas ꝛ ay muchas gentes, ca en toda esta tierra no ha quedado judio que algo valga que no sea aqui venido por honrrar la fiesta muy marauillosamente, ꝛ por el vuestro assentamiento no han podido ningunos salir; por la qual cosa son mucho desmayados los vnos ꝛ los otros, ꝛ no se pueden mucho tener; mas, señor, vos mandad fazer enderredor del adarue grandes valles ꝛ fuertes bien anchos, por que ningund judio no pueda salir ni se allegar a la hueste sin vuestras voluntades; ꝛ quando las viandas les fallesceran, ellos se nos daran, ca, señor, por fuerça no la podedes tomar, porque, señor, es menester que los valles se fagan luego. » Y el Emperador touo por bueno el consejo de Jacob. E quando vino el otro dia de mañana, el Emperador fizo llamar a todos los maestros que supieren fazer valles, que viniesen delante del Emperador; ꝛ luego fueron juntados cinco mill por cuenta, alos quales mando el Emperador que fiziessen grandes valles enderredor dela cibdad; e Jacob ꝛ Jafel fueron obreros ꝛ administradores de aquesta hobra por mandamiento del Emperador; ꝛ luego de fecho, començaron Jacob ꝛ Jafel a asmar el lugar donde se auian de fazer los valles. Y començaron de señalar; ꝛ dixeron que fuessen de treynta cobdos en ancho ꝛ quinze en fondo ; ꝛ los hombres con grande voluntad que auian començaron su obra, empero leuaron consigo treynta mill ombres arqueros, ꝛ aquestos que fuesen escudados ꝛ bien armados para guardar alos hobreros. Y en esta manera labraron fasta que los valles fueron acabados. Quando Pilatos supo que tan grandes valles ꝛ tan ayna auia fecho el Emperador, ꝛ tan estrechamente los tenia apremiados, allego su consejo, ꝛ entre los otros quiso el del rey Archileus, ꝛ de Josep Jafaria, ꝛ dixeron le : « Señor, otro consejo no auemos sino que fagades armar todos vuestros caualleros ꝛ toda la vuestra gente, quantos armas puedan tomar a pie ꝛ a cauallo, ꝛ vamos a dar enla hueste ; ꝛ si los podemos arrancar, ellos auran grande gozo que se puedan tornar en su tierra, ꝛ de aqui adelante no tornaran a nos cercar, ꝛ quedar nos an las sus riquezas ꝛ las sus viandas. » Y este consejo touieron por bueno ; ꝛ fizo mandamiento Pilatos que todos de pie ꝛ de cauallo se armasen con sus armas, ꝛ viniesen delante del templo de Salomon ; ꝛ fueron, por cuenta, veynte mill caualleros, ꝛ de otras gentes de pie quarenta mill. ꝛ Pilatos començo de conortar los lo mejor quel pudo, ꝛ dixo les que sabiamente saliesen ala batalla, ꝛ que touiesen firme, ꝛ que saliesen todos en vno. Y Pilatos ꝛ el rey Archileus cabdillaron la caualleria, ꝛ todos en vno començaron a salir dela cibdad. Mas por los valles, que eran grandes, no pudieron pasar asi como ellos se cuydauan ; ꝛ como las guardas del Emperador vieron que tanta gente salia dela cibdad armados para la batalla, ꝛ pusieron se por la hueste fasta que llegaron al Emperador, ꝛ dixeron le como salian dela cibdad mucha gente para la batalla ꝛ para pelear contra ellos. Y luego caualgaron amos los Emperadores, ꝛ quando fueron armados, ꝛ cabdillada la hueste, fizo los venir a todos ante si, ꝛ dixo les tales palabras : « Amigos, sabed que Pilatos con toda la gente dela cibdad es salido para pelear con nosotros. Porque es menester que sabiamente salgamos a el al canpo ; ca, si a Dios plaze, el nos dara vitoria contra ellos, ca todos somos venidos por vengar la su muerte ». ꝛ todos respondieron : « Señor, todos somos aparejados de fazer quanto podamos ꝛ avemos acostumbrado de fazer. » Y esto era a hora de tercia, ꝛ el Emperador mando a Gays el senescal que el ꝛ Jacob, ꝛ Jafel, ꝛ su sobrino, hordenasen las batallas lo mejor ꝛ mas sabiamente que pudiesen. Y ellos fizieron lo assi ; ꝛ hordenaron tres batallas, ꝛ dieron la vna al Emperador, ꝛ la otra a Titus, ꝛ la otra a Gays el senescal. ꝛ fue con el Enperador Jacob, ꝛ con Titus, Jafel, ꝛ con el senescal, el sobrino de Jafel. Mas Titus, con la grande voluntad que auia, quiso la primera batalla ; ꝛ fue le otorgada por el Emperador. Y luego ayudo Dios a todos aquellos que eran con el, ꝛ dieron tan fuertemente enla hueste de Pilatos, que fendieron dos vezes la batalla de Pilatos. ꝛ duro la pelea de hora de tercia fasta hora de nona. ꝛ quando fueron cansados amas las partes, tiraron se a fuera, ꝛ comieron ꝛ refrescaron. ꝛ en esta batalla murieron dela parte de Pilatos hasta quatro mill personas, ꝛ dela parte de Titus, entre caualleros ꝛ peones, ocho cientos por cuenta. ꝛ quando ovieron refrescado los dela parte de Pilatos, salio el Emperador con su gente ꝛ aguijo tan fuertemente, ꝛ tan calientas eran las batallas, que se vinieron a mesclar la vna con la otra. ꝛ duro la pelea fasta el sol puesto, ꝛ por razon dela noche ovieron de salir del campo; ꝛ murieron en esta batalla, dela parte que Pilatos quatro mill ꝛ dozientas personas. Mas Nuestro Señor, que quiso que la muerte suya fuese vengada, fizo aqui vn grande milagro, que como todos se pensauan que por la noche que venia tornarian atras, el sol puesto, començo a salir luego en horiente bien asi como si la noche fuese pasada ; fue dia claro. Y por eso ouieron de aparejar se para la batalla los vnos ꝛ los otros. Mas quando el Emperador ꝛ las sus gentes vieron este milagro, fueron mucho alegres, ꝛ conoscieron que esto era fecho por voluntad de Dios. Y el senescal ferio tan reziamente enla otra batalla de Pilatos, que duro la pelea desde hora de prima fasta hora de nona pasada. ꝛ murieron, dela gente dela parte de Pilatos, tasta dos mill y dozientas y cincuenta personas ; ꝛ mucho fueron escalentadas las huestes la vna contra la otra. Mas ala hora delas bisperas tornaron en el campo todas en vno. Y duro la pelea fasta el sol puesto, y murieron, dela parte de Pilatos, fasta tres mill y dozientas y cincuenta personas, y dela parte del Emperador fasta quatro cientas ꝛ cincuenta personas. Asi que perdio Pilatos por todos onze mill ꝛ nueue cientas ꝛ quarenta personas, dende arriba; dela parte del Emperador fasta tres mill ꝛ cincuenta personas, y dende arriba. E vencio el Emperador el campo, y dieron al alcance a los de Pilatos fasta las puertas dela cibdad, enel qual alcance mataron vn hombre que luengo tiempo auia andado asi como loco por la cibdad de Jerusalem, diziendo todos dias : « Ven, Vaspasiano, sobre Jerusalem » ; por lo qual el pueblo avia muy grande desplazer, que muchos creyan que fuese profeta. Y fue ferido Josep Jafaria, mas no murio de aquellos golpes. Mas murieron de otros hombres señalados sin cuenta en la entrada dela cibdad. E tantos fueron los lloros ꝛ llantos que auia por la cibdad, que Pilatos y el rey Archileus eran muy tristes y dolientes dela gente que avian perdido. E quando vino enla mañana que auia de salir, Pilatos y el rey Archileus eran muy tristes, ꝛ no ouieron voluntad de salir. Mas mando que no saliese ninguno, mas que guardasen la cibdad. Mas las conpañas del Emperador, ꝛ todas las otras gentes, cuydauan que Pilatos saliese al campo para pelear, ꝛ el no salio. ꝛ vinieron se a la tienda del Emperador, ꝛ todos en vno llegaron se a los adarues dela cibdad. Aqui estouieron esperando que saliessen ala batalla Pilatos ꝛ la su gente, desdel alua fasta hora de tercia. ꝛ desque vieron las compañas del Emperador que no salia ninguno dela cibdad, tornaronse para las tiendas ꝛ desarmaron se, ꝛ folgaron todo el dia fasta la mañana. Y el Emperador mando venir ante si a Jacob ꝛ a Jafel, ꝛ dixo les que no cesasen la obra delos valles fasta que fuesen acabados, por tal que ninguno no pudiese salir. E quando Pilatos vido que de Jerusalem no podia salir ninguno, el fue mucho desconortado, ꝛ todos los otros dela cibdad. ꝛ dezian todos a vna boz que « aquel que todos dias dezia : Ven, Vaspasiano, en Jerusalem, es muerto, por que nos creemos que fuese profeta contra nos ; mal consejo tomaste, Pilatos : como no entregaste la cibdad al Emperador ? Agora es complida la profecia que aquel que teniamos por loco lo dezia todos dias ». Y quando Pilatos oyo los gritos delas gentes, fue muy triste, ꝛ fizo vénir ante si a Josep Jafaria, ꝛ el rey Archileus, ꝛ dixo les que les diesen consejo sobre aquello que las gentes dezian ; y Josep Jafaria dixo le : « Señor, otro consejo aqui no ay sino que esten los hombres porel adarue, ꝛ que fagan grandes balsas a cerca del adarue, ꝛ que pongan alli todos los muertos, porque espanto seria delas gentes si todos dias touiesen los muertos delante, ꝛ avn mas porel fedor que dellos salia, que seria muy grande enfermedad ; mas estemos aqui muy sabiamente ꝛ fazed guardar ꝛ repartir las viandas, que asaz son pocas para la gente que aqui esta ; especialmente que ay delos de fuera en parte mas de veynte mill hombres, delos quales echar ni enbiar no podemos por lugar que sea. » E el rey Archileus ouo el consejo de Josep por bueno, ꝛ dixo que al no podia hombre dezir. Y Pilatos encomendo este fecho a Josep Jafaria, porque era hombre cierto ꝛ sabio. E dixo le : « Josep, fazed assi como vos tengades por bien. » Y luego Josep fizo fazer las balsas fuera dela cibdad, entre el adarue ꝛ los valles del Emperador. ꝛ aqui fizo poner los muertos todos ; ꝛ fueron por cuenta quarenta mill personas. ꝛ despues puso se por la cibdad a partir las viandas, ꝛ tomaua delos que tenian ꝛ daua a los que no tenian. Mas por las gentes, que eran muchas, fueron gastadas en pocos dias, fasta que vinieron en esto : que ni quedo bestias ni yeruas, ni otras cosas que comiessen, ꝛ de aquellas cosas comian de fanbre. Grande fue la fambre ꝛ la careza que era en la cibdad, por razon delas muchas gentes que estauan aqui que eran venidas a honrrar la fiesta, ꝛ no auian traydo viandas, ꝛ quando no se cataron vieron se fuertemente cercados del Emperador ꝛ de su fijo Titus, ca no pudieron salir. ꝛ quando Pilatos vido que las gentes menudas se morian de fambre, ꝛ muchas que yuan diziendo por la cibdad : « Fambre, fambre! » touo se por malandante, ꝛ ouo grande dolor delas gentes que se morian de fambre ; ꝛ fizo fazer pregund por la cibdad, que todo hombre buscasse de comer por las casas delos ricos hombres ꝛ que partiessen con ellos las viandas que touiessen. E quando el pueblo oyo el pregon, ouo muy grande gozo ꝛ grande consolacion. ꝛ luego van se por la cibdad ꝛ por las casas delos ricos hombres buscando que comiessen, ꝛ veriades entre ellos muchas puñadas ꝛ palos, ꝛ de otras armas, tantas que muchos morian ; ꝛ aquel que mayor golpe podia dar, no quedaua por el, ꝛ aquel auia mayor parte dela vianda. ꝛ andauan todos dias escuchando por las casas delos ricos hombres, ꝛ alli donde veyan fumear, luego eran alli. E por grado o por fuerça tomauan todo quanto fallauan, que de comer fuesse. Assi en pocos de tiempos fueron gastadas todas las viandas, tan solamente que no quedo nada que de comer fuesse ; ꝛ quando todo les fallescio, corrieron a las puertas dela cibdad, que eran encoradas de cuero de bufano ꝛ de bueyes, ꝛ las gentes tomauan a pedaços de aquellos cueros, ꝛ cozian los para comer, ꝛ aquel que mayor pedaço podia tomar, aquel se tenia por grande, ꝛ aquellos cueros comian. ꝛ vinieron a esto : que vn pan que solia valer vn dinero, valia quarenta pesantes de plata; ꝛ vna poma o maçana valia siete pesantes, ꝛ vn gueuo valia cinco pesantes. Mas ya no fallauan algo que de comer fuesse por dineros, ꝛ porel no guardar primero las viandas, pensando quel Emperador luego se tornaria. Y veyendo esto, que grandes ꝛ menores se morian de hambre, atanto que los biuos no podian sofrir los muertos, tantos morian de cada dia.

[XX.] De como dixo el angel ala Reyna ꝛ a Clarisa su conpañera como comiesen a sus fijos, que de complir se auia la profecia.

Dentro enla cibdad de Jerusalem estaua vna dueña que fue muger de vn rey de Africa, el qual murio enel tiempo que Jesu Cristo fue puesto enla cruz; ya sea puesto que ella quedasse jouen

ꝛ no quiso tomar marido, antes se fizo cristiana. Porque mejor pudiesse seruir a Jesu Cristo dexo todo su reyno, ꝛ vino se en Jerusalem, ꝛ truxo consigo vna su fija, ꝛ truxo consigo vna buena dueña de grande lugar que la aconpañasse, la qual era muy discreta, ꝛ sabia; ꝛ auia por nombre Clarisa. ꝛ esta Clarisa auia vn fijo, ꝛ bautizaron le en Jerusalem; ꝛ a menudo yuan a honrrar a Jesu Cristo, porque auian grande fe enel, ꝛ la Reyna auia traydo muchas viandas en Jerusalem, para ella ꝛ su compañera Clarisa. Pilatos ꝛ todos los otros judios fazian le todavia grand honrra, fasta que fue la careza enla cibdad, ca entonce no honrrauan a niguno, ꝛ robaron le todas las viandas que tenia, segund que robaron a los otros cabe de su casa. ꝛ ella auia vna huerta pequeña en que se deleytaua, ꝛ auia enella muchas buenas yeruas, las quales ouieron de tornar a comer dellas, ella ꝛ su compañera Clarisa. Y quando no touieron que comer, la fija de la Reyna murio de fambre, sin que no ouo otra enfermedad. Y el fijo dela buena dueña por semejante murio de fambre. ꝛ desto fizieron las dueñas grande duelo por la muerte de sus fijos; ꝛ empero ellas auian muy grande fambre, que aun no se podian sostener enlos pies. ꝛ la buena dueña Clarisa dixo ala Reyna: « Dexemos estar el duelo, pues que a Dios plaze que assi sea, mas pensemos de nos que moriremos de fambre, que no auemos que comer sino nuestros fijos. ꝛ por esto tomemos mi fijo ꝛ cortemos vn pedaço del quarto e assemos lo, ꝛ comamos lo, ꝛ biuamos. » Quando la Reyna oyo las palabras de Clarisa, de grande espanto cayo en tierra amortescida. Mas nuestro señor Jesu Christo, que no oluida los suyos, enbiole vn angel, el qual le dixo: « Leuantate ꝛ esfuerçate. » E quando la Reyna fue leuantada, el angel les dixo: « Dios me ha enbiado a vosotras, ꝛ vos embia a mandar por mi que comades de vuestros fijos, ꝛ sera complida la profecia quel dixo por su boca el dia de Ramos, quando entro enesta cibdad cauallero en vna asna, ꝛ los judios le fizieron grande honrra, ꝛ le siguieron fasta el templo, ꝛ dexaron lo assi que niguno no lo conbido a comer. ꝛ luego el lloro sobre aquesta cibdad, ꝛ dixo: En esta generacion de Jerusalem verna vna grande pestilencia, ℣ tan grande fanbre, que la madre comera por fanbre a su fijo. ℣ la cibdad sera destruyda, que no quedara piedra sobre piedra. ℣ assi es complido el duelo del pueblo; ℣ asi comed de vuestros fijos, que al no se puede fazer. » En tanto el angel desaparescio, ℣ las buenas dueñas quedauan muy tristes.

Mucho quedaron consoladas las buenas dueñas delas palabras del angel, mas por la flaqueza dela naturaleza, llorauan, ℣ avian grande duelo de sus fijos; ℣ Clarisa rogo ala Reyna que le ayudasse a cortar vn quarto de su fijo. E la Reyna ayudo le assi como pudo. ℣ quando lo ouieron cortado, pusieron lo assar, ℣ demientras que se assaua, Pilatos passaua por las casas dela Reyna, ℣ sintio aquel holor muy bueno que salia dela carne asada, ℣ tomo le grande deseo, no sabiendo que carne de hombre fuesse. ℣ dixo que nunca auia sentido tan buen holor de carne asada. ℣ mando a tres escuderos suyos que fuesen a buscar adonde asauan aquella carne, que tan grande deseo auia della. E el rey Archileus ℣ muchos otros que estauan con Pilatos, fueron muy conortados de aquel tan buen olor, ℣ los escuderos empeçaron de buscar donde salia aquel tan buen olor, ℣ andando buscando por la cibdad, vinieron ala casa dela Reyna de Africa, ℣ entraron dentro, ℣ dixeron ala Reyna ℣ a Clarisa : « Pilatos nos enbia a vos que le enbiedes desa carne asada que aparejades para vosotras, por que dize que no sintio jamas tan buen olor de carne asada como esta que aqui asades; por que es menester que le mandeys luego dar della. » E Clarisa les respondio que se la enbiarian de grado, ℣ dixo a los escuderos : « Venid comigo ». ℣ quando fueron conella enel palacio, Clarisa tomo su fijo por el pie, ℣ dixo : « Emprestad me vn cuchillo con que corte, ℣ enbiar le he vn quarto desta carne ; ℣ el faga la guisar como el quisiere

ꝛ a su voluntad. » E quando los escuderos vieron que de su fijo queria cortar vn quarto, ꝛ que ya fallescia otro quarto, el qual ellas tenian [a] asar, ellos lo ouieron a fuerte cosa, ꝛ de manzilla que ouieron, boluieron el rrostro, ꝛ salieron se dela casa. ꝛ fueron delante Pilatos. ꝛ el les dixo que como venian assi espantados ꝛ no trayan de aquello por que los enbio; ꝛ ellos contaron le todo lo que auian visto enla casa dela Reyna de Africa. Y quando Pilatos lo oyo, entro se enel palacio, ꝛ echose enla cama, ꝛ dixo de su boca: « Aqui no podemos mas fazer. » E la Reyna ꝛ la dueña Clarisa comieron su fijo todo; ꝛ despues comieron la fija dela Reyna, mas como la auia de cortar con el cuchillo, cayo amortescida; ꝛ Clarisa la conorto lo mas que ella pudo. E quando Pilatos ouo estado dos dias ensu cama, salio fuera, mas mal de su grado, ca en las gentes dezian todas a vna boz: « Do es Pilatos? Que consejo nos dara? ꝛ si no demos la cibdad al Emperador? » Y Pilatos ayunto su consejo con el rey Archileus ꝛ con los otros buenos que alli eran; e Pilatos dixo les: « Señores, otro consejo no auemos contra el Emperador, si no que le entreguemos la cibdad, ꝛ si me quisiere tomar a merced; si no, faga de mi su voluntad, ca mas vale que yo muera, que si este pueblo muriesse de fambre, que nos estamos mucho estrechos de viandas; ꝛ contar vos he vna grand marauilla que enésta cibdad a acahescido. Sabed que la fija dela Reyna de Africa murio de fanbre, ꝛ el fijo de vna dueña su compañera, la qual auia por nombre Clarisa, que an comido sus fijos, que ya no tenian al que comer; por que vos do de consejo que nos demos al Emperador, ꝛ si yo muero, por ventura vosotros seredes tomados a merced. » E quando todos oyeron este consejo, fueron muchos tristes, ꝛ llorando dezian a altas bozes: « Ay Dios! que faremos de nuestro buen señor ꝛ gouernador? » Grande fue el duelo ꝛ el lloro que andaua por la cibdad, que nunca por nigund tiempo tan grand desconorte fue enlas gentes: lo vno por la fanbre, ꝛ lo otro por su señor. Y luego Pilatos se armo, conel rey Archileus ꝛ con todos los otros caualleros; ꝛ salieron fuera dela cibdad, ꝛ llegaron fasta los valles. ℣ Pilatos demando por el Emperador, ℣ el Emperador con Titus su fijo, ℣ con el Jacob ℣ Jafel, ℣ con otros nobles caualleros sin cuento, allegaron enderredor de donde Pilatos estaua; y Pilatos dixo al Emperador: « Señor, sea la vuestra merced que ayades misericordia de mi ℣ de todo este pueblo. Tomad la vuestra cibdad ℣ todo lo que es dentro, ℣ dexad nos yr en tierras estrañas. ℣ ruego vos, señor, que no paredes mientes ala mi mengua ni al mi mal consejo, que yo oue quando el vuestro honrrado mensajero vino por la Veronica, ℣ no vos enbie el tributo que a vos ℣ al honrrado padre vuestro, Cesar Agusto, solia fazer; ℣ por mi alabeza me alce contra vos con la cibdad; ℣ asi, señor, aued de mi merced, ℣ fazed de mi lo que quisierdes. Mas sea la vuestra merced que este Rey que no tiene culpa, que lo dexedes yr. » E el rey Archileus dixo al Emperador: « Yo soy fijo del rey Herodes, señor de Galilea, ℣ despues dela su muerte quedo ami el reyno, porque vos ruego que no querades que yo aqui me pierda. Ca nunca yo ni mi padre venimos contra vos fasta agora, que yo vine enesta cibdad por honrrar la fiesta; assi, señor, fazed de mi lo que fuere la vuestra merced; enpero, ruego vos, señor, que me ayades a merced. » E quando el Emperador ouo entendido las palabras de amosados, respondio primeramente a Pilatos, ℣ dixo le: « Si Pilatos me quisiere entregar la cibdad, con todos aquellos que dentro son, para fazer a nuestra voluntad, yo la tomare, ℣ no en otra guisa. » E despues dixo al rey Archileus: « Bien vees tu que no es razon que nos te tomemos a merced, ca no es ora esto por quanto tu padre a grand tuerto fizo matar los ynocentes, porque acertase enel santo profeta Jesu Cristo, por miedo que quando seria grande, que le tiraria la tierra, ca los sus sabios le dixeron que el rey delos judios era nascido, delo qual ouo muy grande pesar; ca nos no queriamos que otro rey ouiese si no el. ℣ por esto que tu padre fue malo, ℣ no ouo merced delos infantes ynocentes, que fueron por cuenta ciento ℣ quarenta ℣ quatro mill, los quales murieron por aquel santo profeta Jesu Cristo, ꝛ tu mercaras la su muerte ꝛ la su yniquidad. »

[XXII.] De como desespero el rey Archileus.

E quando el rey Archileus vido que el Enperador no le queria tomar a merced, ꝛ vido que el Emperador auia de entrar en la cibdad donde morian de fanbre, ayro se con si mesmo, ꝛ delante de todos descendio del cauallo, ꝛ desarmo se, ꝛ saco el espada, ꝛ como la saco, dixo assi : « A Dios no plega que yo biuo me ponga en vuestras manos, ni faga cosa que a mi sea desonrra, ni paganos se venguen de mi. » E metio se la punta del espada por medio del coraçon, ꝛ dexo se caer encima della, ꝛ passo se en manera que salia por las espaldas, ꝛ luego cayo muerto en tierra. E quando Pilatos vido al rey Archileus que era muerto, fue muy triste ꝛ ayrado, ꝛ entro se en la cibdad sin que no tomo licencia del Emperador; aqui fizo gran duelo por la muerte del rey Archileus, ꝛ otro dia de mañana, Pilatos fizo llegar todos los caualleros dela cibdad. ꝛ fizo venir ay a Josep Jafaria, ꝛ a Barrabas su senescal, por tomar sus consejos, ꝛ dixo: « Señores, bien vedes vos que nos no podemos tener contra el Emperador, ca Dios nos a oluidado, ꝛ nigunas viandas no auemos en aquesta cibdad, por que a tal tribulacion nunca fue en cibdad tal como esta. » E respondio Josep, ꝛ dixo : « Señor, en esto otro consejo ombre no vos puede dar, pues el Enperador no vos toma a merced; ca, señor, mal consejo vos dio aquel que os dixo que contra el Emperador viniesedes; ca bien podriades vos ver que contra el Enperador vos no erades ygual, mas demandad lo a quien mal consejo vos dio. » E dixo Pilatos : « Esso no lo fare yo, mas fagamos assi : aqui en la cibdad ay mucho tesoro ꝛ grande de oro ꝛ de plata ꝛ de piedras preciosas, ꝛ el Emperador ꝛ las sus gentes piensan delo auer todo : mas no avran niguna cosa; porque luego mando que el oro ꝛ la plata sea limado, ꝛ las piedras preciosas sean molidas, ꝛ de aquello sea fecho poluora, ꝛ sea assi partido, que tanto sea dado al rico como al pobre, ꝛ cada vno coma dello su parte; e el Emperador con Titus su fijo ꝛ con el Jacob ꝛ Jafel ꝛ con otros moradores ni todos los otros enemigos no lo auran ». ꝛ luego fue fecho; ꝛ quando fue todo comido, vinieron delante Pilatos ꝛ dixeron: « Señor, fecho auemos tu mandamiento; ꝛ manda lo que fagamos. » E quando Pilatos esto oyo, començo muy fuertemente de llorar, ꝛ dixo delante todos: « Señores, vosotros me establescistes que yo fuese vuestro gouernador; bien sabedes todos que primero yo era adelantado del honrrado Cesar Agusto, emperador de Roma, al qual fazia cierto tributo, ꝛ tenia aquel por señor ꝛ vosotros todos; ꝛ agora, por mal consejo, alçe me contra Vespesiano su fijo, donde por este pecado, ꝛ por la traycion que fue fecha ꝛ consentida en la muerte de aquel santo profeta, que bien vos deuedes membrar que tales señales fizo el dia que murio, ꝛ antes quel muriese dixo dela su boca el dia de Ramos todos quantos males que agora son, ꝛ no son complidos, mas creo que ayna se compliran, que ya parece de cada dia. Pues yo creo que no puedo escapar de muerte: vosotros por aventura podriades escapar; ruego vos por Dios que me querades perdonar si por aventura a algunos de vosotros fize algund enojo. » E los caualleros ꝛ el pueblo, quando oyeron estas palabras, fueron mucho turbados, en guisa que no pudo niguno fablar ni responder, tan fuertemente llorauan, ca sabian que todos serian destruydos, ꝛ Pilatos dixo: « Varones, otro consejo yo no veo ni vos puedo dar, si no que nos demos al Enperador ꝛ estemos a su merced; ca por ventura algunos escaparan, ca mas vale que no que muramos todos de fambre. » E todos touieron por bueno el consejo de Pilatos, ꝛ dixeron que mas les valia estar a merced del Emperador que no morir de fanbre. Y el otro dia, Pilatos ꝛ todos los otros de mañana salieron fuera dela cibdad, ꝛ vinieron al valle que era en derredor del adarue, ꝛ Titus andaua caualgando allende con muchos caualleros. ꝛ Pilatos fizo le sus señales con las luas de sus manos. E quando Titus lo vido, vino con sus caualleros delante, adonde Pilatos lo vido, ꝛ Pilatos encomenço a dezir a

Titus : « Señor, sea la vuestra merced que roguedes al Emperador, vuestro padre ꝛ mi señor, que aya merced de mi ꝛ de todo este pueblo. ꝛ no paredes mientes alas nuestras iniquidades. » ꝛ esto le dezia llorando fuertemente. E Titus enbio dos caualleros al Emperador que le dixesen las palabras que Pilatos auia conel. Y quando el Emperador oyo esto, fizo armar dozientos caualleros, ꝛ caualgo, ꝛ vino donde estaua Titus su fijo, ꝛ comenҫo Titus a dezir al Emperador: « Señor, sabed que Pilatos vos quiere entregar la cibdad con condicion que lo tomedes a merced »; ꝛ el Emperador le respondio: « Fijo, no es agora hora de demandar merced, ca lo faze por que no puede mas fazer. » ꝛ el Enperador paro mientes azia Pilatos, ꝛ dixo esto: « Si tu me entregues la cibdad con todos los judios que dentro son, para fazer nuestras voluntades, yo la tomare. ꝛ digo te que tan poco aure yo merced de ti ni delos otros, como ouistes del santo profeta Jesu Cristo, el qual vosotros acusastes malamente a muerte, ꝛ los malos judios lo enclauaron enla cruz; porque vos digo que ya merced no fallaredes en mi. » E quando Pilatos esto oyo, fue muy triste el ꝛ todos los otros, ꝛ dixo al Emperador: « Señor, tomad la cibdad ꝛ todo quanto enella es; ꝛ sea la vuestra merced fecha ala vuestra voluntad. » Quando el Enperador vido que de todo en todo Pilatos se ponia en su poder, fizo cercar los valles en derredor, porque nigund judio pudiese salir; ꝛ fizo entrar fasta quatro mill caualleros enla cibdad, ꝛ fizo les mandamiento que cercasen todas las puertas, que nigund judio no dexasen salir ni otras cosas. Con tanto Pilatos se entro, ꝛ todos los otros judios enla cibdad; ꝛ Titus entro enla cibdad con grande caualleria; ꝛ entraron Jacob ꝛ Jafel por seguir la caualleria, que era muy grande; ꝛ Titus tomo a Pilatos por la barua, ꝛ encomendo lo a diez caualleros que lo guardasen muy bien; ꝛ Jacob tomo a Joseb Jafaria; ꝛ Jafel, porque era buen cauallero, fue a tomar a Barrabas, senescal de Pilatos. ꝛ quando todo esto fue fecho, el Enperador entro en Jerusalem, ꝛ mando que todos los judios fuesen presos, ꝛ bien atados, ꝛ que luego se los truxesen delante. E luego fue fecho;

ꝛ el dixo a sus gentes : « Pues que la cibdad es en nuestro poder, nos queremos fazer almoneda delos judios que son aqui, como ellos vendieron al santo profeta Jesu Cristo, el qual nos guarescio dela nuestra enfermedad ; assi como lo vendieron por treynta dineros, nos queremos vender treynta judios por vn dinero. » E con tanto vino vn cauallero, ꝛ dixo al Emperador : « Señor, yo tomare vn dinero, si a vos plaze. » Y el Enperador mando que le diesen entre hombres, ꝛ mugeres, ꝛ criaturas, treynta por vn dinero. Mas fue ventura de aquel cauallero, que todos los judios, que eran grandes ꝛ valientes. E quando los ouo rescebido, lleuo los a su tienda : ꝛ quando los vido ay, dio con su espada vn golpe porel vientre avn judio, ꝛ mato lo, ꝛ luego cayo en tierra muerto ; ꝛ al sacar del espada, salto del vientre del judio oro ꝛ plata ; ꝛ el cauallero fue mucho marauillado delo que vido, ꝛ tomo aparte vno delos otros judios que le parecio mas viejo, ꝛ dixo le : « Dime tu agora que puede ser esto, que yo nunca vi de cuerpo de hombre muerto, judio ni de otra persona, saliesse oro ni plata si no deste. » ꝛ el judio dixo : « Señor, si tu me asegures de muerte, yo te lo dire. » E el cauallero aseguro al judio de muerte ; ꝛ el judio conto le como les auia mandado Pilatos comer todo el tesoro que estaua enla cibdad, ꝛ las piedras preciosas, por que el Emperador ni la su gente no lo ouiessen ni se seruiesen dello ; « ꝛ esta es la razon porque tu as fallado enel cuerpo deste judio muerto oro ꝛ plata ; ꝛ sepas que tanto daua a comer al pobre como al rico. » ꝛ quando el cauallero sopo esto, mando a dos escuderos que matasen los veynte ꝛ ocho judios, ꝛ que no tocasen a aquel judio que el auia asegurado, mas que lo guardasen bien ; ꝛ quando los veynte ꝛ ocho judios fueron muertos, fizo los abrir por el vientre, ꝛ sacaron tanto de oro [ꝛ] de plata, que fue marauilla : ꝛ luego fue sabido por toda la hueste del Enperador que los judios estauan llenos enlos sus cuerpos de oro ꝛ de plata, porque todo el tesoro dela cibdad se auian comido. ꝛ veriades venir caualleros ꝛ de otras personas muchas corriendo ala cibdad para mercar delos judios, ꝛ cada vno dezia : « Señor, vended nos si quiera por vn dinero a cada vno »; ℣ luego que los auian mercado, matauan los, por sacar el thesoro que tenian, ℣ en poca de ora se ayunto tanta de gente, que era sin cuenta; ℣ auia mayor priesa enello, que parescia tauerna de buen vino, aunque le diesen en dono; ℣ cada vno, asi como los mercauan, assi los matauan, por sacar dellos el tesoro. Mas mucho ouieron mal consejo de Pilatos como les fizo comer el tesoro, ca muchos fueron escapados a vida, ℣ por aquesta razon murieron. ℣ quando el Emperador vido la grand priesa delos mercadores, fizo mandamiento que de alli adelante no vendiesen mas fasta que supiese quantos dellos auia por vender. ℣ el su senescal los fizo contar. ℣ quando fueron contados, dixeron al Emperador: « Señor, sabed que entre hombres, ℣ mugeres, ℣ criaturas, son los que quedan por vender ciento ℣ ochenta, que valen seys dineros; tantos vos sobran, ℣ no mas. » « Pues, dixo el Emperador, no vendamos mas, queden a vida, porque la passion del fijo de Dios sea remembrada mejor, ℣ porque todos tiempos las gentes que vernan los llamen traydores, porque mataron al santo profeta Jesu Cristo; assi como ellos dieron al señor major por treynta dineros, bien assi he dado treynta judios por vn dinero. ℣ estos judios que son quedados, sean para mi, ℣ guardad los bien. » Y complida fue la ocasion del pueblo en aquellos que fueron vendidos treynta judios por vn dinero. ℣ fueron los vendidos por cuenta quarenta mill personas, amenos de quantos yazian muertos ℣ descuartizados por la cibdad, como no podian andar sino sobre muertos. Mas quando todo esto fue fecho, el Emperador mando que todos los muertos fuesen puestos en fondo de tierra, por que demientra que estouiesen enla cibdad no ouiesen fedor. ℣ luego fue fecho, ca las gentes lo auian a voluntad, ℣ cada vno fazia quanto podia. E luego el Emperador mando derribar la cibdad ℣ los adarues, asi que la piedra de abaxo ni la de arriba no quedo en obra, antes no quedo piedra sobre piedra. ℣ las gentes cunplieron con el Emperador el mandamiento que les mando; ℣ assi que niguna parte del adarue ni de la cibdad no quedo que todo no fuese derribado. ℣ despues todas

las otras cosas fueron derribadas, otrosi saluo el templo de Salomon ꝛ la torre de Dauid, ca Dios no quiso que fuese deribado. E con tanto fue complida la profecia. Enpero antes que las casas dela cibdad derribasen, Titus caualgo por la cibdad, ꝛ fizo allegar todas las armaduras assi delos caualleros como delos de pie, delas quales la cibdad era bien guarnescida. ꝛ de todas las nobles joyas de casas que eran sin cuento, ꝛ todos los paños de oro ꝛ de seda; ꝛ desque todo esto fue allegado, fizo lo lleuar a las tiendas fuera dela cibdad, por tal que no se perdiesse mas; ala Reyna ꝛ a su compañera Clarisa fallaron muertas de fambre en su casa. Y quando la cibdad fue toda destruyda, el Enperador fizo aparejar todas las sus gentes para tornar en Roma, ꝛ luego fueron aparejadas. E quando vino otro dia de mañana, el Emperador con toda su hueste partieron de Jerusalem, ꝛ vinieron se para la cibdad de Acre; ꝛ porel camino yua Pilatos con los otros judios delante el Enperador, las manos atadas ꝛ bien guardado. Y quando fueron llegados en Acre, estouieron ay tres dias, ꝛ vino ay el cauallero que auia comprado el primer dinero delos judios ante el Emperador, ꝛ traxo consigo el judio que el auia asegurado de muerte, ꝛ dixo al Emperador: « Señor, yo asegure a este judio de muerte por esta razon: que sabeys que yo oue comprado el primero dinero de los judios ꝛ los oue lleuado ala mi tienda, ꝛ saque la espada ꝛ mate el vno, ꝛ como le saque el espada del cuerpo, salio del oro ꝛ plata, dela qual cosa yo fue mucho marauillado dello; ꝛ tome a este judio a vna parte, ꝛ dixe le que me dixese que cosa podria ser esto; ꝛ el no me lo quiso dezir fasta que lo asegurase de muerte; por que vos ruego, señor, que tomedes este que yo asegure, ꝛ dad me otro que mate en lugar deste, ca por cierto conplir quiero mi dinero, pues lo merque. » ꝛ el Emperador dio le el mas sotil judio que ay era, ꝛ el tomo el del cauallero, ꝛ el cauallero mato al judio luego, ꝛ saco lo que tenia enel cuerpo.

Quando el Emperador ouo estado tres dias en Acre, partio con toda su gente todo quanto auia ganado en Jerusalen, assi que no touo nada para si. E fecho esto, fizo aparejar tres naues [ꝛ] fizo poner los judios, entre hombres ꝛ mugeres ꝛ criaturas, ꝛ sin marineros nigunos ꝛ sin hombres que pudiesen regir las naues enlas mares, ꝛ menos de viandas; fizo les echar del puerto que es delante del castillo de Jafa, ꝛ dexo les yr. Mas nuestro señor Jesu Cristo, que quiso que la su muerte fuesse remembrada, saluo todas las naues, ꝛ quantos dentro eran, ꝛ vino arribar la vna naue en Inglatierra, ꝛ la otra en Burdeos, ꝛ la otra en Narbona, ꝛ todos salieron sanos ꝛ saluos, dela qual cosa ouieron grande gozo ꝛ plazer ꝛ cuydauan que Dios lo auia fecho por amor dellos : ꝛ fizo lo porque todos tiempos fuesen vituperados ꝛ denostados, ꝛ escarnescidos de todas las gentes por la su muerte; ꝛ fizo ay vn grande milagro, que todos quantos fueron a vna naue, todos auian de su tiempo, bien assi como si mugeres fuesen, ꝛ fue caso de ventura que despues que partieron de Acre, el Emperador ni otra persona nunca supieron dellos cosa ninguna fasta que fueron arribados cada vno en su tierra. Enpero que antes quel Emperador enbiase los judios, saco a Josep Abarimatia dela prision enla qual lo auian metido por enbidia, por quanto el auia descendido dela cruz el cuerpo de Jesu Cristo, ꝛ lo auia metido enel monumento quel auia fecho para si; ꝛ luego enesa ora quel ouo descendido dela cruz el cuerpo de Jesu Cristo, fue preso, e el padre de vno de aquellos que el Emperador dexaua, que ya era fecha luengo tiempo auia. ꝛ aqui Josep estouo quarenta años; mas a el no le semejo que y ouiese estado tanto tiempo como desdel viernes que descendio dela cruz el cuerpo de Jesu Cristo, fasta el domingo que dixeron que Jesu Cristo era resuscitado; ꝛ a todos tiempos estouo conortado dela gracia de Dios; ꝛ demientra que estouo enla prision, tomo ante si el santo Greal continamente, el qual le enbio nuestro señor Jesu Cristo luego como fue enla prision encarcelado ; mas esto dexaron estar, porque Jafel no lo porna en oluido, ℣ fablara del enel libro del santo Greal.

[XXIV.] Como el Emperador se acojo con su compaña enlas naues para se tornar en Roma.

El Enperador fizo llamar asu senescal ℣ a Jacob ℣ a Jafel, ℣ mando les que corrigiesen todas las armaduras enlas naues, ℣ las aparejasen muy bien de viandas ℣ de todas las cosas que fuesen menester. ℣ luego fue fecho. ℣ despues fizo corregir los caualleros ℣ todas las otras gentes ; ℣ despues recogieron se el Enperador ℣ su fijo Titus, ℣ Jacob, ℣ Jafel, ℣ partieron de Acre, ℣ Dios les dio tan buen tiempo, que alos quarenta dias aribaron al puerto de Barlec sanos ℣ saluos ; ℣ luego el Emperador ℣ su fijo Titus salieron en tierra, ℣ todos los caualleros, ℣ todas las otras gentes, ℣ sacaron todas las bestias ℣ armaduras en tierra, ℣ folgaron alli tres dias ; ℣ despues pusieron se enel camino ℣ vinieron se a Roma. ℣ como el papa sant Clemeynte supo quel Enperador venia, fizo aparejar todos sus clerigos, ℣ ordeno su prosescion a loores ℣ gloria de nuestro señor Dios, ℣ mucho ordenadamente, con muchos que le seguieron muy deuotamente, ℣ salieron bien fuera a rescebir los Emperadores. ℣ quando vieron venir a sanct Clemeinte con grande procision, ouieron muy grande gozo, ℣ luego descaualgaron, ℣ fueron se a abraçar ℣ besar, ℣ todos en vno fizieron gracias a Dios que les auia dado vitoria contra sus enemigos, ℣ deuotamente siguieron la procision, ℣ asi entraron en Roma. Grande fue el gozo ℣ la fiesta que fizieron las gentes de Roma por la venida delos Emperadores ℣ de todas las otres gentes que venian con ellos, ℣ esta fiesta duro ocho dias. Empero que cada dia yuan ordenadamente a oyr el sermon que fazia sant Clemeinte : asi que muchas gentes se conuertieron en aquellos ocho dias, mas que no auian fecho

antes, ꝛ esto por la grande deuocion ꝛ consolacion del Emperador ; ꝛ empero no se osauan bautizar fasta que el Emperador ꝛ su fijo Titus ouieron començado, ca temianse de ser reputados. ꝛ quando el Emperador ouo estado ocho dias, sant Clemeinte le fue a ver, ꝛ dixo le : « Señor, pues Jhesu Cristo nuestro señor vos a fecho tanta de gracia que auedes tomado vengança dela su muerte, ꝛ sodes sano con toda la vuestra gente, ꝛ ruego vos que le tengades lo que le pusistes, quando de Roma partistes para yr en Jerusalem. » ꝛ el Emperador le dixo : « Ruego vos que me digays que cosa le prometi. » Sant Clemeinte le dixo : « Señor, bien vos deuedes membrar que vos le prometistes que quando seriades tornado de Jerusalem, ꝛ ouiesedes tomado vengança dela su muerte, si a el plazia que tornasedes, que luego vos bautizariades ; por que vos ruego, señor, que cumplades por obra segun que prometistes. » Respondio el Emperador a sant Clemente, ꝛ dixo : « Amigo de Dios, yo vos lo otorgo, ꝛ ruego yo a Dios que a plazer suyo sea ; ꝛ con tanto fazed aparejar lo que es menester para ello. » E sant Clemeynte se partio del Enperador con grande gozo, por quanto auia acabado su entendimiento conel Emperador, ꝛ mando a sus clerigos ꝛ clerizones que aparejasen sus fuentes del bautismo quanto mas onrradamente pudiesen, por quanto el Emperador ꝛ su fijo Titus se auian de bautizar, ꝛ todos los sus caualleros, despues todas las otras sus gentes ; ꝛ ellos ouieron muy grande gozo. ꝛ luego de fecho, aparejaron las fuentes mui onrradamente, ꝛ a cabo de tercero dia que las fuentes fueron aparejadas, sant Clemeinte torno al Enperador ꝛ dixo le : « Señor, ya aparejadas son las fuentes, ruego vos que nos vayamos ala yglesia, ꝛ bautizar vos edes » ; ꝛ luego se fueron para la yglesia, ꝛ el Emperador le dixo : « A plazer de Dios sea fecho. »

[XXV.] Como se bautizo el Emperador ꝛ su fijo Titus ꝛ sus caualleros.

El Emperador, ꝛ Titus su fijo, vinieron con sant Clemeynte ala yglesia de sant Simon el justo, ꝛ ay sant Clemeynte se aparejo con sus clerigos, ꝛ comenzaron el oficio muy solepnemente, segund que se deuia fazer; ꝛ luego se bautizo el Emperador primero enel nombre del Padre ꝛ del Fijo ꝛ del Espiritu Santo, amen. ꝛ no le mudaron el nombre Vespasiano; e despues se bauptizo Titus, ꝛ no le mudaron el su nombre; ꝛ despues se bautizo Jacob, ꝛ Jafel, ꝛ su sobrino, ꝛ el senescal, ꝛ a muchos fueron mudados sus nombres; ꝛ se bautizo despues toda la gente del Emperador. ꝛ quando toda la gente fue bautizada ꝛ el oficio fue acabado, el Emperador ꝛ todos los otros fueron a comer, ꝛ folgaron todo aquel dia con muy grande plazer. ꝛ quando vino el otro dia por la mañana, el Emperador ꝛ Titus, con todo el pueblo ajuntado, vinieron ala yglesia a oyr la missa, ꝛ dezian todos a vna boz : « Señor, bautiza nos. » Quando sant Clemeynte oyo dezir al pueblo que querian bautismo, ouo muy grand plazer, ꝛ fizo muy grandes gracias a Dios como los auia alumbrados, ꝛ mando inchir cien tinajas de agua : ꝛ quando fueron llenas, sant Clemeynte la santigo, diziendo aquellas santas oraciones del bautismo; ꝛ quando ouo fecho el oficio, dixo al pueblo : « Entrad dentro enel agua, enel nombre del Padre ꝛ del Fijo ꝛ del Espiritu Sancto, ꝛ seredes cristianos ꝛ fijos de Dios. » E quando el pueblo lo oyo, entraron en aquella agua sagrada, cada vno quanto mas podia, ꝛ assi se bautizaron; ꝛ adoraron vn solo dios Jesu Cristo. E Nuestro Señor fizo aqui vn grande milagro en esa ora, que todos quantos ay eran, que se fizieron cristianos, fueron todos marauillados que de qual quier enfermedad o dolencia que ouiesen antes del bautismo, luego que fueron bautizados se fallaron sanos ꝛ linpios dela dolencia, bien assi como si todos tiempos ouiesen estados sanos. ꝛ sobre este milagro sant Clemeinte fizo su sermon, ꝛ les predico muy largamente dela fee catoliça, ꝛ dela vida de Jesu Cristo, ꝛ delos milagros que el fazia quando yua por la tierra, ꝛ delas otras cosas que fazia. ꝛ quando ouo acabado su sermon ꝛ el oficio fue acabado, ꝛ la missa fue dicha, el Emperador mando que todos los templos delos ydolos fuesen derrocados ꝛ abatidos, en tal manera que no quedase piedra sobre piedra. ꝛ luego fue fecho ese dia. Y quando esta fiesta ouo durado ocho dias, ayuntaron se todos los caualleros ꝛ nobles dela cibdad enel palacio del Emperador, ꝛ estaua ay sant Clemeynte con los Enperadores, ꝛ dixeron le : « Señor, muchos tiempos a que cada vno de nos somos defuera de su tierra ; pues, señor, auemos complido la vuestra voluntad, plega vos que nos tornemos en nuestra tierra. » E el Emperador respondio que le plazia, ꝛ dio les grandes dones a cada vno segund que era. ꝛ con su gracia todos tomaron licencia, ꝛ se despidieron del Emperador ꝛ de Titus, ꝛ de toda la corte. ꝛ quando esto fue fecho, rogaron a sant Clemeinte que les diese por escrito los diez mandamientos dela ley, ꝛ los quatorze articulos dela fe catolica, y el pater noster, y el ave maria, y todas las otras cosas que son menester de tener asi como fieles cristianos, por quanto cada vno pudiese fazer la gente ala fe catolica. Y sant Clemeynte fizo escriuir a cada vno todas aquestas cosas, y muchas otras que aqui no son escritas. Y quando lo ouieron rescebido, tomaron licencia de sant Clemeynte, ꝛ tornaron se para su tierra, ꝛ cada vno fizo bautizar sus pueblos ꝛ tornar ala fe catolica, la qual fue ensalçada por todo el pueblo ꝛ imperio de Roma ; ꝛ las gentes fueron salidas del error delos diablos en que creyan, ꝛ destruyeron todos los ydolos, ꝛ adoraron vn Dios todo poderoso, Padre ꝛ Fijo ꝛ Spiritu Santo, y creyeron todos enel firmemente ; y sant Clemeynte visitaua los amenudo con cartas suyas ꝛ enbiaua les epistolas ꝛ euangelios, que son crehencia dela santa fe catolica, ꝛ enformacion delas sus animas.

Despues que el Emperador ouo dado licencia a los sus caualleros ꝛ se partieron, el Emperador mando al senescal que truxiese a Pilatos delante del, ꝛ quando ouiese oydo la missa antes que comiese; y el senescal le dixo que le plazia de fazer su mandamiento. ℣ quando los Emperadores ouieron oydo missa, la qual ouo dicho sant Clemeynte, fueron se a los palacios, y sant Clemente con ellos; ℣ el Emperador fizo lo pasar en medio de amos a dos. Y el senescal fizo traer a Pilatos delante del Emperador, con grandes cadenas segund que estaua preso. ℣ el Emperador mando que fiziesen venir los senadores de Roma, ℣ quando fueron venidos, el Emperador les dixo: « Sepades que el honrrado mi padre Cesar Agusto encomendo a toda la tierra de Jerusalem a Pilatos que aqui esta, ℣ quiso que fuese su adelantado. ℣ Pilatos enbiaua le el tributo que el auia de auer cada año, ℣ enbiole mientra que fue el biuo. ℣ despues dela su muerte, enbio lo a mi tres años, ℣ conoscia me por señor, segund que al honrrado mi padre conoscia por señor; ℣ despues de aqui adelante no me a enbiado el tributo de siete años; ℣ quando le enbie el mi honrrado senescal el qual le lleuo vna mi carta, ℣ le dixo que me enbiase el tributo qual me deuia de siete años avn mas del año presente, respondio mucho abiltadamente con grandes amenazas, diziendo que no me enbiaria nigun tributo, ca no me lo deuia ni me conoscia por señor, que guardase yo bien a Roma ℣ a mi imperio, que asi faria el a Jerusalem de mi ℣ de todos los nuestros valedores. ℣ avn es mas culpado en quanto no justamente juzgo el santo profeta Jhesu Cristo, el qual los judios tomaron a gran tuerto, ℣ esto sabia el muy bien, ca nigund mal merescia, ℣ quiso lo librar con sentencia ala muerte, ℣ el lo libro veyendo que los judios le leuantauan falsos testimonios, ℣ como el touiese lugar de señorio, poder auia de absoluer ℣ de condenar, que lo deuiera absoluer, pues que lo hallo sin culpa, aunque fuera mejor cosa que lo ouiera fallado el culpable que como lo hallo sin culpa. Por que vos mando que segund los casos enlos quales el cayo malamente, que asi le sea dada la sentencia, ℣ esto que vosotros fizieredes, yo lo confirmare. » Y los senadores dixeron todos en vno que bien auian entendido las sus palabras, ℣ eran aparejados de complir la su voluntad por derecho ℣ por razon, mas ellos dixeron al Enperador : « Señor, el honrrado vuestro padre Cesar Agusto establescio que todas las sentencias criminales fuesen otorgadas ꝛ dadas en Roma por los senadores, por quanto Roma es cabeça de inperio, ꝛ despues que fuesen leuados assecucion alla donde el Enperador touiese por bien fuera de Roma ; por que vos conuiene, señor, que vos le enbiedes a justiciar ala cibdad de Aluaña; despues que la sentencia sea dada ꝛ otorgada, en aquella cibdad deuen ser justiciados todos aquellos que sean culpados de crimen de traycion; esto a por derecho aquella cibdad. » E el Emperador dixo que le plazia mucho si de derecho era, que asi fuese fecho. Con tanto se entraron los senadores en vna sala, ꝛ aqui hordenaron la sentencia contra Pilatos, ꝛ despues vinieron delante del Emperador, ꝛ leyeron la sentencia delante de Pilatos que era presente.

Quando la sentencia fue leyda, el Enperador mando a treynta caualleros que aparejasen en como lleuasen Pilatos sabiamente ala cibdad de Aluaña, ꝛ que lleuasen la sentencia, por que los cibdadanos la leuasen asecucion. ꝛ luego fueron aparejados, ꝛ vinieron delante el Enperador, ꝛ el Enperador dio les la sentencia, ꝛ rescibieron el preso muy bien atado en vn palafren. ꝛ caualgaron, ꝛ vinieron ala cibdad de Aluaña, ꝛ por quanto los caualleros venian por mandamiento del Enperador, salieron los a rescebir con muy grande alegria. Ellos los recebieron con grande onrra, ꝛ les fizieron muchos plazeres ; ꝛ quando fueron entrados enla cibdad, los caualleros que trayan el preso, quisieron saber qual era el alguazil de todos los dela cibdad, ꝛ fue les mostrado qual era el alguazil. ꝛ ellos dixeron como ellos querian yr a su casa del alguazil, antes que a otro lugar, ꝛ todos en vno fueron se a las casas del alguazil, ꝛ ay descaualgaron. ꝛ quando todos fueron ayuntados en vn portal que ay estaua muy nobio, el vno delos caualleros comenco a dezir al alguazil : « Señor, el Enperador nuestro señor ꝛ vuestro, vos enbia a saludar; ꝛ enbia vos por nosotros este preso ꝛ esta sentencia que por los senadores de Roma fue hordenada contra este preso; ꝛ manda vos que la sentencia sea lleuada assecucion, segund que es escripto ꝛ hordenado, ca dentro lo fallaredes; ꝛ catad aqui la carta : cred nos. » E el alguazil ꝛ los cibdadanos, todos estando en vno, rescibieron el preso ꝛ la sentencia ꝛ la carta del Emperador, ꝛ dixeron que eran prestos ꝛ aparejados de complir el mandamiento del Emperador su señor. E luego fue fecha la essecucion enla forma que enla sentencia venia ordenada, ꝛ ellos tomaron a Pilatos, ꝛ pussieron lo en vn pozo de costado del agua, ꝛ trauesaron le vna cadena en que se posase, ꝛ pusieron le vna barra de fierro ante los pechos; ꝛ todas las prisiones cerrauanse con vn candado, ꝛ estaua ay atado, tanto de estrecho que no se podia boluer, ni mouer a vna parte ni a otra. ꝛ dentro enel agua pusieron le vna tabla en que se sostenia, ꝛ ordenaron que todos dias le diesen dos onças de pan ꝛ otras dos onças de agua, ꝛ no mas tanto quanto biuiese, ꝛ pusieron por guarda a vn hombre que no fiziese al si no tan solamente dar de comer al preso segund que fue ordenado; ꝛ eneste dolor biuio Pilatos dos años.

[XXVIII.] Como el alguazil de Albaña fizo poner a Pilatos enel ryo en vna casa, ꝛ se fundio la casa.

A cabo de dos años, el alguazil de Albaña fizo ayuntar todos los cibdadanos dela cibdad, por tomar consejo como faria de Pilatos, que avn [era] biuo enla prision ; ꝛ quando fueron todos ayuntados, el alguazil les conto de como Pilatos era avn biuo, por que les rogaua que cada vno le diese consejo, el mejor que cada vno pudiese, ꝛ que tenian por bien que fiziesen de Pilatos, en tal manera que el no cayese en caso con el Emperador su señor; ꝛ todos dieronle consejo ꝛ touieron por bien que le pusiesen enla casa del ryo. ꝛ luego que el consejo

fue dado, el alguazil fizo sacar a Pilatos dela prision del pozo en que estaua. ℣ salio flaco ℣ mezquino, ℣ no se podia tener enlos pies, ℣ era tanto de velloso que no le parescia el pescueço ni la cara. ℣ caualgaron lo en vn rocin, ℣ sacaron lo fuera dela cibdad, ℣ lleuaron lo al cabo dela puente ; ℣ fue aparejada vna barca, con la qual entrase en aquella casa que era en medio del ryo, porque era assi establescido ℣ ordenado enla cibdad que todos aquellos que fuessen sentenciados a muerte de crimen de traycion, que los ponian en aquella casa, ℣ ay morian de fambre. ℣ quando el alguazil fue venido con otros hombres buenos dela cibdad, fizo poner a Pilatos enla barca, ℣ despues entro el ℣ muchos otros, ℣ vinieron a la casa que era en medio del ryo; ℣ luego que ellos se allegaron ala casa, tal se començo a trastornar la casa ℣ toda tremer, delo qual ouieron grande miedo ℣ espanto. ℣ pusieron a Pilatos enla casa sin nigunas viandas, que asi era hordenado; ℣ quando se ouieron recogido ala barca, ℣ fueron salidos en tierra, luego se entro la casa enel abismo con Pilatos, toda, ca no parescia piedra, ni pared, ni señal que hombre pudiese dezir que alli ouiese estado casa, saluo que alli remolinaua el agua en aquel lugar por todos tiempos, por lo qual el hombre conoscia el lugar donde solia estar la casa. ℣ esto ouieron todos a grande marauilla, ℣ luego enbiaron al Emperador sus mensajeros con cartas, enlas quales le fazian saber en que guisa ℣ como Pilatos murio. ℣ quando el Emperador ouo leydas las cartas, ℣ supo que de tal guisa Pilatos era muerto, fizo se mucho marauillado, ℣ todos los nobles ℣ grandes que conel eran; ℣ dixeron : « Bendito sea nuestro señor Dios que tal muerte le a dado, que no quiso que enel pozo muriese, enel qual el no podia beuir con tan poca vianda medio año, si ya no fuera voluntad de nuestro señor Jesu Cristo que lo puede fazer. »

El mal hombre que tanto de estrechamente auia estado dos años enla prision del pozo ꝛ no se quiso arrepentir de tanto mal como el auia fecho, ca Dios le oviera avido merced si gela ouiera demandado, ꝛ le perdonara; mas por quanto no se arrepintio, el nuestro señor Jesu Cristo quiso que fuese compañero del diablo; ꝛ segund que auedes oydo fue vengada la muerte ꝛ la pasion de Jesu Cristo porel Emperador Vespasiano, emperador de Roma, ꝛ por Titus su fijo fue destruyda la cibdad de Jherusalem, por que despues aca no ha auido enella abitacion de aquellas gentes.

Conclusion

Esta istoria ordeno Jacob ꝛ Josep Abarimatia, que a todas estas cosas fueron presentes, ꝛ Jafel, que de su mano la escriuio; donde roguemos a Dios, ꝛ ala Virgen Santa Maria, ꝛ todos los santos ꝛ santas de Dios que nos guarden de todo pecado, por que merezcamos yr ala gloria celestial. Amen.

Finito libro sit laus gloria Cristo. Amen.

EL CANTAR DE CANTARES EN OCTAVA RIMA

La traduction en vers du Cantique des Cantiques dont on trouvera ici le texte a été publiée pour la première fois en 1806 par le P. Antolin Merino, au tome V des Obras del M. Fr. Luis de Leon, à la suite de la traduction commentée en prose due au célèbre augustin. Dans son prologue (pp. v-vi), l'éditeur se borne à dire :

« Contiene además (un manuscrito [1]), lo que no se encuentra en otro alguno de los que hemos visto hasta ahora, el mismo Cantar de Cantares en metro de octava rima. Son dos copias ; una, seguida á la exposicion, y de la misma letra, y otra en quatro hojas cosidas al fin, y muy estropeadas, de letra diferente, no tan buena, y mas menuda. Este manuscrito, como el mas completo, y exâcto de los descubiertos hasta ahora, nos ha servido de texto para esta edicion ; pero al pie de ella hemos notado las variantes de otros, dignas de conservarse, omitiendo las que nos han parecido, ó yerros de escribientes, ó añadiduras supérfluas, que solo servirian de recargar la impresion, y embarazar la lectura. De este modo creemos se dá al público la obra íntegra, limpia, y correcta en lo posible, faltando el original de ella, y siendo lo que se encuentra copias de copias repetidas por espacio de dos siglos y medio. »

A la p. 258 du même volume, où commence la traduction en vers, le P. Merino a placé la note suivante :

« A continuacion de la obra antecedente (la traduction commentée), sin mas interrupcion que lo que ocupa el título propuesto (El Cantar de Cantares en octava rima), se halla en nuestro códice la que se sigue, de la misma forma de letra, como copiado todo por una mano, y de un mismo exemplar. Pero despues, al fin del libro, hay quatro hojas cosidas, de letra muy diferente, y en papel de distinta marca, que parece copia mas antigua ; pues constantemente usa de la S líquida en las palabras, Sposo, Sposa, stá, stando, y otras semejantes. Tiene esta inscripcion : F. Luis de Leon sobre el texto de los Cantares. Hay algunas variaciones, que notamos al pie ; mas para el texto habemos escogido indiferentemente lo que mejor ha parecido, prefiriendo por lo comun el exemplar mas antiguo. »

---

1. ...un manuscrito... que por todas sus circunstancias parece del tiempo del mismo Autor, ó muy inmediato á él. Está hermosamente escrito...

Ces deux notes du P. Merino ne concordent pas. Dans la première il décrit deux copies du texte qu'il va publier, contenues l'une et l'autre dans le même manuscrit, ou tout au moins réunies par un même brochage, puis il ajoute : « al pie de ella (esta edicion) hemos notado las variantes de otros (manuscritos), dignas de conservarse, etc... » Dans la seconde note, au contraire, il n'est plus question des autres manuscrits, et les variantes du bas des pages sont fournies uniquement par le manuscrit « en quatro hojas ». Cette discordance bizarre est vraisemblablement due à une simple négligence : au début de la première note, le P. Merino dit que le manuscrit qu'il décrit « contiene además, lo que no se encuentra en otro alguno de los que hemos visto hasta ahora, el mismo Cantar de Cantares en metro de octava rima ». Il ne saurait donc être question d'autres manuscrits, et la rédaction de la phrase citée plus haut (al pie de ella hemos notado las variantes de otros...) a évidemment trahi la pensée de l'éditeur. Ce dernier aurait donc établi le texte qu'il publiait en se servant de deux manuscrits.

J'ai acquis récemment une copie de la traduction en vers du Cantique des Cantiques, qui, comme le second manuscrit de l'éditeur de 1806, « constantemente usa de la S líquida en las palabras Sposo, Sposa, stá, stando, y otras semejantes », qui, comme lui, a pour titre : Fray Luis de Leon sobre el texto de los Cantares », et dont les leçons concordent fréquemment avec les variantes de l'édition. C'est un mince cahier de douze feuillets, en très bon état. L'écriture est du milieu du XVIIIe siècle.

Nous appelons A le texte de Merino, B le texte de notre manuscrit, C les variantes de l'édition Merino.

Quant à l'attribution, elle ne me semble pas établie. Il ne suffit pas qu'un nom, surtout un nom illustre, se trouve en tête d'un ou de plusieurs manuscrits pour que la paternité soit certaine, ou même pour qu'il y ait présomption de paternité. Il est peu vraisemblable que Fray Luis soit l'auteur de cette traduction en vers ; il n'en est pas question une seule fois dans les neuf cents pages de son procès (Coleccion de documentos inéditos para la historia de España, tomes X et XI), et l'on concevrait mal que, libéré des poursuites inquisitoriales, il ait eu la dangereuse fantaisie de mettre en vers un texte dont la version en prose lui avait valu, en partie, les ennuis que l'on sait. Ce qui, par contre, ne saurait être mis en doute, c'est que la traduction en octava rima ait été faite directement sur la traduction en prose de Fray Luis de Leon.

I [1]

Esposa. Beseme con su boca a mi el mi amado [2] !
Son mas dulces quel [3] vino tus amores;
tu nombre es suaue olor bien derramado,
y no hay olor que iguale tus olores ;
por eso las doncellas te han amado, conosciendo tus gracias y dulzores ;
lleuame en [4] pos de ti y correremos :
no temas que jamas nos cansaremos.

Mi Rey en su retrete me ha metido, donde juntos los dos nos alegremos [5] :
no habra alli descuido [6], no habra oluido, los tus dulces amores cantaremos ;
en [7] ti se ocuparà todo sentido ;
de ti, por ti, en ti nos gozaremos :
que siendo sin igual tu hermosura,
a ti solo amarà toda dulçura [8].

Morena soy, mas bella en lo escondido,
o hijas [9] de Sion, y muy hermosa :
porque alli [10] en lo interior no ha podido hacerme daño el sol, ni empecer cosa ;
a [11] tiendas de Cedar he parescido, que lo que dentro està es cosa preciosa, velo de Salomon, que dentro encierra la hermosura y belleza de la tierra.

Mi color natural bien blanco ha sido, que aquesta tez morena me causara el sol, que andando al campo me ha herido ;
fuerza de mis hermanos me forzara,
de aquellos que la mi madre ha parido, que unas viñas suyas yo guardara :
guardè sus viñas con mucho cuidado,
y la mi propria viña no he guardado.

Dime, amor de mi alma, do apascientas el tu hermoso ganado y tu manada ?
adonde haces tu[12] siesta, donde asientas ?
donde tienes tu albergue, y tu majada ?
que no es justo, mi esposo, que consientas quentre pastores tantos yo ande errada :
quen tierra[13] do apascientan mil pastores, como podrè yo hallar los mis amores ?

ESPOSO. Si no sabes, bellissima pastora, el valle do apasciento el mi ganado, toma tus cabritos, y a la hora seguiran el camino mas hollado ;
caminando por el, vernas do mora el tu dulce pastor, y desposado :
alli podras[14] pascer los tus cabritos entre los de los otros pastorcitos[15].

A la yegua de mi carro presciada[16]
paresces en el brio, esposa mia, bella, gentil, lozana, y bien tallada,

tu mexilla es de perlas [18] arreada,
y el cuello con collar de pedreria;
zarcillos de oro fino te daremos,
y un esmalte de plata les[19] pondremos.

ESPOSA. Quando[20] estaua el Rey mio en su reposo, mi nardo dio su olor muy mas crescido :
manojuelo de mirra es el mi esposo, por esso entre mis pechos[21] le he metido, racimo de copher[22] muy oloroso quen viñas de Engaddi se ha cogido :
para mi quiero yo los sus olores,
pues se questan en el[23] los mis amores.

ESPOSO. O como eres hermosa, amiga mia !
o como eres muy[24] bella y muy graciosa !
tus ojos de paloma en la alegria.
ESPOSA. O dulce esposo mio, y que no hay cosa que iguale a tu belleza y gallardia;
no hay cosa acà en la tierra ansi[25] olorosa;
nuestro lecho es florido, y la morada de cedro y de cipres està labrada.

II

ESPOSA. Yo soy rosa del campo muy hermosa, y azucena del valle muy preciada.
ESPOSO. Qual entre las espinas es la rosa, tal entre las donzellas es mi amada.

tal es a mi la vista de mi esposo quentre todos los hijos es gracioso.

Debaxo de su sombra he deseado sentarme, y me assente, y ansi he cogido la hermosa y dulce fruta que el[26] me ha dado, la qual por su dulzor bien me ha sabido.
A la casa del vino me ha lleuado,
y el su diuino amor alli he sentido[27] ;
cercadme de manzanas y de olores,
que herida, y muy enferma estoy de amores.

La mano de mi amor izquierda quiero para me reclinar, y esto me plaze :
presto, no se detenga, que me muero,
y con la su derecha que me abraze !

ESPOSO. O hijas de Sion, de aqui os requiero por cabra, y corzo, que en el monte pasce, no desperteis mi amada, que ya duerme,
fasta que ella de suyo se recuerde.

ESPOSA. Voz de mi amado es esta ; vedle, viene[28], los montes y el collado atravesando[29] :
ninguna sierra o monte le detiene ;
las cabras y los corzos semejando, vedle como se allega, y se detiene[30] ;
detras de mi pared està acechando :
no veis como se asoma al agujero[31] ?
ya se quita, ya se pone muy ligero[32].

26. B. que (el) — 27. C. á la celda del vino me ha metido : || yo seguí su vandera sin cuidado || valedme, amor, que me falta el sentido.

28. C. Voz del mi amado; velde, como viene — 29. A. atravancando; C. los montes y collados atrancando — 30. C. velde como ha llegado, y se entretiene — 31. C. á la ventana — 32. A. y se pone muy ligero; C. ya se torna de su gana.

Hablado me ha el[33] mi amado, y mi querido :
« Leuantate del lecho, amiga mia, vente comigo, quel invierno es ido,
y las flores nos muestran ya alegria ;
el campo està muy bello y muy florido,
y el tiempo del[34] podar se descubria ;
voz de la tortolilla ha ya sonado :
despierta con su voz nuestro cuidado.

La higuera muestra ya el fruto sabroso, las viñas que florescen dan su olor :
leuantate, quel tiempo es deleytoso,
y ven, paloma mia, ven, mi amor[35] ;
gozemos deste campo tan hermoso, que en aquellas peñas de mayor altor, en unos agujeros abscondidos haremos[36] nuestro albergue, y nuestros nidos.

Descubreme tu vista amable y bella, muestrame tus facciones tan hermosas, suene tu voz suaue, hermosa estrella. »

ESPOSA. Cazadme, dixe yo, aquellas raposas, las raposas pequeñas, que gran mella hazen en mi viña las rabiosas :
a todas las tomad, hazed que huyan[37],
antes que la mi viña me[38] destruyan.

Mio es el esposo, mio, y muy amado[39],
y yo soy toda suya, y el me quiere[40] ;

33. B. (el) — 34. B. de.
35. B. levantate, paloma mia, y mi amor; C. levántate, paloma, vén, mi amor — 36. B. hallaremos.
37. C. todas las matad, ó haced que huyan — 38. B. (me).
39. B. (mio) y muy amado; C. y mio es el amado — 40. C. yo soy toda suya, que él me requiere.

de aquel, quentre las flores su ganado apascienta, serè mientras viviere.
Quando las sombras huyan[41] por el prado, vendraste a mi, mi amor[42], si te pluguiere, como la cabra, o corzo bien ligero,
saltando por los montes, que te espero.

III

En mi lecho en las noches he buscado al que mi alma adora, y no le he hallado;
tornèle a buscar[43], con mayor cuidado,
y saltando del lecho sospirando, entrè por la ciudad, y he rodeado las plazas y las calles caminando;
de tanto caminar cansada estaua,
mas nunca pude hallar al que buscaua.

Hallaronme las guardas, que rondando andauan la ciudad, la noche escura;
y yo acerquème a ellas preguntando:
« Haveis visto a mi amado por ventura? »
Y desque un poco dellos alejando me voy, hallè el mi amor[44], y mi hermosura:
tuuelo yo abrazado, y bien asido,
y en casa de mi madre lo he metido.

O[45] hijas de Sion, yo os ruego, y pido por la cabra y el ciervo[46] y el venado,

41. C. huyen — 42. C. vernaste, amor, á mí.
43. AB. torné á buscarle.
44. B. (el) mi amor; C. el mi amado.
45. B. (O) — 46. C. corzo.

no hagais bullicio alguno, ni ruido, porque no desperteis mi dulce amado que sobre el lecho mio se ha dormido;
esperad quel despierte de su grado:
juntaos aqui comigo, y velaremos,
y este su sueño dulce guardaremos.

COMPAÑERAS. Quien es esta, que sube del desierto como coluna bella, y muy hermosa, quel humo del encienso ha[47] descubierto, hasta dar en las nubes olorosa?
El cielo de su olor lleno està cierto:
o como es la su vista hermosa cosa[48]!
la mirra, y los perfumes olorosos en ella muestran ser muy mas preciosos.

Cercad bien con los ojos aquel lecho del gran rey Salomon tan adornado;
sesenta fuertes hombres[49] muy de hecho
le tienen todo en torno rodeado, hombres de gran valor y fuerte pecho,
y en armas cada qual bien enseñado:
todos tienen al lado sus espadas, por temor de las noches[50], y empuñadas.

Una morada bella ha edificado para si Salomon de extraña hechura;
el su monte de Libano ha cortado, para de cedro hazer la cobertura;
de plata las colunas ha labrado,
y el techo de oro fino, y la moldura,
y el estrado es[51] de purpura adornado,
y en medio del mi amor està assentado[52].

47. B. (ha) — 48. B. (cosa).
49. B. setenta hombres fuertes — 50. AB. la noche.
51. A. (es) — 52. B. sentado.

ESPOSA. Salid, hijas de Sion, sali a porfia, vereis a Salomon, rey coronado con la corona rica, que en el dia de su gozo zu madre le hauia dado, quando con regozijo y alegria comigo desposò el mi lindo amado :
salid, vereis la cosa mas hermosa quel mundo tiene acà, y mas graciosa.

IV

ESPOSO. O como eres hermosa, dulce amada !
y tus ojos son bellos y graciosos, como de una paloma muy preciada, entre essos tus copetes tan hermosos[53] :
tu cabello paresce una manada de cabras y cabritos, que gozosos del monte Galaad vienen baxando, el pelo todo liso, y relumbrando.

Los tus hermosos dientes parescian un rebaño de ouejas muy preciado, las quales de bañarse[54] ya venian del rio, el vellon viejo trasquilado, tan blancas, tan parejas, que se vian[55]
pasciendo por el campo y por el prado :
esteril entre todas no la hauia,
dos cordericos cada qual trahia.

Hilo de carmesi bello y polido, son los[56] tus labios, y tu hablar gracioso :

53. C. entre esos copetes muy hermosos.
54. AB. lavarse — 55. B. veian.
56. B. (los).

tus mexillas a mi me han parescido un casco de granada muy hermoso :
y aquesse[57] blanco cuello liso y erguido[58], castillo de David fuerte y vistoso :
mil escudos en el estan colgados, las[59] armas de los fuertes, y estimados.

Los tus pechos dos blancos cabritillos parescen, y mellizos, que pasciendo estan entre violetas ternecillos, en medio de las flores reboluiendo[60] :
mientras las sombras de aquellos cerrillos huyen, y el dia viene[61] reluciendo, voy al monte de mirra, y al collado del encienso, a[62] cogerle muy preciado[63].

Del todo eres hermosa, amiga mia,
no tiene falta alguna tu hermosura, del Libano desciende, mi alegria, vente para mì, y essa espesura de Hermon, y de Amanà, que te tenia, dexala de seguir, ques muy obscura[64], donde se crian onzas y leones en las obscuras cueuas y rincones.

El corazon, esposa, me has robado en una sola vez que me miraste :
con el sartal del cuello le has atado ;
quan dulce es el amor con que me amaste !

57. BC. aquel — 58. C. seguido — 59. C. son.
60. C. rebullendo — 61. C., se muestra — 62. B. al — 63. C. de encienso, y cogeré lo mas preciado.
64. BC. vente para mi de aquesa espesura, || si alguna demanda te tenia, || dexalda de seguir, que es muy obscura.

mas sabroso quel vino muy preciado :
o quan suaue olor que derramaste !
panal estan tus labios destilando,
y en leche y miel tu lengua està nadando.

Tu vestido, y arreo tan presciado en su olor al del Libano paresce ;
eres un huerto hermoso, y bien cerrado[65],
que ninguno le daña, ni le empesce ;
fuente sellada, que al que ha gustado[66]
en el tu dulce amor, luego enternesce ;
jardin todo plantado de granados,
de juncia, mirra, y nardos muy presciados, donde tambien el azafran[67] se cria, canela, y cinamomo[68] muy gracioso[69],

y toda suauidad[70] de especeria, linaloe con todo lo oloroso ;
fuente eres de los huertos, alma mia,
pozo de vivas aguas muy sabroso, que del Libano baxan sossegadas,
y en este pozo estan muy reposadas[71].

Sus, vuela[72], cierzo, ea, no parezcas por mi hermoso huerto, que he temor que con tu dura fuerza me le empezcas, lleuandome mis frutos, y mi olor[73] :

65. C. (y) bien cercado — 66. A. qu'él que la ha gustado.

67. B. zafran — 68. BC. tambien el cinamomo — 69. C. muy hermoso — 70. BC. la gran suavidad — 71. C. y en ese pozo están muy congregadas.

72. B. Sus, vuelta, et la note suivante, au bas de la page : « Sus, genero de aspiracion que se usa para alentar, ò mover à otro à egecutar alguna cosa prontamente, ò con vigor ; segun el diccionario de la lengua castellana. Usalo fr. Luis de Leon algunas veces, en la Oda 31. de Oracio Impios parr &c, en el cap. 38 de Job, &c. = Aqui parece Sus vuelta parece [sic] que quiere decir Para cierzo, &c. » ; C. Sus vuelta — 73. C. dañandome mis frutas, y mi flor.

ven, abrego, que ablandes y enternezcas[74]
mis plantas, y derrames[75] el su olor.
ESPOSA. Venga a mi huerto, y coja sus manzanas mi amado, y comeràlas muy tempranas[76].

V[77]

ESPOSO. Vine yo al mi huerto, hermana[78] esposa, y ya cogi mi mirra[79] y mis olores, comi el panal, y la miel[80] sabrosa, bebi mi vino, y leche, y mis licores ;
venid, mis compañeros, que no es cosa que dexeis de gustar tales dulzores :
bebed hasta embriagaros, que es suaue mi vino ; el que mas bebe, mas le sabe[81].

ESPOSA. Yo duermo, al parescer, muy sin cuidado, mas el mi corazon està velando :
la voz de mi querido me ha llamado.
ESPOSO. Abreme, amiga mia, que esperando està la tu paloma[82] este tu amado :
abreme, que està el cielo llouiznando :
mi cabello, mi cabeza està mojada de gotas de la noche, y[83] rociada.

ESPOSA. Todas mis vestiduras me he[84] quitado :
como me vestirè, que temo el frio ?

74. B. que ablandas y enternesces — 75. B. derramas — 76. B. y coxga sus manzanos || mi amado, y comera los muy tempranos.

77. Cette division devrait se trouver entre le 6e et le 7e vers de la strophe précédente — 78. BC. hermosa — 79. C. cogí la mirra mia — 80. C. y la mi miel — 81. C. mi vino ; y al que mas bebe mas sabe.

82. C. está, hermosa paloma — 83. B. (y).

84. B. ha.

y haviendome tambien los pies lauado,
como me ensuciarè yo, amado mio ?
Con su mano mi esposo hauia prouado abrirme la mi puerta con gran brio[85] ;
por entre los resquicios la ha metido,
y en mì el mi corazon se ha estremecido[86].

Leuantème yo a abrirle muy ligera, de mis manos la mirra destilaua, la mirra, que de mis manos cayera, mojò la cerradura y el aldaua :
abrile[87], mas mi amor ya ido era, quel alma, quando abria, me lo daua[88] ;
busquèle, mas hallarle no he podido ;
llamèle, mas jamas[89] me ha respondido.

Hallaronme las guardas, quen lo[90] obscuro de la noche velauan con cuidado :
hirieronme[91] tambien las[92] que en el muro[93]
velauan, y aun el manto me han quitado.
O hijas de Sion, aqui[94] os conjuro, digais, si acaso vieredes mi amado,
quan enferma me tienen sus amores, quan triste, y[95] quan amarga, y[96] con dolores.

COMPAÑERAS[97] Que tal es ese, que tu tanto amaste,
o[98] hermosa sobre todas las mugeres,

85. C. á abrirme la puerta, y con gran brio — 86. AB. el corazon en mi ha estremecido.

87. B. abrila — 88. C. que el alma, quando habló, ya me lo daba — 89. C. léy jamas.

90. B. (lo) — 91. B. y vieronme — 92. AB. los — 93. C. hiriéronme las que tambien el muro — 94. C. de aquì — 95. B. (y) — 96. B. (y).

97. B. Filiæ Hierusalem — 98. C. dí.

aquel por quien ansi nos conjuraste ?
Dinos las señas del, si las supieres, que aquel que con tal pena tu buscaste, hermoso debe ser, pues tu le quieres.

ESPOSA. Mi amado es blanco, hermoso, y colorado :
vandera entre millares ha lleuado.

La su cabeza de oro es acendrado ;
son crespos [1] y muy negros sus cabellos ;
los ojos de paloma ha [2] mi amado [3], grandes, claros, graciosos, y muy bellos,
de paloma que en leche se ha bañado, tan lindos que basta a herir [4] con ellos :
en lo lleno [5] del rostro estan fixados, del todo son hermosos y acabados.

Son como heras [6] de plantas olorosas de confeccion suaue sus mexillas ;
sus labios son violetas muy hermosas, que estilan mirra, y otras marauillas ; rehiletes de oro muy preciosas [7]
sus manos, quando el quiere descubrillas ;
su vientre blanco de marfil labrado,
de zafiros muy ricos adornado.

Colunas [8] son de un marmol bien fundadas en basas [9] de oro fino muy polido, sus piernas, fuertes, recias[10], y agraciadas ;
y el su semblante graue y muy erguido, como plantas de cedro, que plantadas en el Libano estan, me ha[11] parescido ;

1. BC. son finos — 2. A. á — 3. C. de paloma los ojos de mi amado — 4. B. que bastò herir ; C. que me pudo herir — 5. C. llano.
6. B. (heras) — 7. C. rollos de oro con tharsis.
8. B. columna — 9. B. en vaso — 10. B. ricas — 11. B. han.

su paladar manando està dulzura,
y todo èl es deseo, y hermosura.

Tal es el[12] mi querido, tal mi amado, tales son sus riquezas, sus haberes,
por este tal os he yo conjurado, porque en èl solo[13] estan los mis placeres.
COMPAÑERAS[14] Do fue esse[15] amado tuyo tan presciado ?
o[16] hermosa sobre todas las mugeres,
dinos, do fue ? que todas nos iremos juntas contigo, y te le buscaremos.

VI

ESPOSA. Mi amado[17] al huerto suyo ha descendido, a las heras de plantas olorosas :
su ganado en mi huerto le ha metido,
a apascentarlo[18] alli, y coger rosas ;
a solo aquel mi amado[19] he yo querido,
y èl tambien a mi sola[20] entre sus cosas :
el mi querido es solo entre pastores,
quel ganado apascienta entre mil flores[21].

ESPOSO. Como Thirsa, mi amada, eres hermosa, y como Hierusalem polida y bella, como esquadron de gente eres vistosa
y fuerte, mil vanderas hay en ella :
buelue de mi[22] tus ojos, dulce esposa, tu vista me haze fuerza solo en vella :
tu cabello paresce a las manadas de cabras, que de Galaad salen pintadas[23].

12. B. (el) — 13. B. (solo) — 14. B. Filia — 15. B. este — 16. B. (o).
17. C. Mi amor — 18. B. a pascentarlo — 19. C. al solo el mi amado — 20. C. y él á mí sola quiere — 21. C. su ganado apascienta entre las flores.
22. BC. vuelve ya á mí — 23. C. que en Galaad salen peynadas.

Una manada, linda mia, de ouejas, me han tus hermosos dientes parescido, que trasquiladas ya las lanas viejas,
del rio de bañarse han subido,
tan blancas, tan lucientes, tan parejas,
cada qual dos corderos ha parido :
tus mexillas un casco de granada entre essos tus copetes assentada.

Sesenta reynas todas coronadas,
y ochenta concubinas me servian, las doncellas no pueden ser contadas, que numero ni cuento no tenian ;
mas una es mi paloma, y humilladas todas a mi perfecta obedescian :
y unica a su madre aquesta fuera[24],
esta es sola, que otra no pariera.

Las hijas que la vieron, la llamaron la bienaventurada, y la dichosa ;
reynas y concubinas la loaron[25]
entre todas por bella, y graciosa :
todos los que la vieron, se admiraron,
diziendo : « Quien es esta tan hermosa, que como el alba muestra su frescura,
y como luna clara su hermosura ? »

Como el sol entre todas se ha escogido, fuerte como esquadron muy bien armado.
Al huerto del nogal he[26] descendido, por ver si daua el fructo muy[27] presciado,

24. C. única su madre aquesta era.
25. BC. la adoraron.
26. B. ha — 27. B. mas.

mirando si la viña ha florescido,
y el granado me daua el fructo amado.

ESPOSA. No se como me pude ir[28] tan ligera, que mi alma allà en un punto me pusiera.

Carros de Aminadab muy presurosos los mis ligeros pasos parescian, y los que me mirauan deseosos de verme : « O Sunamite, me dezian, buelue, buelue essos ojos tan graciosos,
ten tus ligeros pies[29], que ansi[30] corrian. »

ESPOSA. Dezian[31] : « Sunamita[32], que mirastes, que como vn esquadron os adornastes ? »

VII[33]

ESPOSO[34]. Quan bellos son tus pasos, y el tu andar, los tus graciosos pies, y ese calzado, los muslos una aljorca por collar[35],
de mano de maestro bien labrado :
tu ombligo es una taza circular[36],
llena de un licor dulce muy preciado, monton de trigo es tu[37] vientre hermoso, cercado de violetas, y oloroso.

Tus pechos son[38] belleza y ternura, dos cabritos mellizos y graciosos ;

28. B. no sé como yo pueda ir ; C. no sé como me pude ir yo.
29. C. pasos — 30. B. ten tus ligeros pasos y ansi — 31. C. desciende — 32. B. Sunamite.
33. Cette séparation se trouve à la fin de la strophe, dans A et B — 34. A. Compañeras — 35. C. tus muslos una ajorca, ó un collar — 36. C. taza muy lunar — 37. C. el tu.
38. C. en.

y torre de marfil de gran blancura tu cuello, y los tus ojos tan hermosos estanques de Esebon de agua pura[39], que en puerta Batrabim estan vistosos ;
tu nariz una torre muy preciada, del Libano a Damasco està encarada[40].

Tu cabeza al Carmelo[41], leuantado sobre todos los montes[42], parescia ;
y el[43] tu cabello roxo y encrespado, color de fina purpura tenia :
el Rey en sus regueras[44] està atado, que desasirse de ahi ya no podia :
o quan hermosa eres, y agraciada, amiga, y en deleytes muy presciada !

Una muy bella palma, y muy crescida, paresce tu presencia tan preciada,
de unos racimos dulces muy ceñida, que son tus lindos pechos, desposada.
Dixe : yo subirè en la palma erguida, asirè los racimos de la amada ;
racimos de la vid[45] dulces y hermosos seran tus pechos lindos y graciosos.

Un olor de manzanas parescia el huelgo de tu boca tan graciosa[46], y como el suaue vino bien olia :
tu lindo paladar, o linda esposa,

39. BC. están como de Esebon el agua pura — 40. BC. que del Líbano monte está cerrada.
41. B. camello — 42. B. todos montones — 43. C. es — 44. B. igueras.
45. B. de David.
46. B. gracioso.

qual vino que al amado bien sabia,
y a las derechas era dulce cosa, que despierta los labios ya caidos,
y gobierna la lengua y los sentidos.

ESPOSA. Yo soy enteramente de mi esposo, y el en mi sus deseos ha empleado :
ven, pues, amado dulce, y muy gracioso, salgamos por el campo y por el prado, moremos en las granjas, que es sabroso lugar para gozar muy sin cuidado[47] ;
muy de mañana nos leuantaremos,
y juntos por las viñas nos iremos.

Veremos si la vid ya florescia,
y el granado nos muestra ya sus flores, si el dulce fructo ya se descubria :
alli te darè yo los mis amores, la mandragora[48] alli su olor envia,
y alli las fructas tienen sus dulçores ;
que yo[49] todas las fructas, dulce amado, alla en mi casa[50] te las he guardado.

VIII[51]

ESPOSA. Quien como hermano mio[52] te me diese, que el[53] pecho de mi madre[54] hayas mamado ?
doquiera[55] que yo hallarte pudiese,
mil besos, mil abrazos te habria dado,

47. C. gozar nuestro cuidado.
48. B. la madrugada — 49. C. que ya — 50. C. dentro en mi casa.
51. AB. Capitulo VIII. Petit incarnationem — 52. BC. tuyo — 53. B. qual — 54. B. (madre) — 55. BC. donde quiera.

sin que me despreciase el que me viese, sabiendo que en un vientre hemos andado :
en casa de mi madre te[56] entraria,
y allà[57] tu dulce amor[58] me enseñaria.

Del vino que adobado yo tenia, haria que bebieses, que es preciado,
y el mosto de granadas te daria ;
la su mano siniestra del mi amado baxo la mi cabeza la ponia,
y con la su derecha me ha abrazado.

Esposo[59]. O hijas de Sion, no hagais ruido, porque mi dulce amor[60] està dormido.

Compañeras[61]. Quien es esta, que sube recostada del desierto, y echada la su mano sobre su amado tiene[62], y delicada ?

Esposa. Alli te despertè so aquel[63] manzano, adonde te pario tu madre amada ;
alli sintio el dolor, que no fue vano.

Esposo. Sobre tu corazon me pon por sello, amada, y sobre el brazo, y en tu cuello.

Ansi como la muerte es[64] el amor, duros como el infierno son los[65] zelos, las sus brasas son fuego abrasador, que son brasas[66] de Dios, y de sus cielos ;
muchas aguas no pueden tal[67] ardor apagar[68], ni los rios con sus hielos ;

56. C. se — 57. B. y alli — 58. C. mi dulce amado.
59. Ce mot manque dans AB — 60. C. amado.
61. Ce mot manque dans B — 62. C. tierna — 63. B. alli te desperte sobre el; C. allí desperté sobre el.
64. C. fuerte es — 65. B. tus — 66. C. llamas — 67. BC. tan gran. — 68. C. matarle el que este amor alcanza, ha despreciado quanto haber este mundo le ha enviado[69].

ESPOSA. Pequeña es nuestra hermana, avn[70] no tenia pechos ; mientras le nascen[71], que haremos, quando se hablare della, vida mia ?
ESPOSO. Una pared muy fuerte labraremos, y un palacio de plata yo le haria,
y las puertas de cedro le pondremos ;
y dentro del palacio ella encerrada, estarà muy segura, y muy guardada.

ESPOSA. Yo soy bien fuerte muro, esposo amado, y mis pechos son torre bien fundada.
ESPOSO. Bien segura estarà, puesta a mi lado.
ESPOSA. No hay donde pueda estar mejor guardada ; que luego que a tus ojos he agradado, quedè yo en paz, temida[72] y aceptada[73] ;
y ansi con tal esposo estoy segura,
que no me enojarà de hoy mas criatura.

En Bal-Hamon su gran viña tenia Salomon, entregada a los renteros, cada qual por los fructos que cogia,
de plata le trahia mil dineros ;
mas me rentarà[74] a mi la viña mia, que me la labrarè con mis obreros :
mil dan a Salomon, y ellos ganaban docientos, de los fructos que sacaban[75].

69. C. le haya dado.
70. B. Pequeña es mi hermana aun, que ; C. Pequeña es mi hermana, que aun — 71. C. crescen.
72. B. tenida — 73. C. y acatada.
74. B. rentaria — 75. C. por los frutos que guardaban.

Esposo. Estando tu en el huerto, amada esposa[76], y nuestros compañeros[77] escuchando, haz que oya yo tu voz[78] graciosa, que al tu querido esposo està llamando.
Esposa. Ven presto, amigo mio, que tu esposa te espera, ven corriendo, ven saltando, como cabras, o corzos corredores, sobre los montes altos, y de olores[79].

76. C. hermosa — 77. BC. y nuestras compañeras — 78. C. tu voz dulce y. 79. A et B. Finis hujus operis.

VARIA

Deux poèmes macaroniques.

Les deux petits poèmes macaroniques que l'on trouvera ci-après, et qui, autant que je puis le savoir, sont imprimés maintenant pour la première fois, ont été découverts par moi dans un manuscrit de mélanges, dont l'écriture, française, est de la seconde moitié du XVIIIe siècle. Je n'ai aucune précision relative au nom du macaroniste à qui sont dues ces deux pièces, mais j'ai noté d'étroites similitudes entre la seconde et le De guerra romana d'Antonius de Arena, et je suis porté à considérer le De guerra romana comme un rifacimento amplifié de notre texte. Quant à la première de nos deux macaronées, Sota entreprisa, elle traite le même sujet que Meygra entrepriza Catoliqui Imperatoris quando de anno Domini mille CCCCCXXXVI veniebat per Prouensam, bene corrossatus, impostam prendere Fransam cum villis de Prouensam, propter grossas et menutas gentes reiobire d'Antonius de Arena (1re éd. Avignon, 1537). Là encore il me semble que Meygra entrepriza est un développement de notre Sota entreprisa. Mais je ne suis pas plus attaché qu'il ne convient à cette double hypothèse.

SOTA ENTREPRISA REGIS ESPAGNOLORUM
CONTRA REGEM FRANÇAE FRANCISCUM PRIMUM
PER GENTILHOMINEM GASCONEM

Rex Espagnollus, Carolus de nomine quintus, Imperatoris nomen habere volens,
Grandem entreprisam contra nos fecerat unam,
Sotam, lourdaudam, ridiculam, atque betam.
Nos, et infantes nostros sic prendere pensans,
Et totum paysum saccagiare putans.
Grandes allarmas fecit blessansque tuansque,
O grandomagium, foemina quoeque criat !

Nostros debattos audivit Papa dolenter, Francos et Francas qui bene semper amat :
C'est pourquoi voluit solidam componere pacem,
Commoda quod secum pax bona multa ferat.
Ast imperator renuit componere pacem,
Cum grandi furiâ talia verba refert :
« Pro quo me prenant ? De me se Francia moccat, Pensando semper me reperire bonum,
Illi per guerram certè rabatabo caquetum ;
Nam parlat de me per nimis illa malè.
An non in libris de me prescripta trovavi,
Quod princeps solus totius orbis ero ?
Sum dominus mundi, me me decet ista potestas ;
Atque meis regitur legibus omnis homo.
Parcere subjectis, gentes punire superbas
Jam solitus, reges atque tuare malos. »
Sic parlans pestat, jurat, sacrat, atque grimassat,
Atque jouat rollum vite criando suum.
De libris grossis multum jasando bavardat,
Francos meprisans, et reputando nihil.
Usque ad Parisium modo se marchare putabat,
Hanc villam credens prendere posse d'abord.
A ses gendarmos promittens grande butinum,
Amplas seignorias, magnificasque domos ;
Deliberatus erat regis derobare coronam,
Et supra testam ponere deinde suam.
Pro certo Françam totam pillare volebat ;
Atque à son avisum jam retinebat eam.
Illam cepisset, si nulla repulsa fuisset ;
Empechamentum sed reculavit eum.
Et si marchasset, certè illi guerra fuisset
Terribilis ; non hinc sortitus esset ovans.
Solus Parisius centum regimenta levaret ;
Prendere non posset, credo, diablus eum.
Soli scholerii facerent galopare retrorsum
Espaniam totam cum feritate suâ.

Quid de harangeriis ? Dicam ut semper bene pugnant ?
De très grands copos quoeque dedisset ei.
Huic Savoyardi potuissent rumpere brassos, Costas et jambas, occiput atque caput.
Le Roi de França, semper bonitate repletus, Tantas sotisias impediare volens,
Ambassadores misit proponere pacem ;
Talibus et verbis dicere jussit eos :
« Rex noster dominus didicit tu sumere guerram ;
Et tamen ignorat quâ ratione facis.
Hic pro pace bonâ voluit donare sororem,
Et tibi amicitiae pignora mille dedit.
Quare huic grabugium rursus donare laboras ?
Est-ne illud justi facta, bonique viri ? »
Tunc rex Espagnolus magnam se misit in iram, Et grossos coepit dicere rite motos.
Echauffatus erat magnas faciendo menassas ;
Illi sudando testa jetabat aquam.
Et jurans plus quam paganus, talia dixit :
« Cervellam fecit perdere França meam.
Ista mihi solvet tanto pro crimine poenas
Verè terribiles : vel renegabo Deum.
Petra super petram plus non erit ulla relicta,
Nostram juro fidem : Gallia tota ruet,
Et citò quisque mihi confes, praeparet arma :
Partemus ; discant vivere Franciadae. »
Dum sic parlabat valdè branlando la testam, Ambassadores se retirare petunt.
Non hi credebant quod vera sit ille locutus :
Per forfanteriam talia dicta putant.
Dum tranquillè abeunt, dum nil dubitantque tementque
(Factum ô perfidiae, Barbariaeque simul !)
Rex Espagnollus, funestâ fraude dolosus, Praeparat armatos, et bene vita, suos.

Et subito in França sicuti fulgur adest.
Omnia brulabat, gatabat bleda, farinas,
Gerbas et paleas, foenaque cuncta bona.
Laissabatque nihil miseris pro vivere gentis;
Frangebat fournos, cuncta molina simul.
Prenabat porcos, asinos, vaccasque bovesque.
Heu ! qualis rabies, et furor, atque dolor !
Per terras etiam jettabat dulcia vina,
Au lieu d'en bibere, et pocula plena dare.
Jam sibi semblabat, quod mundum vicerat omnem;
Nullum credebat consimilem esse sibi.
Ejus soldati crudelia facta sequuntur;
Ipse diablus eos non satiare potest.
Assassinant populum miserè, forçantque puellas,
Omne scelus faciunt meprisiando Deum.
Pillant relliquias, calices, et vascula sacra,
Tassas argenti, corpora sancta quoque.
Ecce autem subito rex Francus vadit in hostes;
Et properat troupas ducere vite suas.
Clamabant omnes : « O vivat Francia, vivat ! »
Laetitia campus totus alegrus erat.
Omnes et promptam cupiunt donare bataillam;
Coragium cunctos excitat, urget, agit.
Tunc imperator, cernendo talia, dixit :
« Linquere conquestas nos modo França jubet,
Contra me miserum grandis disgracia venit;
Nescio quid faciam, deshonoratus ero.
Est multo melius me non donare bataillam :
In gran-dangeria la mea vita foret. »
Dum sic palabrat, subito rex advenit; hostes
Attaquat extemplo, massacrat, atque tuat.
Rex fugit Espagnollus; fecit bene : namque citatim
Si non fugisset, certè prehensus erat.
Franci clamabant : « Utinam tibi rumpere collum Currendo possis ! Nunc fuge, pulsus abi.
Venisti nostros surprendere turpiter agros,
Prendere oves, asinos, et pecus omne simul.

Non tamen ausisti nobis donare bataillam :
Segnis es, et vecors, atque coardus homo.
Dicere non poteris quod sit victoria tecum;
Nam cum paysanis sola batailla fuit. »
Omnes tunc villae per quas passabat eundo
Se defendebant, hunc reputando nihil.
Quod cum vidisset, soldatis talia dixit :
« In manibus vestris nunc mea vita manet.
Bagagium omne mihi la Francia perdere fecit;
Nullumque argentum la mea bursa tenet.
Est mea pour longum tempus destructa potestas;
Et nisi spes veniat, sum quasi mortus homo.
Ad l'hospitalium certè me França boutabit.
Nescio quid faciam; consiliate mihi.
Certè pensabam praesto deprendere Françam;
Sed rex de Françâ me reculare facit.
Nam bene cherchabat personam prendere nostram,
Et metui, juro, pertimuique mihi.
Et vobis juro sanctos, omnes quoque sanctas,
Nunc quoque cuncta mihi congelat ossa pavor.
Usque ad l'Espagnam citò retournemus, amici;
Contra Franciadas nil mihi guerra valet.
Nunquam visa fuit tantum mauvaisa canailla;
Ipse etiam diablus non superaret eos. »

DE GUERRA
QUAM ESPAGNOLI FECERUNT IN ITALIA ANNO 1527.

Loquitur Francus miles ad amicum.

Terriblem contare tibi, carissime, guerram
Entrepreno, guerram très epouvantabilem;
De quâ pensabam non echappare; tot atque
Tantis dangeriis ipse fui expositus.

Tempore quo Romae voluerunt prendere villàm Isti Espagnolli, sub duce Borbonio, Durus in Italiâ portabam soldatus arma.
Lautrecus noster tunc generalis erat,
Qui simul ac vidit Romae papaeque periclum,
Nos cito ad arma vocans, talia verba dedit :
« Camaradi, Francis bravibus defendere papam Convenit : ergo illi prompte feramus opem »
Dixerat ; extemplo ad blocata moenia villae
Currimus, unde hostes nos removere volunt.
Nos contra intramus sine poenâ ; Romaque post nos
Fermavit portas, et bene vita, suas.
Haud mora ! confestim artilleria nostra tiravit :
Pou, pou, pou, grandis certe vacarmus erat.
In terram multos homines tombare videbam;
Plures centenas ipse tuavi ego [1].
Nunquam mancabam multos de morte ferire [2] :
Corporibus mortis terra cuberta fuit [3].
Un jour de Româ multi sortivimus : hostes
In primâ furiâ fecimus effugere.
Fortiter et brassos, jambasque brisavimus illis;
Copos de pedibus mille dabamus eis [4].
Ultra le Tibrum longè chassavimus illos [5] ;
Ivisse ad diablum Roma putabat eos [6].
Sed, maledicta dies ! dum credimus omnia tuta [7],
Dum gaudemus adhuc, dumque bene bibimus,

1. Cf. Ant. de Arena, De guerra romana :
Mille carentenas ipse tuavit ego.
2. Id. Nunquam mancabat multos de morte ferire.
3. Id. Corporibus mortis terra cuberta fuit.
4. Id. Fortiter et testam, musumque macavimus illis,
Copos de pedibus mille dabamus eis.
5. Id. Ultrà lo Timbrum valde chaplavimus illos.
6. Id. Atque recessisse Roma putabat eos.
7. Id. O ! maledicta dies, dum se fortuna reversat...

Intrarunt Romam per scalas nocte sequenti, Nolentes ullis parcere certe viris.
Nam chanoinos, evequos, cardinalesque tuabant [1];
Cherchabantque tibi, papa, copare gulam [2].
Ast ego, cum vidi tercentum mille matinos
Ventrem qui poterant ense forare mihi,
Protinus ad Castrum Saint-Angi me retiravi [3] :
Illic in tuto la mea vita fuit.
Verum crede mihi : spectacula tristia vidi;
Car nunquam ante fuit tristius excidium,
Barbara turba domos pillat, saccajat eglisas.
..... [4]
Ecrasat pueros, forçat violatque puellas,
Massacrat infantes, excoriatque senes.
Tales paillardi deberent esse brulati,
Aut in potença morte perire malâ.
Nil illis troppo calidum froedumve diablis;
Omnia diripiunt, omnia dilapidant;
Brochas, lichefritas, chaudrones, potaque pissos,
Platos et grillos, et resacalda volant.
Patenas rapiunt, calices, crossasque mitrasque,
Ornamenta, cruces, et sacra vasa simul.
Avulsa e ruptis sanctorum corpora chassis
Aut pedibus calcant, aut ea dant canibus.
Testiculos sacros pretris monachisque revellunt,
De quibus andouillas et bodinos faciunt [5].

1. Id. Intrarunt Romam per forsan mille ribaldi, Parcere qui paucis tunc voluêre viris.
(Crede), capellanos, monachos, nonnasque necabant...
2. Id. Nostram quœrentes, ense copare gulam.
3. Id. Quare ad Castellum Sant-angi me retiravi.
4. Manque dans le ms.
5. Cf. dans un poème macaronique sur la guerre des Huguenots, dont je n'ai pas le texte complet :

Auriculas sacras pretris monachisque revellunt,
Deque illis faciunt andouillas atque bodinos,
Aut cervellassos pratico de more Milani.

Non pluris faciunt pantouflam sacro-sanctam,
Quam si de mon pied prisca savata foret.
Quin et basilicam Sancti Petri, atque capellam Audent pontificis vertere in ecuriam.
Dein nostrum veniunt castrum attaquare ribaldi.
O de morte mihi quanta paôra fuit!
Quid facerem? Grossam trouvans in pariete cordam,
Per muros tacitus, nocte sequente, fluo.
Et trans sopitos me glisso incognitus hostes;
Servavi promptâ sic mea membra fugâ.
In patriam propero caram bene vita redire,
Ne desertor ego mitterer ad galeras.
Ibam per mesonas in demandando ma vitam;
Ut lupus in campis, sic afamatus eram[1].
Attamen affairas faciebam non male; jamque
Implebat loculos parva moneta meos;
Cum me per montes detroussavere latrones,
Tunc sans argento la mea bursa fuit,
Et non audebam de toto dicere motum,
Quamvis hi copos tunc mihi mille darent.
Tum nemo voluit me prendere nocte sequenti,
Et somnum in campis sumere força fuit.
O, mater Christi! totâ sic nocte criabam,
Frigore ego rigido mane gelatus eram![2]
Jurabam semper: « Nunquam me guerra tenebit, Echappare semel si mea vita potest. »[3]
Sed quam foiblis homo est! Post menses quatuor aut tres Me debauchavi; rursus et arma tuli.
Ergo ultra montes iterum marchavimus omnes;
Ipse fierus ego, namque dragonus eram.

1. Cf. De guerra romana :
Ut lupus in campis tunc affamatus eram.
2. Id. Oy! mater de Christo, omni la nocte criabam, Frigore de grando mane gelatus eram.
3. Id. Jurabam semper, nunquam me guerra tenebit, Escapare semel si mea vita potest.

Urbes Italiae primas gagnamus, et inde Passantes, Milanum prendere noluimus.
Prendere maluimus Genuam, quae livrere claves
Se depechat, dicens : « Francia, parce mihi » [1].
Restabat Naplus : guerram portavimus illuc.
Sed quae nos pestis te prope, Naple, manet.
Vix arrivati, jam coepimus esse maladi;
Nullus gendarmus tunc bene sanus erat.
Empoignabat enim nos omnes pessima febris,
Quae mauvaisa magis quàm mala pestis erat. [2]
Chancrosos homines plures hinc inde videbam,
Quos obligabat soepe criare dolor.
Oy, oy, o venter, clunesque caputque, criabant [3]
Omnes, quos dirè grossa verola vorat [4];
Quos mala goutta necat, scabies quos aspera ronjat,
Quos chaudus misere pissius excruciat.
Gagnavissemus de Naplo tunc, puto, villam;
Sed totus campus forte maladus erat [5].
Ipsum etiam febris generalem grossa tuavit;
Domagium nobis mors sua grande fuit.
Bagagium nostrum totum perdivimus illic;
Nescit quid faciat, credo, maladus homo.

1. Id. Italiam totam præsto gagnavimus inde, Præter Milanum, non voluimus eum.
Genua nostra fuit, claves portavit et ante,
Clamando fortè, Francia parce mihi.

2. Id. Incontinenti post cœpimus esse maladi, Ullus gendarma non benè sanus erat.
Impognabat ibi nos omnes pessima febris,
Quæ plus malvaisa quàm mala pestis erat.

3. Id. Chancrosos homines, plures garsasque videbam,
Las gouttas faciunt sœpe criare viros.
Oy, ventres plagos, o ! feges, o ! mala goutta...

4. Id. Per totum mundum grossa verola vogat !

5. Id. Gagnavissimus de Naplo tunc puto villam,
Sed totus campus forte maladus erat.

Fecimus et multum de rechappare la vitam;
In gran-dangerio la mea certè fuit [1].

Sed volo tam tristem demum finire recitum :
Namque mihi posthac rumpere nolo caput,
Et plus mortales nolo describere guerras,
Id mihi tristitiam tradere namque solet.
Jamque volo donare mihi du tempore grasso;
Vivere nos multum gaïa vita facit.
Denique festivas juvenum cantabo choroeas;
Cantabit lepidos Musula nostra sales.

Quelques réminiscences dans Espronceda.

Dans El Estudiante de Salamanca, le début de la Parte Segunda contient un vers identique à un vers de Rosana en los fuegos de Meléndez Valdés ; peut-être aussi quelque autre souvenir.

Espronceda	Meléndez Valdés
Está la noche serena,	.....
de luceros coronada,	Cual absorto la contempla
terso el azul de los cielos	y á la aurora la compara
como trasparente gasa.	cuando más alegre sale
Melancólica la luna	y el cielo de su albor baña ;
va trasmontando la espalda	cual al fresco y verde aliso
del otero : su alba frente	que crece al margen del agua,
tímida apenas levanta,	cuando más pomposo en hojas
y el horizonte ilumina,	en su cristal se retrata ;
pura virgen solitaria,	cual á la luna, si muestra
y en su blanca luz süave	llena su esfera de plata,
el cielo y la tierra baña.	y asoma por collados
Deslízase el arroyuelo,	de luceros coronada.
fúlgida cinta de plata,	.....
al resplandor de la luna, entre franjas de esmeralda.

1. Ces cinq vers se trouvent presque textuellement dans De guerra romana.

Trente-six vers de la pièce A una estrella ont la même métrique que les Coplas de Jorge Manrique ; les douze premiers semblent un écho lointain de certains passages des strophes immortelles.

A UNA ESTRELLA	COPLAS
Tantas dulces alegrias,	.....
Tantos mágicos ensueños	Pues se va la vida apriesa
¿ Donde fueron ?	Como sueño ;
Tan alegres fantasias,	Y los deleites de acá
Deleites tan halagüeños,	Son en que nos deleitamos
¿ Qué se hicieron ?	Temporales.
Huyeron con mi ilusion	.....
Para nunca más tornar,	¿ Qué se hicieron las damas,
Y pasaron,	Sus tocados, sus vestidos,
Y sólo en mi corazon	Sus olores ?
Recuerdos, llanto y pesar	¿ Qué se hicieron las llamas
¡ Ay ! dexaron.	De los fuegos encendidos
.....	De amadores ?

Le début de l'élégie A la Patria

Cuan solitaria la nacion que un dia
poblára inmensa gente !
La nacion cuyo imperio se extendia del Ocaso al Oriente !

rappelle le début de la pièce de Quintana A España, despues de la revolucion de Marzo :

Qué era, decidme, la nacion que un dia
reina del mundo proclamó el destino, la que á todas las zonas extendia
su cetro de oro y su blason divino ?

Le premier vers de la 38e strophe du Canto á Teresa

Y alegre, audaz, ansioso, enamorado

n'est pas sans analogie avec le premier vers de l'anonyme Cancion a una mudanza :

Ufano, alegre, altivo, enamorado.

Et le dernier vers de ce même Canto á Teresa, l'impérissable

Que haya un cadáver mas ¿ qué importa al mundo ?

exprime une pensée que l'on trouve quelques années auparavant (avril 1829) chez Victor Hugo [1] :

Tous ces jours passeront ; ils passeront en foule
Sur la face des mers, sur la face des monts,
Sur les fleuves d'argent, sur les forêts où roule
Comme un hymne confus des morts que nous aimons.

Et la face des eaux, et le front des montagnes,
Ridés et non vieillis, et les bois toujours verts
S'iront rajeunissant ; le fleuve des campagnes
Prendra sans cesse aux monts le flot qu'il donne aux mers.

Mais moi, sous chaque jour courbant plus bas ma tête,
Je passe, et, refroidi sous ce soleil joyeux,
Je m'en irai bientôt, au milieu de la fête,
Sans que rien manque au monde immense et radieux.

COMPTES RENDUS

Vicente Lampérez y Romea. — Historia de la arquitectura cristiana española en la edad media. Tomo II. Arquitectura ojival ó gótica. Madrid, 1909, in-4° 670, pp. 625 planos, fotografías, mapas y dibujos y 12 fototipias.

D. Vicente Lampérez y Romea a appliqué à l'étude du style gothique en Espagne toute la science et toute la méthode qui lui avaient permis dans un précédent volume de tracer un tableau si magistral de l'architecture romane espagnole, et son nouvel ouvrage l'emporte peut-être encore sur le premier, parce que l'Espagne s'est assurément montrée plus originale dans son interprétation du gothique qu'elle ne l'avait fait dans sa compréhension du roman.

M. L. ne s'attache pas à la question d'origine du gothique et peut-être y a-t-il là une petite réticence ; puisqu'il avoue très franchement que le gothique est venu de France, il eût bien pu reconnaître du même coup qu'il y est né. On ne sait pas encore de science absolument certaine s'il naquit en Normandie ou dans l'Ile-de-France, mais son origine française peut être considérée aujourd'hui comme incontestable ; M. L. le reconnaît d'ailleurs incidemment un peu plus loin (p. 16).

L'élément principal et tout à fait prépondérant du nouveau style c'est l'arc diagonal jeté en travers d'une nef, l'arc ogif ou ogive, la voûte sur croisée d'ogives ; procédé timide qui permit les plus grandes hardiesses, artifice de construction qui révolutionna l'art de bâtir ; cintrage permanent, à l'aide duquel les voûtes purent monter et s'élargir au gré de l'architecte le plus fantaisiste.

L'adoption de l'arc en tiers-point contribua à l'assouplissement du nouveau style et lui donna son pittoresque.

L'arc-boutant substitua à l'équilibre statique des anciens édifices, l'équilibre dynamique et vivant des poussées intérieures contrebutées par dehors.

L'ornementation végétale et l'immense développement pris par la sculpture achevèrent de donner aux monuments gothiques leur physionomie propre, et fit de l'art ogival « une des plus étonnantes conquêtes de l'esprit humain » (p. 8).

C'est vers la fin du XIIe siècle que l'ogive pénètre en Espagne. Le premier exemple daté est fourni par le portail de la Gloire à l'Église de Saint-Jacques de Compostelle (1168-88). L'Espagne a quelques églises de pur style français, mais bientôt le tempérament national s'éveille et modifie profondément dans le sens de la simplification l'art compliqué et hardi reçu de l'étranger. Le gothique espagnol commence sa glorieuse et longue carrière, qui se prolongera bien au-delà du XVIe siècle et dont M. L. recule très justement les limites jusqu'au règne de Charles III.

Il adopte la division traditionnelle en trois périodes ; gothique de transition, gothique à son apogée, gothique de décadence.

I. — Les éléments de l'architecture gothique.

M. L. commence par étudier séparément tous les éléments des constructions ogivales, puis dans une seconde partie, nous offre une série de très intéressantes monographies sur les édifices les plus intéressants de chaque région. Nous suivrons son plan, mais nous changerons quelque peu l'ordre dans lequel il présente les détails de structure, qui ne nous paraît pas d'une irréprochable logique.

1° Les ensembles et les plans. — La plupart des églises ogivales espagnoles sont orientées de l'Est à l'Ouest. Leurs plans offrent de grandes variétés, qui peuvent se ramener à trois types principaux : églises avec déambulatoire — sans déambulatoire — de plan exceptionnel.

Les églises sans déambulatoire sont à une ou plusieurs nefs. Les églises à une seule nef terminée par une abside comprennent un très grand nombre d'églises de campagne, répandues par toute l'Espagne. En Catalogne, des chapelles latérales ont été souvent ouvertes entre les contreforts — et l'on a alors des églises absolument semblables aux églises gothiques du midi de la France (Montferrand, les Carmes de Clermont, Sainte-Cécile d'Alby, Saint-Bertrand de Comminges, Saint-Vincent de Carcassonne). — L'Église Sainte-Marie-du-Pin de Barcelone en est un type achevé et excellent. Par une exception notable, la cathédrale de Coria n'a pas d'abside, et se termine par un mur droit, mais peut-être n'a-t-elle pas été achevée comme le comportait le plan primitif.

L'Espagne connaît quelques exemplaires des églises à deux nefs chères aux Dominicains (les Jacobins de Toulouse). M. L. cite l'église d'Udalla, celle de Secadura et l'église aujourd'hui détruite de N. D. de l'Espérance à Vich.

Les églises à trois nefs, sans transept et sans déambulatoire, sont très nombreuses et et se terminent par une ou trois absides. Quelquefois le transept est indiqué par une travée plus large que les autres.

Quand l'église à trois nefs possède un véritable transept, il est généralement peu prononcé; à Oviedo et à Lérida, au contraire, il a pris un développement considérable.

Santa Maria de Laredo (Santander) a quatre nefs.

La cathédrale de Saragosse en a cinq et trois absides, mais elle n'eut longtemps que trois nefs et a été bâtie sur les fondations d'une église romane.

La grande famille des églises à déambulatoire compte en Espagne de notables spécimens ; mais le coût énorme de ces immenses constructions en a rendu l'emploi relativement rare. Seize cathédrales ont adopté ce plan, dix-sept autres n'ont pas de déambulatoire. Les églises cisterciennes à déambulatoire sont l'exception, les églises des franciscains, des dominicains et des chartreux n'en ont pas ; il en est de même, presque toujours, des collégiales.

Une église à déambulatoire n'a qu'une nef : c'est la cathédrale de Girone, commencée sur le plan à trois nefs et terminée par un vaisseau unique de la largeur des trois anciennes nefs.

D'autres églises sont à trois nefs avec ou sans transept. Le transept n'est parfois visible qu'en élévation, parfois il s'accuse de façon très sensible au dehors. A Poblet, il n'a qu'une seule nef ; à León il en a trois. Le plan des absides est circulaire avec chapelles de même forme à Gradefes, polygonal avec chapelles polygonales à Palencia. Le déambulatoire est double, sans chapelles rayonnantes à Cuenca ; double avec chapelles prises dans l'épaisseur du mur à Avila ; double avec chapelles rayonnantes à Tolède. La cathédrale de Séville, la cathédrale neuve de Salamanque se terminent par un chevet rectangulaire, comme la cathédrale française de Laon [1], mais le chevet est doublé d'un collatéral, comme dans les églises anglaises de Lincoln et de Salisbury. Le chevet droit paraît à M. L. une simplification économique du plan, appliquée aux grands édifices que l'architecte a désespéré de pouvoir terminer autrement.

L'Espagne possède quelques chapelles circulaires (la Barbazana à la cathédrale de Pampelune), ou polygonales (la chapelle du Connétable à Burgos). Le plan à double transept est aussi rare qu'en France. M. L. n'en cite qu'un seul exemple : la cathédrale de Palencia, où le second transept avorté est dû à un remaniement comme le transept des Marmousets, ajouté au XVe siècle à l'Église de Saint-Quentin.

2° La Structure. — L'art gothique étant déjà arrivé en France à un grand développement quand il pénétra en Espagne, nous ne trouvons pas dans ce pays les tâtonnements que nous révèlent un si grand nonbre d'églises fran-

1. C'est par erreur que M. L. indique la cathédrale de Noyon comme église à chevet rectangulaire. La cathédrale de Noyon possède au contraire trois absides. — Il n'est peut-être pas très exact de faire de l'église à chevet droit un modèle britannique. La cathédrale de Dol et celle de Poitiers sont bâties sur ce modèle. L'église Saint-Julien de Tours est aussi à chevet droit.

çaises de transition, mais la hardiesse des maîtres d'Amiens et de Beauvais a trouvé peu d'imitateurs en Espagne. Les maîtres espagnols ont préféré d'instinct le contrefort à l'arc-boutant. Le gothique espagnol est donc un gothique assagi, ramené bon gré mal gré aux traditions romanes et par delà les traditions romanes, à la tradition antique.

Les églises à une seule nef sont souvent couvertes en charpentes, reposant sur des arbalétriers à tirants et à poinçons, ou sur des arcs doubleaux.

Dans l'école catalane et valencienne, les contreforts sont intérieurs (San Felix de Jdtiva, le Carmen de Perelada) ou semi-intérieurs avec chapelles latérales au rez-de-chaussée (Santa Agueda de Barcelone).

Les églises à une seule nef sont aussi voûtées en croisées d'ogives avec contreforts intérieurs (San Miguel de Almazan), ou semi-intérieurs, à la mode languedocienne (N. S. del Pino à Barcelone, Santos Juanes à Valence, San Francisco de Palma, etc.).

Les églises à trois nefs couvertes en charpente n'ont besoin que de légers contreforts pour résister à la poussée des doubleaux. La construction des voûtes complique le problème. A Poblet, la voûte centrale est encore en berceau, mais les basses nefs sont déjà voûtées en croisées d'ogives. A Tarragone, les trois nefs sont de structure ogivale et l'ensemble se maintient par la solidité des piliers massifs et des contreforts extérieurs. A la cathédrale de Barcelone, les contreforts sont intérieurs; l'architecte applique à une église à trois nefs le système languedocien, excellent pour les églises à une nef, mais il est obligé de laisser à sa nef principale une élévation peu différente de celle des nefs secondaires, et ne sait comment l'éclairer. A Sainte-Marie-de-la-Mer, de Barcelone, l'éclairage est meilleur parce que les contreforts ne sont plus que semi-intérieurs ; les basses nefs ont de larges fenêtres et la nef principale s'en trouve elle-même illuminée, mais elle reste relativement basse ; elle n'ose monter. Pour exhausser la nef centrale, il faut, de toute nécessité, adopter le système français, et l'emploi de l'arc-boutant est délicat et plein de périls. Les maîtres-d'œuvre espagnols s'en sont toujours défiés. Ils ont parfois multiplié sans utilité les arcs-boutants (Tolède), ou les ont faits trop massifs (Valence, Tortose), ou trop légers (Avila, Lequeitio). Dans la seule église construite entièrement à la mode française (cathédrale de León) la poussée des voûtes des basses nefs a bouclé tous les piliers, jusqu'au point de menacer la sécurité de l'édifice [1].

1. Cet effet de la poussée des voûtes latérales sur les piliers de la nef majeure a été signalé bien des fois, et constitue l'un des reproches les plus fondés en apparence que l'on puisse adresser à l'art gothique, mais des études très sérieuses faites sur ce point par un archéologue américain, M. Goodyear, réduisent à néant l'accusation d'imprudence adressée à nos vieux maîtres du

A Vitoria, l'architecte épouvanté a jeté en travers des nefs de véritables arches de pont, destinées à étrésillonner les piliers, qu'il tremblait de voir se déverser à l'intérieur.

Les églises à arcs-boutants n'ont généralement pas de triforium, le climat d'Espagne permettant l'établissement de terrasses au-dessus des basses-nefs (cathédrale de Pampelune, collégiale de Manresa [1]).

Comme église à arcs-boutants et à triforium, M. L. cite les cathédrales de Burgos et de Palencia et l'église Santa Maria de Castro Urdiales. Ces édifices du XIIIe siècle appartiennent cependant à un gothique robuste, déjà suranné en France à cette époque. La nef de la cathédrale de Cuenca offre même des voûtes sexpartites, comme Notre-Dame de Paris et Saint-Étienne de Sens. La cathédrale de León présente, au contraire, toute la légèreté d'une église de l'Ile-de-France, mais c'est un modèle unique en Espagne. Les architectes espagnols eurent toujours une préférence marquée pour les nefs de même hauteur (Sta Ana de Barcelone) ou les nefs en échelons s'épaulant les unes les autres (cathédrale de Séville) ; l'application des arcs-boutants aux églises ainsi construites dénote une connaissance médiocre des conditions techniques de l'arc-boutant et peu de confiance dans la valeur de cet expédient.

La construction du sanctuaire a donné lieu en Espagne aux dispositions les plus singulières et les plus variées. Girone possède un chevet avec déambulatoire au bout de sa nef unique. A Avila, le chœur de la cathédrale, son double déambulatoire et ses chapelles forment une tour semi-circulaire faisant saillie sur la ligne des remparts. A Santoyo (Palencia), le sanctuaire prend à lui seul la largeur des trois nefs. La cathédrale de León a cinq chapelles rayonnantes, celle de Girone en a 7, celle de Barcelone en a 9, celle de Valence en a moyen-âge. — A la cathédrale de Reims, les piliers sont profilés suivant la verticale jusqu'aux chapiteaux ; à partir de ceux-ci, les piliers et toutes les surfaces s'inclinent vers le dehors, en ligne droite, jusqu'à la naissance des voûtes de la grande nef. — A l'église Saint-Loup de Châlons, les hors-plomb commencent au pavement et continuent en ligne droite, en contre-sens de la poussée, pouvant provenir des collatéraux. — M. Goodyear pense que les deux tiers au moins des grandes églises gothiques du nord de la France présentent les mêmes déformations, et il les croit intentionnelles. C'est aussi l'avis de M. Margotin, architecte de la cathédrale de Reims, de M. Aubertin, architecte de Saint-Loup-de Châlons, et de M. Choisy. — Cf. Revue de l'Art chrétien. — Raffinements architecturaux par M. V. H. Goodyear. Juillet 1909.

1. Malgré la différence de climat, les architectes du Nord de la France n'ont pas hésité à ajourer leurs triforiums, ce qui revient pratiquement à les supprimer.

10. L'abside de la cathédrale de Pampelune est à quatre pans, auxquels correspondent quatre chapelles larges et profondes, qui se confondent presque avec le déambulatoire [1]. A Tortose, les chapelles de l'abside sont séparées les unes des autres par des arcatures à meneaux, d'un très bel effet [2].

Le transept n'est pas toujours accusé sur le plan de l'édifice, ni même en élévation. On se contente souvent de l'indiquer par une disposition ou une complication particulière de la voûte ou de la charpente. Là où il existe véritablement, il est souvent recouvert d'une simple croisée d'ogives [3] (cathédrale de León). Ailleurs, la coupole romane persiste, une tour s'élève à la croisée des nefs. Séville n'a qu'une lanterne peu élevée, Valence a une belle tour octogone, percée de fenêtres à meneaux, Burgos a vu s'élever à la Renaissance sa prodigieuse lanterne, merveille de richesse et de magnificence, sans analogue en Espagne, et qui rappelle d'une façon si singulière et si frappante la lanterne de notre cathédrale de Coutances. Les églises terminées à la fin de la Renaissance subissent l'influence italienne et se couronnent d'une coupole sur tambour (cathédrales de Ségovie et de Salamanque).

3° Les éléments de construction.

a) Fondations. — On a utilisé les fondations anciennes partout où on les a trouvées (cathédrale de Tarragone). Là où les fondations ont été bien faites, un mur continu, en excellente maçonnerie de moellon, relie tous les piliers de la nef et du chœur (cathédrale de Burgos). Là où l'on a voulu hâter la construction (cathédrale de León) chaque pilier a son massif de fondation à part.

b) Murs. — La construction gothique est soignée; les pierres sont bien dressées, bien layées, et là où la pierre est à bon compte, les assises sont régulières et toutes de même hauteur (0 m 42 à Burgos). L'appareil est plutôt petit, mais très régulier, les joints étant toujours alternés à chaque rang. Lorsque le mur doit présenter une certaine élasticité, chaque pierre est séparée de la suivante par un épais lit de ciment (parfois d'un centimètre). Si le mur

1. Ces absides à quatre pans, qui arrêtent le regard sur un pilier d'angle, font en général assez mauvais effet. L'architecte qui a élevé au XVIe siècle le chœur de l'église Saint-Pierre de Caen en a tiré au contraire fort bon parti et a fait rayonner cinq chapelles autour de son sanctuaire.

2. Nous en connaissons d'analogues dans les chapelles de la nef à la cathédrale de Coutances; nous ne savons s'il en existe des exemples dans les chapelles rayonnantes de nos églises françaises. A Saint-Étienne de Caen, les chapelles rayonnantes prennent jour les unes sur les autres par des ouvertures sans remplages.

3. Cathédrale de Dol. Déambulatoire de Saint-Étienne de Caen, abside de la cathédrale du Mans.

doit au contraire rester inébranlable, les pierres se rapprochent et les joints deviennent presque imperceptibles.

Les pays pauvres usent encore de murs en moëllons. Dans certaines contrées la brique reste en faveur. Toujours, le mur gothique reste monochrome; plus de zones alternées de matériaux de couleurs différentes. Quelques édifices ont gardé des murs à arcatures comme dans la période romane.

Les murs et les piliers épais ont leur surface extérieure en pierre de taille avec remplissage de moëllon. A León, les piles et les murailles ont gardé toute la solidité des premiers jours. A Séville, le tremblement de terre de 1888 a montré les piles disloquées et les pierres de taille entièrement décollées du noyau central.

Les édifices gothiques espagnols ne présentent pas de traces de chaînages.

c) Appuis. — Au XIIIe siècle les piliers offrent le plus souvent un noyau cylindrique flanqué de quatre, de huit ou de douze colonnettes, presque dégagées de la masse centrale; les architectes espagnols ne paraissent pas avoir varié le diamètre de leurs colonnettes, autant que l'ont fait les Français, et ont négligé presque toujours de creuser d'un cavet le noyau cylindrique, qui apparaît entre les colonnettes, pour les mettre en valeur et leur donner un plus fort relief. Chaque colonnette correspond exactement à cette époque à la retombée d'un arc ou d'une ogive. Au XIVe siècle, les colonnettes, amincies et réduites à n'être plus que des moulures, correspondent à toutes les moulures des arcs des ogives et de leurs branches secondaires; le chapiteau se réduit à un simple cordon ornemental (cathédrale de Barcelone, cloître de San Juan de la Peña) et finit même par disparaître complètement (cathédrale neuve de Plasencia). L'Espagne ne compte que peu d'exemples de piliers cylindriques construits par assises et cantonnés de colonnettes monolithes (salle capitulaire de las Huelgas), comme on en voit assez fréquemment en France.

Dans la dernière période de l'art gothique, on voit reparaître en Catalogne (Sainte-Marie-de-la-Mer) le pilier polygonal, si peu décoratif et si mal à propos employé par les Italiens (Sainte-Marie-des-Fleurs de Florence) et par les Allemands. Dans les provinces basques, les artistes ont préféré le pilier cylindrique (Berlanga de Duero), cannelé plus tard comme une colonne dorique (cathédrale de Burgos, piliers de la croisée). La fantaisie des décorateurs a tordu parfois les colonnes en spirales (salle capitulaire d'Osera) et a remis en honneur les colonnes torses dites Salomonniennes.

d) Chapiteaux. — Les chapiteaux de transition gardent la corbeille courte et robuste et l'abaque énorme des chapiteaux romans. La corbeille est presque toujours richement décorée; exceptionnellement, le chapiteau ne se compose que de moulures (Moreruela). Au XIIIe siècle, la corbeille s'allonge et s'orne de crochets et de feuillages, l'abaque perd de sa hauteur et s'orne de moulures. A partir du XIVe siècle, le chapiteau s'amincit et tend à se transformer en simple cordon décoratif (S. Juan de la Peña)[1] ou disparaît même complètement, les ogives et les doubleaux continuant les moulures du pilier.

Parfois, les chapiteaux sont remplacés par des culs-de-lampe sculptés, que les artistes ont traités avec la plus grande fantaisie, les ornant de figures et de scènes de chasse. Au réfectoire des chanoines à la cathédrale de Pampelune, la chaire du lecteur repose sur un encorbellement sculpté où est représentée la chasse mystique de la licorne.

e) Contreforts et arcs-boutants. — Avec l'époque gothique apparaissent les contreforts à échelons, plus larges du haut (cathédrale de Cuenca, déambulatoire de Fitero[2]). Puis l'ornementation envahit le contrefort, le creuse de niches, le hérisse de pinacles et le transforme peu à peu en aiguilles (chapelle du connétable à la cathédrale de Burgos). On cite des exemples de contreforts polyédriques (cathédrale de Tortosa), ou cylindriques (Calatrava la Nueva).

L'arc-boutant est peut-être l'élément le plus caractéristique de l'art gothique. Les plus anciens exemples connus en Espagne appartiennent aux églises de Veruela et de Las Huelgas; les cathédrales de Burgos et de León possèdent des arcs-boutants de style français, mais les Espagnols n'ont jamais adopté franchement ce mode de construction et n'ont pas toujours compris les conditions rationnelles de son emploi. Ils les grossissent outre mesure, ils les voûtent en quart de rond, ils ne savent où les appliquer (cathédrales de Girone et de Barcelone).

Dans trois églises espagnoles, à cinq nefs, l'arc-boutant a été employé. Au déambulatoire de Tortose, l'arc-boutant à échelons paraît impropre à transmettre les poussées jusqu'à la pile terminale. A Tolède, l'arc-boutant est correctement construit dans la nef, l'architecte l'a multiplié outre mesure autour du chœur, contrebutant chaque pile du sanctuaire par deux arcs-boutants, soutenus à leur tour, chacun par deux autres grands arcs et deux petits. Les chœurs du Mans et de Beauvais sont des miracles de simplicité à côté de l'abside de Tolède, et les églises françaises ont tout aussi bien résisté aux ravages du temps. A Séville, les arcs-boutants du chœur sont de construction

1. Ce cordon, fort joli et très bien fouillé, court librement sur la pierre sans être limité en dessus ou en dessous par aucune moulure. Nous ne connaissons en France en ce genre que la guirlande sculptée qui fait le tour de la cathédrale d'Amiens, à la hauteur du triforium.

2. M. Lampérez reproche à ce genre de contreforts d'être facilement détériorés par l'eau; mais l'architecture française destinée à un climat bien autrement pluvieux que celui d'Espagne, s'en est toujours servie, sans s'arrêter à cet inconvénient — et que dirait-on si l'on appliquait le raisonnement de M. L. aux toits en terrasses et aux voûtes à découvert de tant d'églises espagnoles?

logique, la nef est plutôt maintenue en équilibre par les voûtes des collatéraux et les puissants massifs qui séparent les chapelles; l'arc-boutant, trop horizontal, remplit mal son office.

f) Arcs. — L'architecture gothique a employé simultanément l'arc en plein cintre et l'arc en tiers-point. A Burgos, les formerets et les doubleaux sont en tiers-point, les ogives en plein cintre et les arcs du triforium surbaissés. L'art espagnol a connu, comme le nôtre, l'arc en lancette, l'arc à deux centres, l'ogive équilatérale, l'arc infléchi, l'arc Tudor; il a usé plus qu'on ne l'a fait chez nous de l'arc polylobé, de l'arc en lignes brisées curvilignes. A la bonne époque, les arcs en tiers-point n'ont pas de clef commune, les deux moitiés de l'arc viennent simplement buter l'une contre l'autre. L'ornementation s'empare des arcs comme de tous les autres membres d'architecture et les décore de lobes, de crochets et de feuillages [1].

g) Voûtes. — La voûte sur croisée d'ogives, usitée dans le nord de la France, paraît avoir été introduite en Espagne par les Cisterciens. Les évêques clunisiens ont importé la voûte aquitanique à coupoles, ou la voûte angevine très surhaussée (Las Huelgas). On trouve aussi quelques exemples de voûtes sexpartites (Santa Maria de Huerta).

Les profils des ogives offrent les mêmes dispositions qu'en France ; ils sont tout d'abord rectangulaires, puis triangulaires, puis prismatiques. Les architectes ont employé le tas de charge pour égaliser la poussée des ogives. Quelques particularités de construction peuvent être signalées : à Fitero, les ogives partent d'un niveau plus haut que les doubleaux, la différence correspond à la hauteur d'une assise. Les ogives se décorent parfois de festons (Burgos, Séville), de guirlandes (Tolède), d'anges et d'écussons. Les clefs de voûte prennent des proportions monumentales (cathédrale de Barcelone) et finissent par être remplacées par d'énormes pendentifs de bois sculpté et doré (Seo de Saragosse, Santo Domingo de Salamanque) [2]. Auprès de ces pendentifs (arandelas), les ogives sont peintes de couleurs vives qui accompagnent l'ornement et le mettent en valeur, comme la cravate fait valoir l'épingle. La voûte entière est parfois peinte ; le plus souvent elle est crépie, ou faite de petites pierres de taille, ou de grandes dalles. Dans la région salmantine, elle est ornée de sculptures. Le dernier mot de la somptuosité a été trouvé par l'architecte de la Capilla mayor de Cordoue (1560).

1. M. L. ne cite pas d'églises espagnoles possédant au-dessus des grandes arcades intérieures de la nef ou du chœur des gables ornés de crochets, comme on en voit à Notre-Dame de Paris, à la cathédrale de Séez et à la cathédrale de Cologne.

2. On signale une ornementation du même genre à Linz, en Autriche; la mode des arandelas serait-elle venue d'Allemagne ?

h) Charpentes. — La voûte est coûteuse et son établissement n'est pas toujours possible. Dans les églises pauvres on la remplace par une charpente. L'architecture espagnole en compte plusieurs types : la charpente sur tirants et poinçons, dont nous connaissons de très nombreux exemples en France, la charpente en berceau sans tirants (cathédrale de Cordoue), la charpente à double égout, portée sur doubleaux (Santa Agueda de Barcelone), et la charpente de menuiserie (de artesón) inspirée de l'architecture arabe.

i) Couverture. — Les toits se couvrent en pierre, ou en tuile, parfois en tuile vernissée (Valence, Murcie), ou en ardoise (Lugo). Les toits des églises espagnoles ne présentent pas les belles crêtes ni les beaux épis de certaines de nos églises françaises. Le toit n'a pas été considéré en Espagne comme un élément décoratif [1]. Dans certains pays, il a même été totalement supprimé. La cathédrale de Séville n'a d'autre toit que ses voûtes.

j) Triforium. — Le triforium est un élément architectural étranger, qui se retrouve seulement dans quelques grands édifices et fait presque toujours défaut dans l'architecture populaire. La tribune, forme primitive du triforium, se retrouve dans quelques rares églises (Santo Domingo de la Calzada). Elle est bientôt supprimée, et il n'en reste plus pour ainsi dire que la façade [2] (Burgos). Puis ces arcatures aveugles paraissent tristes ; on les ajoure et l'on obtient le triforium transparent (León), qui se confond bientôt avec la fenêtre de la claire-voie, dont il ne forme plus que le soubassement (Tolède, Avila) [3]. A la cathédrale de Cuenca, la décoration de l'étage supérieur est disposée sur deux plans, comme s'il s'agissait d'un triforium, mais derrière la décoration plaquée s'ouvrent les roses, qui remplacent la claire-voie ordinaire, disposition analogue à celles de certaines églises normandes [4]. A la cathédrale de Barcelone, le

1. A la cathédrale de León, il semble que l'architecte ait prévu de hauts combles à la française, mais ils n'ont pas été construits et les pignons des transepts se dressent dans le vide, sans utilité et sans appui.

2. Cette transformation de la tribune en triforium aveugle se laisse très bien apercevoir dans la nef de la cathédrale de Coutances, qui présente avec celle de Burgos de si notables analogies. Commencée à l'époque romane, cette nef comporta, sans doute, tout d'abord des tribunes, s'ouvrant par une arcade géminée. Au XIVe siècle on a construit un mur en arrière de l'arcade, tout en laissant subsister en avant une rampe ornée de quatre feuilles, qui n'a plus aucune utilité.

3. Exemples de ce mode de construction à Saint-Jacques de Dieppe.

4. Le chœur de la cathédrale de Coutances, le chœur de l'abbatiale de Saint- triforium est situé très haut et il est lui-même d'une très faible élévation. A Guetaria il est, au contraire, très élevé. A la cathédrale de Tolède, le triforium du déambulatoire est composé d'arcs lobulaires de style presque arabe. A la cathédrale de Palencia les remplages des arcades du triforium sont d'une richesse tout à fait remarquable et vraiment nationale.

k) Galeries de service. — Ces sortes de chemins de ronde étaient destinés à surveiller la solidité de l'édifice, ou à faciliter sa défense ou sa décoration. La cathédrale de León possède trois galeries extérieures, à la naissance des fenêtres basses [1], à la naissance des fenêtres hautes, et au-dessus de la corniche. A Burgos, il n'en reste plus que deux. A Barcelone, les deux galeries sont intérieures. A Cuenca, il n'en reste plus qu'une : le triforium.

l) Portiques. — L'architecture romane ayant laissé de si beaux modèles en Espagne, il semblerait que l'art gothique aurait dû les reprendre et les développer encore d'après ses propres principes ; cependant les grands ensembles décoratifs analogues à nos portails français sont très rares. Vitoria possède un beau portique, malheureusement dissimulé sous des constructions parasites. Le grand portail de Burgos a été misérablement raboté au XVIIIe siècle. Celui de León est encore intact et reproduit dans ses grandes lignes le portail septentrional de la cathédrale de Chartres. Partout ailleurs a prévalu le système des portes isolées. Leur emplacement est très variable ; on trouve généralement une porte à l'extrémité de la nef majeure, et des entrées latérales, pratiquées soit le long des nefs, soit à l'extrémité des transepts.

L'église cistercienne de Veruela possède encore une porte romane. Les portes de transition n'ont pas de tympan. C'est de France qu'est venue la mode des tympans sculptés (porte du Sarmental à la cathédrale de Burgos, portes de Santa Catalina et des lions à la cathédrale de Tolède), ou des tympans à jour (Oviedo, Tarragone). Les jambages des portes sont ornés de colonnettes et de statues. A Toro et à Ciudad-Rodrigo, les statues sont superposées aux colonnes. En Catalogne, les jambages et les archivoltes sont tout en moulures. Beaucoup de portes espagnoles sont à simple ouverture, sans pilier central. Quelques-unes se couronnent d'arcs en accolade (Murcie), ou d'un gable (Sainte-Marie-de-la-Mer à Barcelone). Parfois la porte principale s'ouvre sous une arche profonde qui protège les sculptures contre les intempéries du ciel (Saint-Thomas d'Avila). Au XVIe siècle, les détails se rapetissent, les lignes se brisent et se recourbent (San Pablo et San Gregorio de Valladolid, cathédrale neuve de Salamanque).

Étienne à Caen sont construits sur ce modèle. A Notre-Dame de Dijon des ouvertures circulaires sont ouvertes en arrière des arcatures du triforium.

1. La cathédrale de Tours présente un exemple de cette curieuse disposition.

Les battants des portes sont construits en bois et ornés de ferrures et de clous. A Tolède, la porte du Pardon est recouverte d'une chape de cuivre repoussé. Le cloître de Burgos a des portes de chêne sculpté (1456-95).

m) Fenêtres. — Les églises d'Espagne présentent quelques exemples d'immenses fenêtres construites dans le goût français, mais l'intensité de la lumière a permis aux architectes de la Péninsule d'en rétrécir les dimensions. Ils les ont ornées de meneaux et de remplages, conçus dans le style français ou dans un style particulier, plus riche et plus fantaisiste (cathédrale d'Oviedo, Santa-Maria-la-Real de Najera).

Les roses s'inspirent de celles de Reims ou de Paris (Burgos), de celles de Chartres (León), ou adoptent des combinaisons nouvelles, comme le Sceau de Salomon (Burgos, Valence), ou mettent en œuvre des éléments plus petits et multiples, disposés en zones concentriques (Tolède). Sainte-Marie-de-la-Mer nous fournit un exemple de rose flamboyante, Cervera de la Cañada une rose de style mahométan.

n) Corniches. — La corniche type de l'époque gothique se compose d'un filet, d'un cavet décoré de crochets ou de feuillages et d'un autre filet surmonté d'un biseau (Burgos). Plus tard, le dessin se complique, le cavet se change en un tore richement sculpté, la corniche s'orne de dentelures, et se coiffe de crêtes splendides (chapelle du Connétable à Burgos, chapelle royale de Grenade, San Gregorio de Valladolid).

o) Balustrades. — Les plus anciennes sont formées d'une série de petites arcades trilobées, puis viennent les balustrades découpées en quatre feuilles; à l'époque flamboyante, le dessin se complique de plus en plus et de véritables inscriptions en lettres monumentales se déroulent autour des édifices.

p) Pavements. — Ceux qui ont subsisté jusqu'à nos jours sont assez rares, quelques églises monastiques (Santas Creus, Poblet, Montserrat) étaient pavées de briques émaillées. Ailleurs, les églises sont pavées de larges dalles ou simplement carrelées.

q) Façades. — Très simples à l'origine (Fitero, Veruela, Huerta), les façades s'accompagnent bientôt de deux tours (Siguenza), et l'Espagne possède quelques exemples des riches façades conçues à la mode française (Burgos, León), mais cette mode ne fait point école : les façades espagnoles restent longtemps plus simples (Tarragone, Sainte-Marie-de-la-Mer à Barcelone), puis elles se transforment en panneaux purement décoratifs (San Pablo de Valladolid, 1585-99), San Marcos de Leon, Santa Maria de Aranda, cathédrale neuve de Salamanque, 1513-1531.)

r) Tours. — Les clochers n'ont pas de place déterminée dans l'architecture espagnole. En Catalogne ils sont plus rapprochés du chœur et plus déliés qu'en Castille. Les architectes catalans aiment les tours octogones, percées d'une fenêtre sur chaque face (cathédrales de Valence, de Barcelone, de Lérida, église de

Notre-Dame del Pino à Barcelone). En Castille, quelques tours se terminent par des flèches, mais les constructeurs espagnols n'ont jamais su tirer de cette forme architecturale les magnifiques effets obtenus par les maîtres d'œuvres français [1], anglais [2], ou allemands [3]. Les flèches de León sont pauvres et comme écrasées. Celle d'Oviedo, d'un dessin meilleur, est encore trop basse. Celle de Tolède, construite en ardoise et en plomb, et hérissée d'un triple rang de pointes, est d'aspect bizarre et mesquin. Les fameuses flèches à jour de Burgos sont l'œuvre d'un maître allemand, Jean de Cologne, ne se rattachent pas gracieusement aux tours carrées qui les portent, et n'ont pas été terminées comme le voulait l'architecte. On ne peut se faire une idée de ce qu'elles eussent été, si elles avaient eu pour amortissement les statues de Saint Pierre et de Saint Paul au lieu des ridicules bonnets d'électeur qui les surchargent aujourd'hui.

s) — Lanternes. La tradition romane des tours lanternes se perpétua à l'époque gothique. Un certain nombre d'églises présentent de petites lanternes établies sur plan carré, qui ne sont parfois (Séville) qu'un exhaussement de la voûte de la croisée. Les églises plus considérables (cathédrales de Tarragone, de Lérida, église du Poblet) possèdent des lanternes octogones. La cathédrale de Valence en a une fort belle, décorée sur chaque face de deux étages de belles fenêtres à remplages gothiques. La cathédrale de Barcelone a posé la sienne sur la première travée de la nef; elle vient seulement d'être terminée et sert de couronnement au portail si discuté, construit depuis une dizaine d'années.

La célèbre lanterne de Burgos, chef-d'œuvre de Juan de Vallejo (1540-1567) présente avec la lanterne de notre cathédrale de Coutances les rapports les plus frappants; cependant M. L. ne croit pas que Vallejo se soit inspiré de l'œuvre française, mais Burgos possédait, bien avant Vallejo, une lanterne octogone fort élevée, bâtie au XVe siècle, et c'est peut être cette tour, écroulée en 1539, qui avait été construite à l'imitation de la lanterne contançaise [4]. La tour de Burgos n'en reste pas moins une œuvre originale par la richesse et l'ingéniosité de sa décoration. C'est l'incomparable chef-d'œuvre de l'art plateresque.

Citons quelques-unes des plus belles : Coutances, Bayeux, Bernières-sur-Mer, Saint-Étienne de Caen, la Trinité de Vendôme, le clocher vieux de Chartres, la cathédrale de Senlis (XIIIe siècle), Saint-Pierre de Caen, le Kreisker de Saint-Pol de Léon (XIVe siècle), Saint-Michel de Bordeaux, Saint-Maclou de Rouen (XVe siècle), clocher neuf de Chartres (XVIe siècle).

2. Flèche de la cathédrale de Salisbury.

3. Flèches des cathédrales de Strasbourg et de Fribourg en Brisgau.

4. La métropole de Burgos présente dans le détail d'étonnants rapports avec l'église normande. Les galeries qui couronnent les pignons de la grande nef et du transept semblent copiées littéralement sur la galerie du grand portail de Coutances. Il est impossible que de pareilles ressemblances soient fortuites.

t) Cloîtres. — Les cloîtres gothiques, très nombreux en Espagne, l'emportent de beaucoup en magnificence sur les plus beaux cloîtres romans. Ils sont divisés en travées, comme les basses nefs des églises, et le plus souvent voûtés sur croisée d'ogives. Les arcades se garnissent de remplages, comme les fenêtres hautes des églises. Quelquefois des galeries en charpentes forment un second étage au-dessus des galeries de pierre (cathédrales de Pampelune et de Tolède). A la cathédrale de Burgos, à Saint-Jean-des-Rois de Tolède, à la cathédrale de Vich les deux étages sont en pierre. A Barcelone, le cloître, garni de chapelles, est un véritable portique public, que la foire de Santa Lucia remplit d'une pittoresque animation. Le cloître de San Gregorio de Valladolid est un exemple curieux du gothique de la dernière période, qui est au style du XIIIe siècle ce que le style baroque est à l'architecture classique. Dans la région catalane, les cloîtres sont portés sur de fines arcatures et simplement couverts en charpentes.

u) Éléments décoratifs et ornementaux. La décoration gothique est savamment distribuée, et empruntée aux éléments naturels, ramenés à leurs lignes essentielles et sans souci du détail individuel. La décoration sculptée reproduit encore, comme à l'époque romane, des éléments géométriques, mais elle s'attaque avec un incomparable succès à l'ornement végétal (cloître haut de la cathédrale de Burgos) et atteint parfois la beauté dans la reproduction du corps humain (jugement dernier de la porte occidentale de la cathédrale de León, inspiré de celui de Bourges). Les artistes s'amusent aussi à sculpter des légendes, des fabliaux, des scènes familières ou grotesques, même des obscénités, qui alors ne choquaient personne. L'art gothique espagnol a donné un très grand développement à la sculpture héraldique (Saint-Jean-des-Rois, chapelle du Connétable à la cathédrale de Burgos). La statuaire a laissé de bons modèles à León (la Vierge blanche), à Burgos, à Pampelune (vierge du cloître), à Tolède (porte des lions); elle rappelle tantôt les écoles françaises de l'Ile-de-France, tantôt les écoles bourguignonne et allemande.

La construction gothique est presque toujours monochrome; on peut cependant citer un exemple contraire : le triforium du déambulatoire de Tolède est orné de colonnettes de marbre rouge [1].

v) Peinture. — La polychromie artificielle fut beaucoup plus usitée, cependant, on ne voit rien en Espagne qui rappelle les magnificences de la Sainte-Chapelle de Paris; la peinture est généralement réservée aux portails (collégiale de Toro), aux sanctuaires (cathédrale de Tolède) ou à certaines parties importantes de la décoration sculptée, chapiteaux, clefs de voûte, tombeaux et enfeus.

Un élément de décoration plus national se reconnaît dans les revêtements de

1. Une exception aussi notable existe au Mont Saint-Michel, où les arcs du cloître reposent sur des colonnettes de granit rouge poli.

faïence émaillée de certaines églises (la Seo de Saragosse). Les motifs du décor sont le plus souvent empruntés à l'art oriental.

Les lambris et les charpentes étaient souvent décorés de peintures aux tons vifs, exécutées à la détrempe et quelquefois à l'huile (Santa Agueda à Barcelone). Au XVe siècle, l'or entre dans la composition et les artistes ont une certaine tendance à en abuser. Les peintres dessinaient d'abord leurs compositions sur parchemin et les reportaient ensuite en agrandissement sur la pierre. La cathédrale d'Oviedo présente un exemple unique d'une peinture murale où les têtes des principaux personnages se détachent en haut relief sur le fond uni du mur. M. L. voit avec raison dans cette singulière technique une imitation des procédés de la broderie, qui figurait souvent les têtes des personnages par des plaques de métal émaillé.

x) Verrières. — L'art de la peinture sur verre s'est répandu de France en Espagne vers la fin du XIIe siècle et présente les mêmes phases que dans notre pay[1]. Le XIIIe siècle aime les vitraux à légendes, le XIVe siècle, les vitraux à grands personnages; à la Renaissance, le vitrail devient un véritable tableau. L'histoire de la peinture sur verre en Espagne n'est pas encore faite, et dénotera, quand on l'écrira, des influences françaises, flamandes et allemandes. La fabrication avait à peu près cessé au XVIIe siècle [1].

II. — Géographie du style gothique en Espagne.

1. — Architecture ogivale dans les domaines castillans.

L'importance acquise en Espagne par la Castille après la bataille de Las Navas de Tolosa (1212), la réunion des couronnes de Castille et de Leon, un grand règne comme celui de saint Ferdinand, des alliances de famille avec les Plantagenets et les Capétiens, l'existence de grands évêques entreprenants et riches, l'extension des sociétés ouvrières, l'accroissement et l'enrichissement des villes, telles sont les causes générales qui ont favorisé en Castille la naissance du style nouveau, qui y a été importé des domaines angevins et français et y a pris, tout de suite, un caractère nettement aristocratique.

Sur le thème français, une fois bien étudié et bien connu, les architectes castillans ont travaillé à leur tour, mais dans un sens tout différent de celui où marchèrent les maîtres du nord; au lieu de chercher comme ceux-ci l'exhaussement indéfini, ils s'attachèrent à renforcer l'architecture et abandonnèrent très vite les immenses fenestrages de la construction française pour ouvrir des jours beaucoup plus étroits sous leurs nefs volontairement assombries. L'ornementation se raréfia, comme il convient chez un peuple pauvre [2], et fut

2. M. L. fait remarquer avec raison que l'Espagne resta un pays pauvre réservée pour certaines parties bien déterminées, le reste de l'édifice restant froid et nu.

M. L. étudie l'architecture castillane par régions, et distingue cinq écoles locales : castillane-léonnaise, galicienne, andalouse, basque, navarraise. Nous noterons ici les détails les plus caractéristiques, les plus espagnols des édifices décrits par lui, et il nous sera peut-être possible, en manière de conclusion, de fixer les traits principaux de la grande école gothique espagnole.

A. Région castillane-léonnaise.

La cathédrale de Sigüenza [1], est un type très intéressant d'église-forteresse et appartient au style de transition. Commencée vers le milieu du XIIe siècle sur un plan roman à trois nefs, transept, chœur avec déambulatoire et cinq chapelles rayonnantes, elle est continuée dans le style poitevin par l'évêque D. Cerebruno de Poitiers. D. Martin de Finojosa, abbé du monastère cistercien de Santa-Maria-de-Huerta, l'adapte au style gothique. Elle s'achève lentement au cours du XIIIe siècle. Au XVe siècle, les voûtes ruinées sont reconstruites,et au XVIe siècle les chapelles absidales sont supprimées, le déambulatoire est entièrement remanié. Les cloîtres, couverts en charpentes peintes, et toutes les dépendances nécessaires à la vie d'un chapitre de chanoines réguliers étaient entourés à l'origine d'une ceinture de murailles crénelées et garnies de tours. La physionomie générale de l'église est robuste et simple.

Commencée dans les dernières années du XIIe siècle, la cathédrale-forteresse d'Avila présente tant de singularités de construction qu'il en faudrait faire un édifice à part dans la liste des églises gothiques espagnoles. Le chœur appartient au XIIe siècle, mais rappelle encore l'aspect général des églises romanes. Il possède aujourd'hui deux étages de fenêtres, mais le premier étage, formé jusqu'à la fin du XVe siècle. Il fallut pour y amener un semblant de richesse la bonne administration des rois catholiques, et l'opulence ne vint qu'avec le butin de l'Amérique.

La cathédrale française de Clermont-Ferrand est un excellent exemple de style gothique entendu à l'économie. Bâtie dans un pays pauvre et peu généreux, elle a été conçue sur un plan très grand, mais on a sacrifié à peu près complètement toute l'ornementation. A part les chapiteaux, les corniches et les gargouilles, on chercherait vainement une pierre sculptée dans la partie la plus ancienne.

1. M. L. signale l'erreur de M. Enlart, qui date le chœur de Sigüenza des débuts du XIIe siècle (1102-1123). (Origine de l'architecture gothique en Espagne. Bullet. archéol. 1894). Les ressemblances constatées par M. Enlart entre la cathédrale de Sigüenza et celle d'Autun s'expliquent d'ailleurs beaucoup mieux si l'on recule à la fin du XIIe siècle la construction de l'église espagnole.

d'arcades géminées, a dû jadis s'ouvrir sur des tribunes remplacées au XVe siècle par de gauches contreforts. Les voûtes du chœur sont sexpartites, mais ne reposent que sur quatre piliers et sur deux fausses piles, portant sur les clefs des grands arcs inférieurs de la nef [1]. Le déambulatoire est double, mais cette particularité se justifie par la difficulté de couvrir d'une seule voûte toute la largeur du collatéral, et la largeur de celui-ci s'explique à son tour par la nécessité d'avoir une large terrasse pour la défense de l'édifice, qui forme bastion sur la ligne des remparts. Au dehors, le chœur de la cathédrale d'Avila offre l'aspect d'un donjon semi-circulaire, percé d'étroites fenêtres, les chapelles rayonnantes étant prises dans l'épaisseur du mur. Les transepts ont été construits de 1307 à 1355 et la nef, commencée à la fin du XIIIe siècle, n'a été achevée qu'au XVe. M. L. fait de la cathédrale d'Avila un spécimen de gothique barbare et il a raison. C'est une œuvre, non de même style, mais de même caractère que notre sévère et bizarre cathédrale du Puy.

La cathédrale de Sto Domingo de la Calzada, construite de 1168 à 1180, est une grande basilique de transition, à trois nefs, de quatre travées, un transept et un chœur à déambulatoire, avec trois chapelles rayonnantes. Elle a été en partie rebâtie au XVIe siècle, dans le style de la Renaissance espagnole. Elle présente des tribunes, voûtées en quart de rond, au-dessus d'un déambulatoire, de caractère très archaïque.

La cathédrale de Cuenca, à demi reconstruite, elle aussi, aux XVe et XVIe siècles, est dans son plan primitif, une église de style anglo-normand [2], à voûtes sexpartites et chevet circulaire sans déambulatoire, rappelant en plus d'un détail la cathédrale de Coutances.

La cathédrale de Burgos (1221-1250) est une grande église, de style gothique très pur, mais un peu archaïque, dont les modèles doivent être recherchés dans la région Nord-Ouest de la France, et qui s'est aussi inspirée de l'église voisine de Las Huelgas. M. L. croit que le plan du chœur a été remanié, et cite comme détail curieux les petites chapelles greffées sur le flanc du transept, à la mode romane auvergnate [3]. Le chœur de la cathédrale de Palencia paraît être calqué sur le modèle de Burgos.

1. Cette disposition paradoxale a été adoptée par les premiers architectes de la cathédrale de Beauvais et a, par deux fois, amené la ruine des maîtresses voûtes.

2. M. L. attribue cette influence à la reine Doña Leonor Plantagenet, épouse d'Alphonse III, roi de Castille (1158-1214).

3. A la cathédrale de Coutances, c'est dans le prolongement du transept que se trouve bâtie la chapelle. Nous ne connaissons pas d'autre exemple de cette disposition, plus curieuse encore que celle de Burgos.

La cathédrale de Tolède (1227-1493) présente de grandes ressemblances de plan avec nos églises de Bourges et du Mans. Les belles arcades de la nef tolédane sont d'un dessin extrêmement pur. M. L. fait de l'église de Tolède un spécimen de style gothique espagnolisé ; nous y voyons pour notre part, une pure église française, sauf quelques détails du triforium, du sanctuaire et du déambulatoire. Ce qui est réellement espagnol à Tolède, ce sont toutes les adjonctions au plan primitif du vieux maître Petrus Petri; adjonctions très importantes d'ailleurs, très intéressantes et qui font de la basilique de Tolède une merveille d'art et de pittoresque.

La cathédrale de León est plus française encore. Pour qu'elle le fût tout à fait, elle n'aurait besoin que d'un toit et de clochers. On peut même dire que la diaphanéité y a été exagérée, car les fenêtes hautes de la nef se trouvent elles-mêmes découpées dans une claire-voie. L'architecte semble avoir voulu ne pas laisser une palme de mur plein : « C'est une dentelle ! » nous disait un jour un enthousiaste. Mais la basilique léonnaise est restée un exemple isolé de légèreté prestigieuse.

La cathédrale d'Oviedo (1388-1497) appartient au style flamboyant, mais sa structure générale est de caractère presque roman. Son cloître est une copie médiocre de celui de Burgos.

La cathédrale de Calahorra est un édifice roman, profondément remanié au XVe siècle et doté à la fin du XVIe d'un déambulatoire et de chapelles, où triomphe le style baroque.

La cathédrale d'Astorga (1471-XVIIe siècle) est un véritable musée archéologique. Elle a retenu quelque chose de la légèreté léonnaise et se rapproche par le style général des cathédrales de Ségovie et de Salamanque. Elle appartient ainsi à l'école néo-gothique, la plus espagnole de toutes.

La magistrale d'Alcalá (1497-1509) est une construction timide et sèche, due à l'architecte tolédan Gumiel, qui ne se mit point en frais d'invention quand il la dessina.

Tout autre est la cathédrale neuve de Salamanque (1512-1733), le chef-d'œuvre du néo-gothique. Le splendide portail est de Juan Gil de Hontañon, et on a appelé la coupole « la plus sensée des œuvres de Churriguera ». Le plan « en salon » (chevet droit) fait de la basilique salmantine une merveilleuse salle hypostyle, qui n'a plus rien de mystique, mais qui semble donner le dernier mot de la magnificence et du goût.

En 1498, D. Gutierre Alvarez de Toledo, évêque de Plasencia, entreprit de reconstruire sa cathédrale, édifice de transition, dans le style alors à la mode, mais les ressources du diocèse suffirent seulement à bâtir l'abside et le transept de la nouvelle église, somptueux édifice néo-gothique au bout d'une nef sévère du XIIIe siècle.

Ce que Plasencia n'a pu faire, Ségovie l'a réalisé. Sa cathédrale (1525-1615)

est, comme celle de Salamanque, un excellent modèle de gothique espagnol. Toutefois la cathédrale de Salamanque l'emporte par la grandeur des proportions et la beauté du détail [1].

A côté de ces grandes basiliques, les pays castillans renferment encore un grand nombre d'églises intéressantes. On retrouve à Sasamón le plan abbatial cistercien à cinq absides, et le transept à deux nefs d'égale hauteur, que l'on voit en France à Saint-Nazaire de Carcassonne. Santa Maria de Castro Urdiales semble une fille rustique de la cathédrale de Burgos. Laredo a le même caractère de rudesse et de naïveté. Udalla nous montre un exemple d'église à deux nefs, comme les Jacobins de Toulouse, mais l'église espagnole a deux absides, tandis que la française n'en a qu'une. L'église de San Miguel d'Almazán unit au tracé le plus bizarre, les plus étranges singularités de construction : basses nefs voûtées en arches de pont, nef centrale voûtée d'ogives, transept recouvert d'une coupole de style mudéjar. L'église de Gamonal, à une seule nef et à chevet rectangulaire, ressemble à une église de l'Anjou.

Un des types les plus heureux de l'église castillane est l'église à trois nefs, de hauteur à peu près égale, plan poitevin, repris en Castille, surtout à la fin de la période gothique (Santa Maria de Cáceres, Santa Maria la redonda à Logroño) et que l'on retrouve également en Andalousie (Santa Ana de Séville) et dans les provinces basques (église de Guernica).

B. — Galice.

La cathédrale de Mondoñedo est une église de transition, à trois nefs avec tribunes voûtées en quart de rond, d'aspect encore tout roman.

Saint Martin de Noya, Santiago de Betanzos sont des églises de type galicien, couvertes en charpentes, qui reposent sur des arcs doubleaux.

C. — Andalousie.

La cathédrale de Séville est la plus grande des églises d'Espagne. Elle a 140 mètres de longueur, 90 de large, 36 de haut [2]. Son plan est le plan en salon,

1. L'école néo-gothique espagnole a conservé les caractères de l'art ogival bien plus fidèlement que notre architecture religieuse de la Renaissance. Les édifices français qui mériteraient le mieux d'être comparés aux cathédrales de Salamanque et de Ségovie : Saint-Eustache de Paris et l'église de Montargis, leur sont notoirement inférieurs pour la simplicité et la majesté de l'ensemble, comme pour la bonne entente de la construction.

2. Les proportions de Notre-Dame de Paris sont à peine inférieures : 134 m. 81. — 48 m. 75. — 33 m. 78. (Médaille commémorative du commencement des travaux de restauration de l'édifice, 1842.)

Cathédrale de Rouen : 136 m. — 54 m. 60 — 28 m.

Abbatiale de Saint-Ouen : 138 m. — 42. m. 22 — 32 m. 50.

à cinq nefs, chevet rectangulaire et chapelles latérales. Elle doit surtout sa renommée à ses proportions gigantesques et aux édifices de tout style qui l'accompagnent ; son architecture générale est presque pauvre et elle est loin de produire le grand effet de la cathédrale neuve de Salamanque. La construction, entreprise en 1402 et terminée en 1508, a été peu soignée. La voûte de la croisée s'est écroulée en 1511 et plus récemment, en 1888.

La cathédrale d'Almeria (1524-1610) est un édifice néo-gothique à trois nefs de hauteur égale, chevet polygonal et déambulatoire. L'église est couverte de voûtes ogivales en étoile.

La Capilla mayor de la cathédrale de Cordoue a été maudite par tous les amateurs d'art arabe ; les gothiques admireront toujours ce magnifique édifice, bâti de de 1523 à 1600, au milieu de la forêt de colonnes de la mosquée musulmane.

M. L. y voit « une intéressante création, très nationale, exemple de la fantaisie, de la splendeur et de l'éclectisme de l'Espagne du XVIe siècle. » Quand Charles-Quint disait que les chanoines avaient détruit « ce qui ne se voyait nulle part pour mettre à sa place ce qui se voyait partout » il oubliait la démolition d'une partie de l'Alhambra et son lourd palais de Grenade, auquel ces paroles pourraient s'appliquer avec bien plus de justesse.

A côté de ces splendides édifices, les autres monuments gothiques de l'Andalousie paraissent bien pauvres ; nous pouvons sans inconvénient les laisser de côté.

D. — Provinces basques.

La cathédrale de Vitoria remonte au XIVe siècle et présente de curieux détails comme son porche en forme de chapelle et son beau portail de style français, mais l'intérieur est défiguré par d'affreuses arcades tendues en travers de la net et du plus disgracieux effet.

La cathédrale de Santiago à Bilbao (1300-1390) est un correct édifice du XIVe siècle qui rappelle la cathédrale de Tolède par le plan de son déambulatoire, et celles de Pampelune et de Vitoria par la sécheresse des lignes et la pauvreté du décor.

Santa Maria de Lequeitio est aussi une adaptation régionale de l'art franco-navarrais.

E) Navarre.

La collégiale de Tudela est une belle église de transition (1194-1204) à trois nefs, un transept et cinq absides. Sa porte principale, ornée d'un jugement dernier de caractère très dramatique, paraît due à des mains françaises.

La cathédrale de Pampelune (1397-1427) ne manque pas de grandeur, mais Cathédrale du Mans : 150 — 59 m. — 34 m.

Cathédrale d'Amiens : 138 m. — 60 m. 65 — 44 m.

pèche par la sécheresse des lignes et l'absence presque complète de décoration architecturale. Le chevet, à deux pas, est d'un dessin bizarre et peu agréable. Mais le cloître est de toute beauté ; la salle capitulaire, aujourd'hui convertie en chapelle (la Barbazana), le réfectoire des chanoines, la grande salle appelée la preciosa comptent parmi les monuments les plus intéressants de l'art gothique en Espagne.

II. — Architecture ogivale dans les domaines aragonais.

1. — Catalogne, Baléares et Valence.

Le style ogival est venu en Catalogne vers le dernier quart du XIIe siècle, et à travers le Languedoc. Ce n'est guère qu'au milieu du XIIIe siècle qu'il apparaît pleinement constitué ; le XIVe siècle marque son apogée et il prolonge sa carrière jusqu'au XVIIe siècle, sans jamais passer par la phase exubérante qu'il a connue en Castille. Les églises catalanes, généralement à nef unique, sont bâties sur un plan très simple, sans arcs-boutants, sans transept, sans déambulatoires ; le gothique catalan garde toujours quelque chose de la sévérité et de la force de l'art roman. Les voûtes ne sont jamais construites sur plan étoilé et n'admettent d'autre ornement que la clef sculptée. Le triforium est presque partout supprimé. Les tours sont fines, polygonales, ouvertes seulement à la partie supérieure et terminées en terrasse. Les portes gardent l'aspect roman, et parfois même l'archivolte en plein cintre. Les fenêtres sont petites et les églises obscures. Les cloîtres appartiennent à deux types distincts : les uns sont voûtés et comportent comme en Castille de grandes arcades à remplages opulents, les autres sont couverts en bois et appuient leurs planchers sur de fines colonnettes. L'ornementation est rare, empruntée à l'art héraldique ou au règne végétal ; la figure humaine ne s'y rencontre qu'à l'état d'exception. Ces caractères, avec quelques variantes, se retrouvent dans le royaume de Valence et aux Baléares.

La cathédrale de Tarragone (1190-1289) appartient à l'époque de transition. C'est un bel et robuste édifice à trois nefs, transept et trois absides dans le prolongement des nefs. La structure générale est encore toute romane, romane aussi la décoration ; l'abside est voûtée en cul-de-four en tiers point. Le portail principal, orné de statues, semble un portail français mutilé. Un cloître splendide, rival du cloître de Poblet, encadre un riant jardin et constitue à lui seul un musée d'art catalan. Aujourd'hui descendue au bord, et peut-être trop près, du Sègre, Lérida occupait jadis le sommet de la colline, et de la vieille ville subsiste l'antique cathédrale, désaffectée depuis le 18e s. Construite de 1230 à 1278 sur un plan tout à fait analogue à celui de la cathédrale de Tarragone, elle est précédée d'un petit cloître du XIVe siècle, qui s'ouvre sur le dehors par une belle porte ornée de figures. La nef, très courte, ne compte que trois travées, le transept, couronné comme à Tarragone d'une lanterne octogone, déborde largement des deux côtés de la nef et trois absides terminent l'édifice dans le prolongement des nefs. A l'un des angles du cloître s'élève une haute et légère tour catalane, d'un style plus riche et plus pittoresque que la plupart des clochers de la même école. Quelques détails du portail de l'Annonciation se rattachent au style mudéjar. C'est en résumé un monument composite, dans lequel on peut saisir la trace de toutes les influences archéologiques qui se sont fait sentir en Catalogne au XIIIe siècle.

La cathédrale de Barcelone est le plus grand et le plus riche édifice religieux de toute la province. Sa construction, entreprise en 1298 et poursuivie jusqu'en 1420, s'est inspirée de très près de la cathédrale de Narbonne, commencée en 1272, et présente d'intéressantes particularités. L'architecte a visé avant tout à la largeur; il paraît évident que s'il l'eût osé, il eût couvert d'une seule voûte tout l'espace compris entre les murs latéraux, et s'il l'eût fait, la basilique barcelonaise ne serait qu'une réédition de Sainte-Cécile d'Alby, avec une couronne complète de chapelles polygonales. Mais le maître inconnu n'a point osé lancer sa voûte sur un vide de 25 mètres [1], il a divisé l'espace à couvrir en trois nefs et a surélevé légèrement celle du milieu, pour pouvoir l'éclairer par de petites rosaces. Les tours, disposées d'une manière très originale, occupent les extrémités des bras du transept et la première travée de la nef, immédiatement au-dessus du grand portail; elles symbolisent, paraît-il, les clous qui attachèrent Jésus sur la Croix. Un cloître magnifique, cerclé, comme l'église, de chapelles polygonales, complète le monument et fait de la cathédrale de Barcelone un des édifices les plus achevés et les plus complets de l'Espagne. La construction est soignée et l'ornementation relativement riche, mais un peu lourde; la nef centrale manquera toujours d'élévation pour des yeux français. L'obscurité de l'église est encore exagérée par le ton enfumé des pierres. Par les grands soleils d'été, il faut plusieurs minutes pour que le regard s'habitue à l'ombre de ces nefs si parcimonieusement éclairées.

La cathédrale de Girone nous donne une idée très exacte de ce qu'aurait été celle de Barcelone, si l'architecte eût couvert sa grande nef d'une voûte unique. A Girone, le problème est à moitié résolu: C'est le chœur de Barcelone, mis au bout de la nef d'Alby [2].

La cathédrale de Tortose présente la trace de certaines influences castillanes. Le plan du chœur rappelle celui de Tolède; les chapelles rayonnantes sont séparées les unes des autres par de grandes arcatures à remplages, comme on en voit à Châlons-sur-Marne et à Coutances.

1. La grande nef de la cathédrale de Toulouse mesure 25 mètres de largeur. Sainte-Cécile d'Alby a 19 m. 50 de largeur sans les chapelles. Sainte-Marie-des-Fleurs à Florence.

2. La nef de Girone est même plus large que celle de l'église française. Elle mesure 22 m. 80, ce qui prouve que le plan à nef unique aurait pu être appliqué à Barcelone.

Le plan général de la cathédrale de Barcelone a inspiré les fondateurs de deux grandes églises catalanes du XIVe siècle : Sainte-Marie-de-la-Mer à Barcelone (1329-1383) et Notre-Dame de l'Aurore à Manresa. L'architecte de Sainte-Marie-de-la-Mer a adopté les trois nefs de hauteur presque égale, mais pour rendre l'effet de largeur plus sensible encore qu'à la cathédrale, il n'a donné que quatre travées à sa longue nef, dont le vide est à peine meublé par six piliers octogonaux d'une grande hardiesse. On s'explique les intentions de l'artiste, cependant l'effet obtenu ne paraît pas heureux. Ces piliers sont encore trop nombreux et font regretter la nef unique. A Manresa, l'architecte a tenté un autre compromis entre le plan à nef unique et le plan à triple nef. Son église est en réalité à nef unique, mais les contreforts ne s'avancent pas jusqu'au bord de la nef majeure et laissent entre leurs extrémités et les piliers de la nef un étroit passage, qui joue tant bien que mal le rôle d'un collatéral. Ce qui fait la beauté de l'église de Manresa, c'est l'éclairage de sa nef majeure, bien mieux entendu qu'à Sainte-Marie-de-la-Mer et qu'à la cathédrale de Barcelone. L'ouverture de grandes fenêtres à l'étage supérieur a obligé les constructeurs à recourir à l'emploi des arcs-boutants, d'usage très rare en Catalogne.

La cathédrale de Palma de Mallorca ne fut probablement, à l'origine, qu'une chapelle royale ; on mit au bout, un peu plus tard, une église à trois nefs, qui présente d'assez curieuses ressemblances avec la Seo de Manresa, et dans laquelle on peut signaler aussi quelques emprunts au gothique italien.

La cathédrale de Valence, atrocement déguisée au XVIIIe siècle, fut à l'origine une église de transition à trois nefs, transept très accusé, abside polygonale à déambulatoire et huit chapelles rayonnantes. Une très belle porte romane, un portail gothique à demi ruiné et une belle lanterne octogone, voilà tout ce que la cathédrale de Valence a conservé de son ancienne beauté, défigurée sous un vêtement churrigueresque, dont il serait bon de la débarrasser.

La cathédrale de Murcie (1388-1467) est un édifice conçu dans le style ogival un peu pesant et un peu pauvre à la mode en Espagne au XIVe siècle. Elle ne manque pas à l'intérieur d'une certaine beauté, elle est défigurée au dehors par une foule d'édifices parasites, presque tous sans importance artistique. La chapelle de los Vélez constitue, suivant M. L., un curieux spécimen de « gothique churrigueresque ».

L'église de Villena, bâtie sur un plan analogue à la Seo de Manresa, a fait porter ses voûtes sur les colonnes torses de la Lonja de Valence.

Santa Agueda de Barcelone est un type excellent de chapelle gothique à charpentes surpportées sur doubleaux et pignons.

2. — Aragon.

L'Aragon, uni à la Catalogne, a beaucoup souffert du voisinage de la riche principauté ; ses rois ont été avant tout des comtes de Barcelone, et la ville comtale a attiré à elle toute la richesse de l'État, comme Lérida attirait à elle tous les étudiants de Saragosse. L'art aragonais n'a donc eu quelque importance qu'au commencement de la période gothique, avant l'absorption de l'Aragon dans la mouvance catalane, ou après la réunion de l'Aragon et de la Castille au temps des rois catholiques.

Parmi les notables édifices gothiques d'Aragon, M. L. cite les cathédrales de Huesca et de Tarazona, la Seo de Saragosse et la collégiale de Barbastro, directement inspirée de la métropole aragonaise. C'est la Seo qui l'emporte en intérêt sur tous ces monuments. Commencée en 1119, très peu de temps après la conquête, reconstruite à partir de 1188 et achevée seulement en 1550, elle porte des traces d'art mudéjar, a commencé par être une simple église romane à trois nefs et trois absides, et a fini par devenir une immense salle de 90 mètres de côté, divisée en cinq nefs de hauteur presque égale, et entourée d'une série de chapelles latérales décorées dans le goût le plus divers et parfois le plus baroque. L'aspect général, sans avoir rien d'arabe, fait penser à la mosquée de Cordoue : c'est, en somme, le même plan, la forêt de colonnes, mais sans la légéreté des arcades mauresques, sans les perspectives fuyantes des longues nefs, sans les merveilles du Mihrab de marbre peint et doré. La Seo est un chef-d'œuvre de hasard, auquel le temps a plus travaillé que la volonté des hommes ; elle montre comment le style gothique s'adapte à tous les plans et quelles ressources inattendues on y pourrait encore trouver.

III. — Architecture monastique.

1° Les Cisterciens.

La première colonie cistercienne d'Espagne fut l'abbaye de Moreruela (Zamora) fondée en 1134. Dès le milieu du XIIe siècle, les moines de Citeaux comptaient dans la Péninsule onze grands monastères et 500 bénéfices. Le XIIIe siècle marqua l'apogée de leur puissance, qui entra en décadence deux siècles plus tard et disparut au XVIe siècle.

L'architecture sévère des Cisterciens a élevé en Espagne de nombreux monuments, dont les plus beaux sont les monastères de Moreruela (Zamora), de Santa Maria de Huerta (Soria), de las Huelgas, près Burgos, de Gradefes (León), de S. Andrés de Arroyo (Palencia), d'Osera (Orense), de Meira (Lugo), de Poblet (Tarragone), de Santas-Creus (Tarragone), de Veruela (Saragosse), de La Oliva (Navarre), et de Fitero (Navarre).

Tous ces édifices ont un air de parenté indéniable et ne diffèrent que par les dimensions et les détails. Presque tous présentent les caractères propres à l'époque de transition : églises à trois nefs, transept et abside avec ou sans déambulatoires et chapelles rayonnantes. Moreruela a sept chapelles de plan ogival autour du sanctuaire, Huerta une abside de tracé semi-circulaire outrepassé, sans déambulatoire, Las Huelgas une abside polygonale isolée, Gradefes une abside semi-circulaire et trois chapelles rayonnantes, Sandoval trois absides semi-circulaires dans le prolongement de ses nefs, Osera un déambulatoire sans chapelles, Poblet cinq chapelles absidales et deux chapelles sur le côté du transept, à la vieille mode romane, Santas Creus un chevet rectangulaire. Veruela reproduit le plan de Poblet. Les nefs sont voûtées tantôt en berceau en tiers-point, tantôt sur croisées d'ogives. L'ornementation est extrêmement sobre et de caractère encore tout roman. C'est dans les cloîtres, dans les salles capitulaires, dans les logis royaux annexés aux monastères qu'il faut chercher le luxe et la fantaisie. Les églises, bâties à l'époque de la stricte observance, sont austères et correctes comme les avait voulues saint Bernard, comme le sont nos abbayes françaises de Vezelay, de Tournus, de Paray-le-Monial, de Savigny, d'Obazine, etc. La plupart de ces magnifiques édifices sont aujourd'hui déserts et ruinés; ne pourrait-on trouver mieux à en faire que d'y installer des caves ou des magasins de bois?

2° Prémontrés.

Aguilar de Campóo (Palencia) possède une abbaye de Prémontrés, à demi-ruinée aujourd'hui, dont l'église présente des restes d'une église du XIIe siècle reprise au XIIIe, un chœur heptagonal à tracé ultra semi-circulaire et un cloître apparenté de très près au cloître de Fontfroide en Languedoc.

Santa Cruz de Rivas a été une église à nef unique, transept et trois absides, et fut retouchée au XVe siècle. Une salle capitulaire, d'aspect tout roman, appuie sur quatre colonnes de style barbare une voûte aux rudes ogives de section quadrangulaire.

A Bellpuig de las Avellanas (Lérida) l'église, moitié voûtée, moitié couverte en charpentes, n'est qu'un transept accompagné de quatre chapelles rectangulaires et d'une abside à trois pans.

3° Ordres militaires.

M. L. étudie dans ce chapitre les trois églises de Villasirga (Palencia), de Villamuriel de Cerrato (Palencia) et de Calatrava-la-Nueva (Ciudad Real).

L'église de Villasirga, construite par les templiers, sur un plan assez curieux [1] au début du XIIIe siècle, est un édifice de transition à chevet droit, avec porche latéral à voûte très élevée, analogue au porche de la cathédrale de Montpellier.

Villamuriel de Cerrato est aussi une église à chevet rectiligne, d'une architecture extrêmement froide et géométrique, sans le moindre sacrifice au pittoresque et à la fantaisie. Sa tour lanterne octogone, portée sur trompes, lui assigne une place à part au milieu des églises monastiques.

L'église de Calatrava la Nueva, bâtie en pierre et brique, présente sur la façade d'étranges contreforts semi-circulaires, et à l'intérieur, une porte à claveaux alternativement composés de briques et de pierres. C'est peut-être le seul exemple de polychromie que l'on connaisse en Espagne pendant la période gothique [2].

1. Qui rappelle beaucoup le plan de l'église Saint-Julien de Tours.

2. La cathédrale d'Albi, bâtie toute en briques, a aussi des contreforts semi-circulaires.

4° Bénédictins.

Les monastères bénédictins de la règle de Cluny ou de Valladolid, éclipsés par les cisterciens, et très remaniés dans la période moderne, n'ont laissé qu'un petit nombre de monuments importants. M. L. cite cependant la curieuse église de San Salvador de Oña, exemple de style « télescopique », allongée à deux reprises et chaque fois dans un style différent ; le cloître gothique du XVIe siècle est digne de figurer parmi les plus beaux d'Espagne. Santa Maria-la-Real de Najera fut construite au XVe siècle par un architecte archaïsant qui lui a donné un caractère assez particulier. On retrouve à son chevet les contreforts cylindriques de Calatrava. Santo Toribio de Liébana (Santander) n'est pas entièrement dénué d'intérêt ; ses trois nefs de hauteur presque égale, son clocher placé à l'extrémité de la grande nef et ouvert en manière de tribune sur l'intérieur de l'église, ses voûtes coupoliformes, d'accent aquitanien, lui assignent un rang notable parmi les églises de la province de Santander.

5° Chartreux.

La vogue obtenue par l'ordre de Saint Bruno à la fin du XVe siècle, la faveur que lui accordèrent les plus grands princes de l'Europe explique la magnificence de certains couvents de Chartreux. La Bourgogne avait la Chartreuse de Dijon, l'Italie, la Chartreuse de Pavie, l'Espagne a Miraflores, dont le plan fut tracé en 1452 par Jean de Cologne. Fastueuse construction, conçue dans le style gothique allemand et inspirée peut être de la Chartreuse de Dijon, l'église de Miraflores est un admirable musée d'art, et n'a rien perdu de son ornementation gothique ou de la Renaissance. La chartreuse catalane de Montealegre n'a pas la belle église de Miraflores, mais ses cloîtres, inspirés de Fontfroide, et décorés dans le goût italien, sont plus beaux que ceux de la chartreuse castillane.

6° Dominicains et Franciscains.

C'est en Galice qu'il faut chercher les spécimens les plus complets de l'art spécial à ces grands ordres monastiques. San Francisco de Lugo a une nef couverte en charpentes, une croisée décorée d'une coupole octogone de style mudéjar, et trois absides polygonales voûtées en ogives. Ces mêmes caractères se retrouvent à San Francisco de Betanzos. Santo Tomas d'Avila possède une belle église de la fin du XVe siècle à nef unique, transept et chevet droit, toute voûtée en pierre. San Juan de los Reyes, construit par les rois catholiques pour les moines franciscains, est la richissime demeure de moines qui avaient fait vœu de pauvreté absolue. M. L. fait remarquer avec raison que cette église est comme un résumé de tous les styles qui influèrent sur l'art espagnol du XVe siècle. Le monument est gothique, par le plan et par maint détail, allemand par le style général des voûtes, mudéjar par la conception générale du décor. C'est de l'art tolédan et comme le dernier mot de la magnificence, donné par l'alliance harmonieuse de l'esthétique gothique et de l'esthétique arabe.

IV. — Architecture mudéjar.

Les chrétiens avaient tout d'abord autorisé les populations musulmanes à rester dans les pays reconquis. Ces Mores soumis portaient le nom de Mudéjares et vécurent jusqu'à la fin du XIIIe siècle en paix avec les vainqueurs. Puis on les obligea à vivre dans un quartier séparé dans les villes, dans des bourgs spéciaux à la campagne ; on leur interdit la propriété foncière, on les châtia cruellement quand ils se révoltèrent, Philippe II les convertit, Philippe III les expulsa. Mais jusqu'à la fin du XVIe siècle ils vécurent en Espagne, côte à côte avec les populations chrétiennes, gardant leurs coutumes et leur art particulier, l'art musulman du Maghreb, plus ou moins altéré par l'influence de l'art chrétien. C'est cet art gothico-arabe que l'on appelle l'art mudéjar ; il a élevé d'admirables châteaux, des palais pittoresques et splendides, et l'art religieux lui-même lui doit de délicats édifices, de charmants détails dont on ne retrouve les analogues qu'en Sicile, où fleurit aussi un art byzantin-arabe encore peu étudié.

Le style mudéjar a suivi tous les développements de l'art chrétien. Il y a un mudéjar plateresque de l'époque de la Renaissance.

Les maîtres d'œuvre mudéjars construisaient de préférence leurs murs en briques et en moëllons et les décoraient d'arcatures aveugles ou de lacis exécutés au ciseau.

La forme des arcs est très variée, la plus caractéristique est l'arc renflé et aigu emprunté à l'art almohade, mais on rencontre aussi dans les édifices mudéjars l'arc en plein cintre, l'arc en tiers-point, l'arc surbaissé, l'arc polylobé, décoré de reliefs en plâtre. Les arcs sont souvent accompagnés d'un cadre rectangulaire (arraba), qui achève de leur donner la physionomie orientale ; on en voit d'autre part qui se composent de plusieurs anneaux concentriques, ressouvenir évident de la technique romane ou gothique.

Les voûtes se faisaient en moitié de sphère, ou en forme de coupoles polygonales (ochavadas), ou ornées d'azulejos (alboayres), on trouve aussi des voûtes d'arêtes, des croisées d'ogives, des ogives étoilées, des ogives mahométanes à entrelacs. La voûte d'ogives musulmane ne croise pas ses branches sur une même clef, mais laisse un vide au centre de la voûte et multiplie tout autour du vide central les points d'attache des nervures. Le plus ancien exemple, la voûte du Mihrab de la mosquée de Cordoue, remonte au Xe siècle. La voûte d'ogives musulmane finit par se convertir en une simple coupole ornée d'entrelacs (adornos de laceria).

Les coupoles octogones ou circulaires reposent rarement sur pendentifs et portent le plus souvent sur des trompes d'un tracé extrêmement compliqué.

Les mudéjars semblent avoir préféré les toits en charpente aux voûtes de pierre. Une charpente mudéjare (alfarje) présente au milieu une partie plane (almizate) et deux versants sur les côtés (faldones). L'ensemble de l'ouvrage est consolidé par des tirants de bois ou de fer appuyés sur une cimaise. La ligne de jonction de l'almizate et des faldones porte le nom de lima mohamar, et constitue l'une des plus grandes difficultés que rencontraient les charpentiers mudéjars pour le tracé de leurs entrelacs. L'exécution d'une charpente se faisait suivant différents procédés. Parfois le tracé des entrelacs est formé par la charpente même et les lames du plafond sont clouées derrière, parfois c'est le plafond qui est exécuté le premier et les entrelacs sont cloués sur lui; ailleurs, les planches sont serties dans les pièces de charpente, ou encore les entrelacs sont dessinés en creux et les intervalles apparaissent en relief.

L'art mudéjar a employé aussi les voûtes à stalactites si à la mode dans l'architecture égyptienne [1].

La peinture, la dorure, l'application des faïences émaillées contribuent encore à faire de ces voûtes lambrissées d'admirables décors.

Les portes sont tracées en général sur le mode roman ogival : jambages et archivoltes en retrait ; l'ornementation est conçue dans le style arabe : dentelures, applications de faïence dans les écoinçons, cadres rectangulaires terminés à la partie supérieure par une frise ou des arcatures dentelées et une corniche. Les ventaux sont ornés d'entrelacs, d'inscriptions musulmanes ou chrétiennes, de ferrements et de gros clous ciselés.

Les fenêtres étroites, en forme de meurtrières, simples ou géminées, se terminent en arc polylobé.

Les églises sont pavées de carreaux de terre cuite ou émaillée, parfois exclusivement de briques émaillées.

Les toits sont souvent couverts de tuiles polychromes.

Les façades, peu nombreuses aujourd'hui, sont très simples, formées de murs nus, sans autres ornements que la porte et trois petites roses; à Tolède les pignons en échelons remplacent le gable à double égout des églises andalouses.

Les tours, carrées ou octogones, se reconnaissent à première vue à leurs capricieux dessins, tracés dans la maçonnerie même, par des ouvriers d'une incomparable habileté dans le maniement de la brique. Elles constituent l'un des éléments les plus originaux et les plus pittoresques de l'art mudéjar.

L'ornementation emploie l'entrelac, la stalactite, la fleur stylisée, les motifs héraldiques, et exceptionnellement la figure humaine. Elle est sculptée sur le bois et la pierre, la terre émaillée et surtout le plâtre, moulé ou ciselé.

1. M. L. expose d'une façon très claire la technique des pendentifs et des voûtes à stalactites (mocarabes) et montre comment avec 4 figures seulement on obtenait par juxtaposition 14 motifs différents, qui suffisaient à tous les besoins. On comparera avec intérêt les quelques mots si simples de l'archéologue espagnol avec la curieuse étude esthétique de M. Gayet sur les pendentifs à stalactites. L'art arabe. Paris 1893, pp. 136-163.

Les plans sont d'ordinaire peu compliqués, l'art mudéjar s'étant rarement appliqué à de grands édifices.

Les centres où il s'est le plus développé sont la Vieille Castille, l'Aragon, l'Andalousie et le royaume de Tolède.

A. — Vieille Castille.

Le monastère de Las Huelgas possède trois chapelles de style mudéjar, que les rigueurs de la règle monastique ont soustraites jusqu'ici aux recherches des archéologues, mais qui paraissent d'un réel intérêt, à en juger par les photographies prises par un artiste de Burgos, M. Gil, et reproduites par M. L.

La petite chapelle de la Mejorada à Olmedo (Valladolid) présente à l'intérieur une coupole hémisphérique ornée d'entrelacs et des sarcophages de style gothique exécutés en plâtre par des artistes mudéjars.

B. — Aragon.

Les mudéjares ont conservé longtemps en Aragon leurs privilèges et leurs libertés, et c'est en ce pays qu'il faut chercher aujourd'hui les types les plus complets de leur art. Les églises aragonaises de style mudéjar sont, en réalité, des églises gothiques catalanes revêtues d'un habit musulman.

La cathédrale de Teruel, commencée vers 1250 et terminée seulement en 1685, a été déguisée au XVIIe siècle avec le même goût barbare qui présida au XVIIIe à la restauration de la cathédrale de Valence. Il lui reste de son ancienne splendeur sa belle tour de briques, sa lanterne octogone, analogue à celle de la Seo de Saragosse et sa voûte lambrissée ornée d'entrelacs et de peintures, chef-d'œuvre de l'art mudéjar du XVe siècle, aujourd'hui cachée aux yeux du visiteur par la voûte d'ogives construite à la fin du XVIIe siècle.

C. — Andalousie.

Les églises mudéjares andalouses reproduisent le type de la basilique mozarabe : une ou trois nefs, sans transept, une ou trois absides, voûtes lambrissées décorées d'entrelacs. Santa Marina de Séville, San Miguel de Cordoue, Santiago de Guadix en offrent des spécimens ; la perle de l'architecture mudéjare andalouse est le monastère de Guadalupe (Badajoz), conçu par un moine et exécuté par des mains mahométanes qui ont dû respecter dans l'église la physionomie de l'art gothique, mais ont donné au cloître l'aspect d'une cour de mosquée.

D. — Tolède et la région tolédane.

« Le mudéjar tolédan est comme une synthèse de tous les autres groupes ; c'est une adaptation du type roman de la Vieille Castille, mais plus mélangé d'arabe et plus apparenté avec les écoles andalouses, sans arriver aux fantaisies orientales du style aragonais. » M. L. cite à l'appui de cette opinion de nombreuses églises de Tolède : San Roman, Santa Ursula y San Justo, Santa Isabel, Santiago del Arrabal. Dans la région tolédane, le chevet de l'église d'Illescas, la chapelle de l'Université d'Alcalá de Henares, la chapelle del Oidor à l'église Sainte-Marie de la même ville comptent parmi les plus beaux exemples du décor mudéjar.

Ce style ne paraît pas se prêter à de très grands édifices, mais donne, dans le détail, d'excellents effets.

V. — La Renaissance.

Cette époque a marqué dans l'histoire de l'art européen une révolution violente au milieu de l'évolution qu'il suivait depuis cinq siècles.

L'Espagne a été touchée plus tard que les autres pays de l'Europe occidentale par le nouveau courant esthétique, et son conservatisme naturel l'a rendue pendant plus longtemps réfractaire aux idées importées de l'étranger.

On a donné le nom de plateresque au style galant et magnifique de la Renaissance espagnole, qui procède peut-être de la science incomplète des maîtres, encore incapables de choisir entre les traditions gothiques et les exigences classiques, mais qui les révèle merveilleusement aptes à concevoir et à exécuter les plus luxuriantes et brillantes décorations.

Le plan général des églises reste le plan gothique, mais l'ornementation est empruntée aux écoles classiques et plus on avance dans le XVIe siècle, plus l'élément gothique s'atténue et plus s'accuse l'élément antique.

Les grandes cathédrales de Grenade, de Malaga et de Jaén présentent déjà l'ordre corinthien colossal, qui va régner presque sans partage pendant trois siècles.

La cathédrale de Grenade, tracée sur le plan de celle de Tolède, pour être exécutée en style gothique, fut continuée en style gréco-romain par Diego de Siloe et ses successeurs. Sa construction dura de 1523 à 1703. Elle unit les ordres antiques, aux voûtes d'ogives étoilées du gothique espagnol et présente malgré les dissonances de son architecture un aspect original et majestueux.

La cathédrale de Malaga est, comme la précédente, de plan gothique et de structure gréco-romaine, c'est une simplification du modèle grenadin.

La cathédrale de Jaén procède des mêmes types, mais l'architecte a adopté le chevet rectangulaire de Séville, et son église y perd de son caractère religieux.

La cathédrale de Guadix, commencée à l'époque de la Renaissance, n'est terminée qu'au XVIIIe siècle, et va du plateresque au baroque.

L'influence d'un homme arrête tout à coup la floraison fantaisiste. Juan de Herrera, architecte de Philippe II, oppose aux caprices des ornemanistes la sévérité absolue de l'art le plus rigide et le plus sec que l'on ait jamais vu. L'Escorial et la cathédrale de Valladolid sont les discutables chefs-d'œuvre de ce genre odieux.

Avec le XVIIe siècle recommencent les fantaisies. Elles s'annoncent déjà dans l'église madrilène de Saint-Isidore; elles s'affirment dans la « savonneuse » chapelle de Saint-Isidore à San Andrés de Madrid, elles trouvent un propagateur infatigable en D. José Churriguera. Cet artiste, si décrié par les classiques, et que M. L. nous donne avec vérité comme un grand architecte, revint en somme aux traditions nationales, le churrigueresque n'est qu'un plateresque exagéré.

Les plans restent pendant cette période ce qu'ils sont depuis les débuts de la Renaissance. La Merced de Barcelone est une église à trois nefs, de plan gothique. San Cayetano de Madrid rappelle l'église de l'Escurial, San Ignacio de Azpeitia est une imitation des églises circulaires du moyen-âge — bien plutôt que du Panthéon d'Agrippa. — Le Pilar de Saragosse reprend le plan de la cathédrale neuve de Salamanque.

L'ornementation d'abord assez sage, s'exagère, se complique, se tortille et arrive à la pure démence, comme au « transparent de Tolède » qu'un de nos amis comparait à un feu d'artifice en marbre et en bronze.

Avec le XVIIe siècle, reparaît l'influence italienne qui remet un peu d'ordre dans le chaos, et l'influence française qui, en place de notre fin et gracieux Louis XV, aboutit en Espagne au style « cornucopia », au chantourné extravagant [1]. Mais, en dépit de tous les reproches que l'on peut adresser aux fantaisies churrigueresques, mieux vaut cent fois l'excès d'imagination et de fécondité de ces inépuisables inventeurs que la correction glacée de leurs devanciers et le pédantisme de leurs successeurs. Les pages que M. L. consacre à l'étude du style néo-plateresque comptent, à notre avis, parmi les plus neuves et les plus intéressantes de son livre.

Comme le XVIe siècle, le XVIIe fut marqué par une réaction classique contre la licence du néo-plateresque. La création de l'Académie de San Fernando (1744-1752), la venue en Espagne d'architectes français et italiens firent pénétrer à Madrid le goût tout nouveau pour la sobriété des lignes. L'église des Salesas reales du français Carlier (1750-57) fut comme le manifeste de la nouvelle école. Elle trouva son principal représentant en la personne de D. Ventura Rodriguez, le moins férocement classique de son temps et le plus intéressant, dont quelques œuvres, la sainte chapelle du Pilar à Saragosse, la façade de la cathédrale de Pampelune, le grand retable de Saint-Isidore de Madrid, les plans pour la construction de la basilique de Covadonga, sont à la fois sagement ordonnées, bien équilibrées et d'une décoration riche et ingénieuse.

Par un effet très remarquable de traditionalisme artistique, la cathédrale de Cadix, commencée en 1720 et terminée en 1838, est encore bâtie sur plan gothique, exécutée dans le goût néo-classique, et doit à son plan archaïque des beautés que n'ont point les cathédrales plus académiques de Vich et de Lérida. Au moment même où s'achevait le dernier monument qui rappelât encore la tradition oubliée, le gothique reprenait faveur en Europe et n'allait pas tarder à retrouver dans l'Espagne contemporaine une glorieuse renaissance, dont nous regrettons que M. L. n'ait point voulu parler.

1. Un artiste, l'excellent statuaire Leveel, nous disait un jour : « Le rococo français est délicat et délicieux, le rococo allemand est lourd et ennuyeux, l'italien est fou et l'espagnol... épileptique. »

Conclusion.

Si nous cherchons à résumer l'impression d'ensemble que nous laisse la lecture de cet immense et excellent ouvrage, nous exprimerons tout d'abord le regret que M. L. n'ait pas adopté le plan chronologique au lieu du plan géographique qu'il a choisi ; on eût mieux saisi l'évolution générale de l'art gothique espagnol, depuis le moment où il commence à se dégager péniblement du roman, jusqu'au jour où l'achèvement de la cathédrale de Cadix semble clore son histoire, qui recommence le lendemain.

M. L. a étudié son sujet avec la science la plus sûre et la patience la plus admirable ; il s'est montré d'une sincérité et d'une impartialité qui lui font le plus grand honneur ; il est très rare que ses jugements ne semblent pas dictés par la raison même, nous lui reprocherions seulement d'avoir accepté trop aisément la classification banale de l'art gothique en style primitif, fleuri et gothique de la décadence. Il n'y a pas de décadence gothique. Il y a une transformation, un développement, un progrès continu et indéfini de cet art si souple et si sociable, qui savait s'approprier tout ce qu'il trouvait devant lui, et qui a failli digérer le classicisme lui-même, après avoir fait bon ménage avec l'art roman et avec l'art arabe. L'art classique, c'est l'art géométrique de l'équilibre statique et inerte : une architrave sur deux colonnes, un arc sur deux culées épaisses, une voûte en berceau entre deux gros murs. L'art gothique c'est l'art spiritualisé, l'art du calcul, l'art de l'équilibre vivant et dynamique : les piliers robustes, mais amincis pour les yeux par la lumière qui joue sur les angles et sur les colonnettes, s'exfolient comme des palmiers et portent les branches d'ogives à des hauteurs vertigineuses ; l'ogive s'adapte à tous les plans, couvre les carrés, les rectangles, les hexagones, les octogones, les polygones de tout tracé et de toute figure ; l'ogive se surhausse et se surbaisse au gré du constructeur, se simplifie ou se complique à son commandement. La porte et la fenêtre sont le triomphe de l'art gothique et le désespoir du style classique. Qui oserait comparer une fenêtre classique — fût-elle à tabernacle ! — avec une rose de cathédrale ? L'arc-boutant a ses adversaires, on l'a appelé un étai, pourquoi n'appellerait-on pas un poteau l'inutile colonne du temple gréco-romain ? Mais l'arc-boutant n'est pas même indispensable ; toute une école gothique s'en passe — comme toute une école classique se passe de la colonne. La décadence du gothique n'est qu'une conception surannée et fausse, et nous sommes sûrs que M. L. est, au fond, de notre avis.

Venu de France en Espagne, l'art gothique s'y présente sous deux formes bien distinctes : l'art aristocratique des cathédrales et l'art monastique des abbayes cisterciennes. Au premier appartiennent presque entièrement les trois grandes cathédrales espagnoles de Burgos, León et Tolède, au second la cathédrale de Tarragone, les superbes abbatiales de Poblet, de Santas Creus, de Las Huelgas. Sur ces modèles va travailler l'art indigène, mais deux influences vont se disputer les maîtres d'œuvre espagnols : dans les domaines castillans, c'est le gothique de la langue d'oil qui inspirera les architectes ; en Catalogne, dans le royaume de Valence, aux Baléares, c'est le gothique assagi du Languedoc qui répondra le mieux au tempérament régional.

Chose étrange et mal expliquée, la Castille si éprise d'impossible, ne cherchera pas à surpasser en hardiesse ses modèles français. León, l'église de dentelle, ne fera pas école, nulle église espagnole ne possédera les portails splendides de Bourges, de Chartres, de Reims, d'Amiens ou de Paris ; nulle n'aura les immenses fenestrages du Mans, de Tours ou de Beauvais ; l'arc-boutant n'inspirera qu'une demi-confiance, restera lourd, timide ou mal appliqué et l'architecte castillan, en quête de grandeur, la demandera à la largeur des nefs plutôt qu'à leur élévation ; ses plus majestueuses églises ressembleront à un édifice de petite dimension démesurément agrandi, plutôt qu'à une construction élevée de parti pris sur une échelle colossale. Le chef-d'œuvre de l'école castillane est la cathédrale de Séville dont l'immense nef, plus longue d'un tiers que celle de Notre-Dame, ne comprend que huit travées. Sans portails comparables aux nôtres, sans clochers, sans transept réel, sans lanterne véritable, sans abside, sans déambulatoire, sans chapelles rayonnantes, la basilique sévillane étonne et déconcerte les yeux d'un Français ; nous connaissons de nos compatriotes qui vont jusqu'à nier sa beauté. Ils ont tort ; c'est un autre art que le nôtre, c'est un art très grand. Séville n'a rien de ce qui nous charme dans nos chères cathédrales de France :

Mais Séville a la Giralda !

Séville a son cloître, sa porte du Pardon, sa chapelle du Sagrario, sa bibliothèque Colombine, ses sacristies, ses chapelles aristocratiques, ses tableaux, ses orfèvreries.

Plus à notre gré encore, plus belle, parce que plus simple, plus claire, plus dorée et d'un art plus exquis, la cathédrale neuve de Salamanque serait à notre avis le modèle le plus complet et le plus parfait du gothique entendu à l'espagnole. Quel plaisir de contempler cette immense cathédrale couleur d'orange, de retrouver au grand portail, transposées dans la note plateresque, toutes les fantaisies de nos plus belles façades, d'errer des heures par les larges nefs, de contempler les voûtes aux ogives étoilées, fleuries d'arandelas ! Combien ce serait plus beau encore si l'on supprimait la clôture du chœur, si l'immense salon planté de colonnes s'ouvrait au regard libre et vide du portail jusqu'au chevet !

A côté de ces édifices gigantesques, il faut faire une part aux églises-joyaux comme Miraflores, San Juan de los Reyes, San Esteban de Salamanque, San Juan surtout, la perle de l'écrin, le chef-d'œuvre de la magnificence et de la fantaisie.

Plus sec, plus borné, l'art catalan satisfait davantage les esprits raisonnables. Ses œuvres maîtresses sont pour nous la cathédrale de Barcelone et Sainte-Marie- de-la-Mer. Le cloître de Barcelone est l'un des plus beaux décors de l'Espagne. Tout incomplet qu'il soit, dépourvu de ses remplages, de ses corniches, de ses balustrades, de ses pinacles ; mal tenu, mal en point, trop peuplé de miséreux, troublé par les galopades des polissons et les cris des oies, il n'en est pas moins un atrium magnifique et un admirable musée d'art. Trop sombre, et encore trop basse pour la hauteur de ses basses nefs, la basilique barcelone plaît cependant par la simplicité de son plan, la noblesse des lignes, la somptuosité du chœur et du sanctuaire, le mystère des chapelles et de la crypte de Sainte Eulalie. Si l'on doublait seulement la hauteur de la nef principale, la cathédrale de Barcelone serait de toute beauté.

Moins bien équilibrée, avec des proportions plus manquées encore, mais d'une saisissante étrangeté, Sainte-Marie-de-la-Mer nous choque et nous attire tout à la fois ; nous ne pouvons nous lasser de la voir, de la parcourir, de l'étudier : petites chapelles étroites et hautes, bas-côtés d'une élévation extraordinaire, arcades gigantesques, piliers pressés de l'abside, claire-voie insignifiante, mauvaise distribution des pleins et des vides, maigreur ici, lourdeur là ; que de défauts... et malgré tout on reste saisi. Quel art singulier, quelle impression de nouveauté, de jamais vu !

Enfin, il n'est pas jusqu'à l'art classique imprégné de gothicisme qui n'offre encore quelque attrait. Les grandes cathédrales de Grenade et de Malaga, la première surtout, font regretter le style ancien, mais plaisent néanmoins par tout ce qu'elles en ont gardé. Quand le Pilar sera débarrassé de ses tuiles polychromes, quand ses quatre minarets se réfléchiront dans l'Ebre, il aura une silhouette pittoresque et grandiose, et ses nefs corinthiennes abritent le grand autel d'albâtre ciselé de Forment et la sainte chapelle de Ventura Rodriguez.

Oserons-nous avouer notre faiblesse pour les grands autels dorés de l'époque churrigueresque ? Ce sont assurément des décors peu raisonnables, mais il nous souvient d'un tableau de Rogier Van der Weyden, conservé à l'hospice de Beaune, où un ange introduit un pauvre moine dans une ville tout en or ; c'est de cette naïve idée que procèdent les grands retables dorés d'Espagne. L'or est pour les simples le dernier terme de la splendeur, et les décorateurs qui travaillaient pour l'Église travaillaient aussi pour les simples ; ils ont imaginé pour eux des colonnades, des portiques, des balcons d'or, des fleurs, des guirlandes, des arbres d'or, des saints, des vierges, des anges d'or, et si notre goût sévère s'offense de ces redondances, l'esprit souvent s'en amuse et s'y complaît. Nous partageons toutes les indulgences de M. L. pour cette rhétorique « espaÑolísima ».
